Blaming the media would be easy, but the media aren't to blame. People are. Why? Because they are fascinated with morons. As written in the previously Atlanta Journal-Constitution article, Robert Thompson of Syracuse University believes, "Americans have a general affection for dumbness, like the Hawaiian Punch guy who keeps getting punched in the face."

The insightful wit of Samuel Clemens, Alan Alda and Jerry Seinfeld has been replaced by cheap jokes about Ben Stiller's bodily functions. Cultural critics refer to this as the "George W. Bushing" of America, leading to a whole array of comics and humorists who think the term ironic refers to something completely made of iron.

Unfortunately, we have to do something about this problem.

My original plan was just to wait for Neil Postman to write a book on the subject – and if you don't get that joke, you are part of the problem. But, considering that he died last year, a new book seems unlikely, so I'll have to handle things.

First, we need to support the still intelligent sources of humor that are out there.

The Fox Network has this year's Emmy winner for the best comedy: "Arrested Development," a show with inspiringly clever humor and depressingly low ratings.

Also, try watching or reading anything by Jon Stewart. This guy is so funny, he made "Crossfire" interesting.

Finally, remember we live in a consumer-driven, capitalist culture, which means the solution is ultimately in each of our hands.

The sooner we stop consuming meaningless humor the better. Playwright George Bernard Shaw set the standard for what comedy should be about when he wrote, "Get your audience laughing and when their mouths are open slip the truth in."

To the stupid blue car parked on Platt, you took my spot. Just because you can't park doesn't mean you can take two spots.

I am the one, true Batman.

Wow, it's really bad when it's two o'clock in the morning and my roommate and I have nothing better to do than listen to my neighbors upstairs screw.

Hey guys, why not do a campus-wide poll of what people actually think about gay marriage, so people will stop quoting your rigged one.

So when this random guy instant messaged me last night and didn't hit on me, I set him up with my cute, single sister. Let this be a lesson to you.

In the last seven years, the defense department has discharged 20 service personnel who spoke Arabic solely because they were gay. Apparently catering to homophobia is more important than fighting terrorism.

Why are we taking advice from a fifth-year senior? Obviously he doesn't know what he is talking about if it took him five years to graduate.

Adam Akin is the one who needs good advice if it takes him five years to graduate from the school of business.

Ebony Theatre remembers King with performance of slave narratives

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Their costumes are all black and the set follows the same simple style.

That's because they want their audience to focus on their words, not costumes and stage design.

Six actors from Ebony Theatre Company will be presenting "In Their Own Words," an hour-long production of slave narratives, for the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week dinner theater sponsored by K-State's Ebony Theatre and Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development.

"The reason why we chose to do slave narratives is not to rebuild segregation, but to emphasize that it's a progressive thing," said Candace Feldman, junior in theater and director of the performance.

"The more you remember about things, the more you work toward something."

Feldman said the production will include three men and three women reading a number of different narratives found at Hale Library and on the Internet. Overall, the group looked at more than 2,100 passages from various slaves before making their final decisions for the performance.

All of the actors will be reading the passages in the slaves' own words, hence the title of the production comes, Feldman said.

The passages will cover a variety of issues, focusing on the treatment of slaves.

Nathan Jackson, K-State alumnus and actor in the performance, said Ebony Theatre members wanted to do something with Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week for a long time, but in past years, students have been out of town.

This year, however, the group jumped at the opportunity to perform – especially when he and Feldman decided to perform slave readings, Jackson said.

"I read some when I was in an African American class, and since then, I've been really drawn to them," Jackson said.

"A lot of people already know about slavery, but it's a different thing to hear it from the mouths of people who actually experienced it.

"These women and men for a long time didn't even want to speak about it, so when they got the opportunity, they wrote. It's really passionate and really honest."

Fellow actor and Ebony Theatre member Tim Taylor said he agreed.

"A lot of people, including myself, say slavery is bad, but you really don't know what happened," Taylor, junior in theater, said.

"These are real people with real words. You think you know, but you really don't."

Taylor said he has about seven different roles in the production, but overall it's not about the characters, it's about their words.

So far, Feldman said, about 150 reservations have been made, with the majority consisting of K-State administration and faculty – an audience, she said, that she hopes will see the overall message.

"It's to show victory and uniting and going forward and moving toward a common goal," Feldman said.

"It's about a common race that makes us not individuals, but a group working cooperatively together."

A brief history of Ebony Theatre Company

- Ebony Theatre was started in 1976 by minority actors who couldn't get roles in main stage productions because of social issues. The group came up with their own theater that performs productions written by African American playwrights.
- Ebony Theatre sponsors a number of programs throughout the year, including poetry slams, slave narratives and a main stage performance in February to celebrate Black History Month.

Oral sex poses STD risks; protection needed

LACEY STORER

A few weeks ago, my friend Lindsay had an unexpected visitor.

Knocking at her door was a guy she had met at the bars and gone home with the night before. She was surprised to see him, since they hadn't even exchanged phone numbers, but she was even more surprised by what he had come to ask her.

The guy had stopped by to ask Lindsay if she had anything – sexually transmitted disease-wise.

Apparently his mouth was feeling a bit sore and he thought he'd seen some bumps under his tongue. He wondered if maybe besides giving him a good time, perhaps Lindsay had given him something else.

Luckily, Lindsay had been tested a month or so before and was clean, but she was still a bit shaken. Even though Lindsay hadn't slept with the guy, the threat of a sexually transmitted disease had still been present.

A lot of people think that if they refrain from sleeping with someone and do "everything but," then they'll be safe from catching any nasty diseases.

But the truth is doing "everything but" can be anything but safe.

Since most people don't consider oral sex to be actual sex, they don't usually think of the risks involved.

Chlamydia, gonorrhea, herpes – these are all things you can get when you're getting some. Having unprotected oral sex is just as dangerous as having unprotected intercourse – minus the pregnancy issue, of course.

Unfortunately, most people don't think about protecting themselves if they're not having sex. Whether they think an STD is something that won't happen to them or it's something they just don't think about, not many people are worrying about oral sex and STDs.

In a recent survey conducted by the American Social Health Association, a whopping 91 percent of young Americans admitted to not using protection during oral sex.

Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene Health Center, said the only way to ensure that you don't get something while you're giving something is to use protection.

When girls are receiving oral sex, they should wear a dental dam, a rectangular piece of latex that is placed over the vaginal opening and clitoris.

Dental dams aren't as common as condoms, but they can be found at some drug stores. You can also make a do-it-yourself dental dam out of a condom.

But if you're not sure about how clean the person you're getting busy with is, this is one way to guarantee that you will stay STD-free, besides abstaining from oral sex altogether.

Wildcats extend home winning streak to 21

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was not the typical K-State start to a conference game at Bramlage Coliseum, but it was the same result for the 21st straight time Wednesday night.

After a sloppy first half, K-State was 18-of-20 from the field in the first 17:30 minutes of the second half on its way to a 74-50 win over Texas A&M.

The win moves K-State's home winning streak to 21 games in Big 12 Conference play.

K-State (13-3, 4-1), which has led by an average of 21.5 points at halftime in its previous two home conference games, was ahead of Texas A&M (11-4, 2-3) by just four points at the half, but outscored the Aggies 47-27 in the second half.

The Wildcats' 27 first-half points were their lowest since they scored 26 against Kansas on Jan. 8. K-State shot 33 percent from the field and did not have any fast-break points against the Aggies in the first half.

K-State started the second half on a 12-1 run, out-rebounded the Aggies 16-7 in the half and scored 24 of the their second-half points in the paint.

Head coach Deb Patterson said K-State's effort after halftime was a significant improvement over the first half.

"When we take the floor and play at the intensity level the Big 12 requires, good things come real quick," Patterson said.

Four Wildcats finished in double-figures in points, led by freshman Shana Wheeler – with a career-high 11 points – and sophomore Claire Coggins, who also scored 11.

"We were far better in the second half then we were in the first half," senior Kendra Wecker said. "We executed really well. Megan (Mahoney) was all over the place on the boards in the first half and when we distribute the ball like we did in the second half, really good things are going to happen for us."

Dodging competitively

New club sport gains popularity, competes at national level

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This isn't your typical six-on-six dodgeball tournament, and it's not broadcast on ESPN "The Ocho."

Instead, this is a basketball court filled with more than 40 people split into two teams, with an arsenal of twenty dodgeballs.

The balls are placed at mid-court, and off they go, hurling the rubber dogdeballs at each other until the last person is out.

Many of the people who joined the Dodgeball Club were inspired by the recent film "Dogdeball" and decided to go.

"The movie inspired me to want to play dodgeball," Kenneth Barber, freshman in broadcast journalism, said. "The movie was just amazing."

Currently, the cost to play with the Dodgeball Club is $5, and the fee gives you as much dodgeball as you can take until the end of the semester.

Barber said the best part was being able to throw balls at his friends.

"I will gladly pay the $5 to be able to throw balls at people every week," Barber said.

The Dodgeball Club is one of the newer clubs on campus, as it started in fall 2004. It has also been growing in popularity since it began.

"We had our first informational meeting in the fall," said Nick Caton, a senior in architectural engineering and a founding member of the Dodgeball Club. "We got a small room in the Union, and we ended up having more than 100 people show up.

"I started freaking out."

Caton said the idea for the club all started as just a thought.

"It just started one day," Caton said. "We wanted to start a club and someone just threw the idea out."

Although the initial turnout was great and the club continues to grow, Caton said there have been some problems along the way.

"One of our current problems is that we are trying to get the girls to stay," Caton said.

"We want the club to be as co-ed as possible."

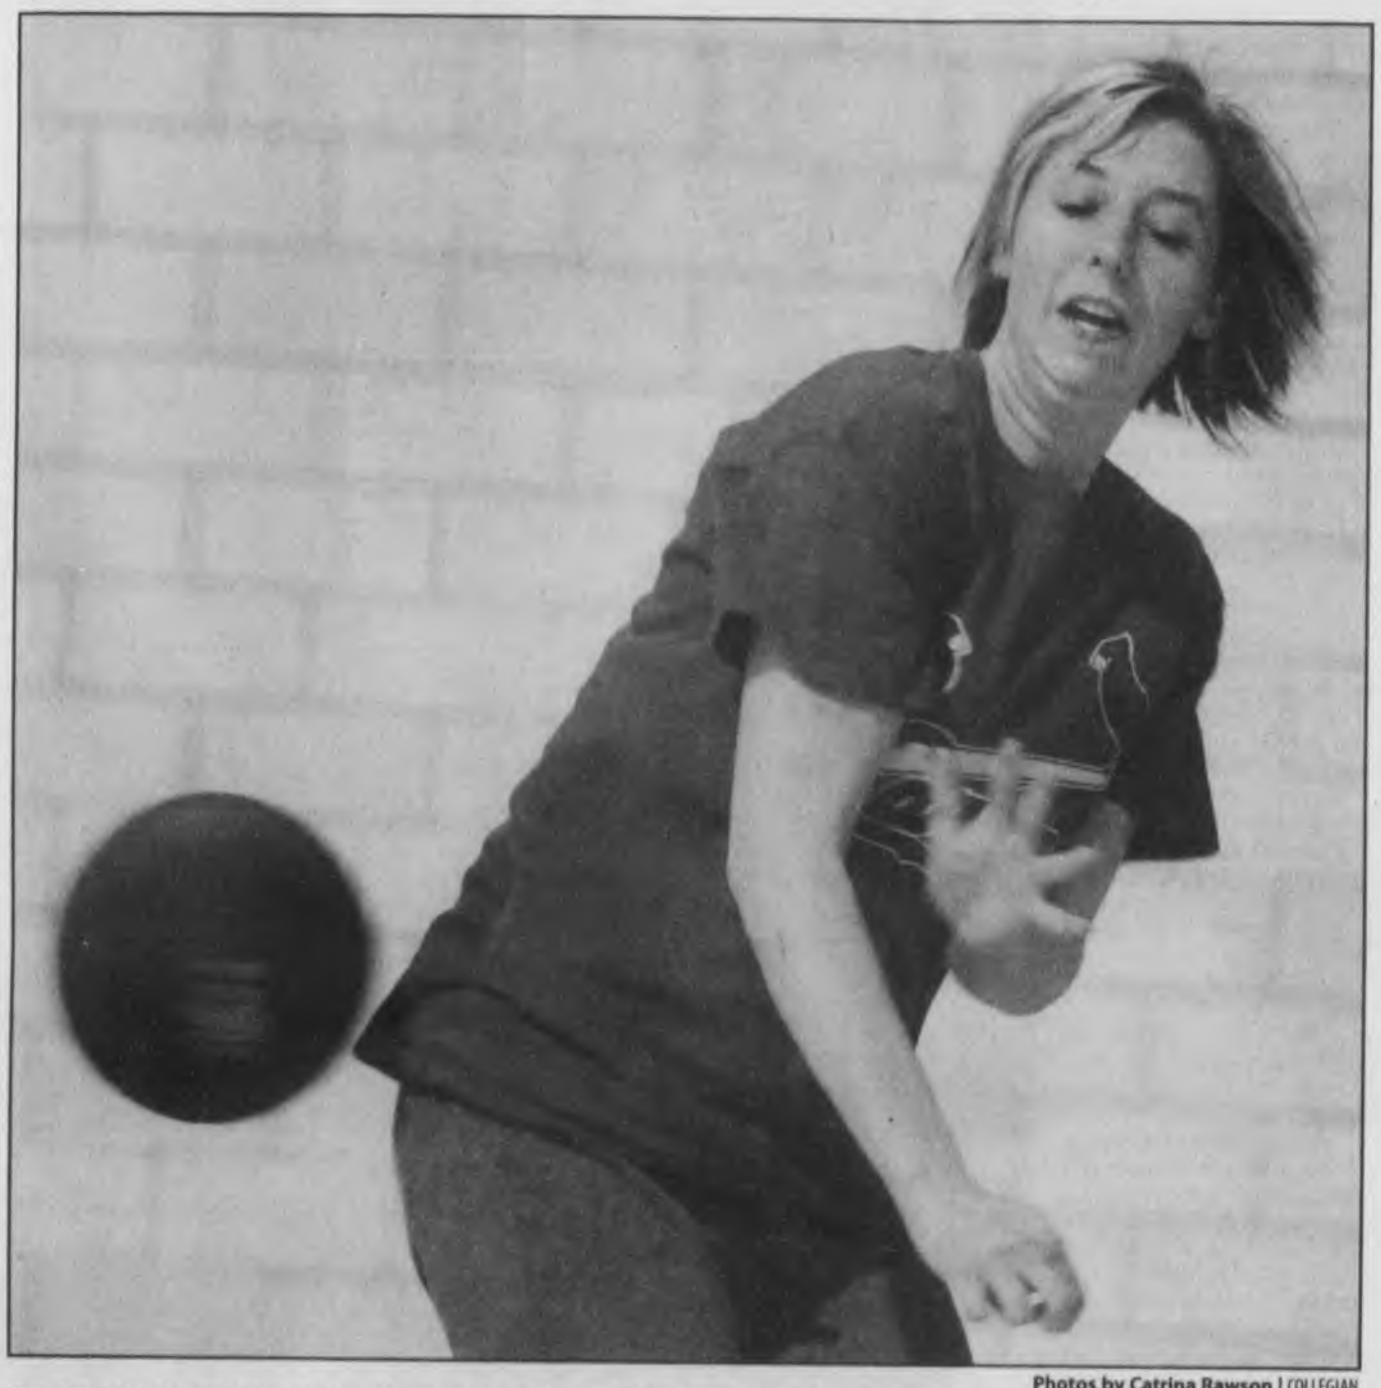
Caton said the[y] had a couples dancing class schedul[ed] beside them in the gymnasium.



"I felt so sorry because they would be doing some pirouette and get hit in the head with a dodgeball," Caton said.

So was the recent Hollywood movie what started it all?

Peter Morris, president of the club and a senior in microbiology, said it wasn't.

"Everybody thinks that the movie was what started all this," Morris said. "It was a small scene in the movie "Rushmore" that started it."

NATHAN RYERSON

K-State has a long-standing sports tradition, but you don't have to be on an intercollegiate team to be involved – one of my biggest regrets is not joining a club sports team.

It would be a lot of fun.

Unlike intramural teams, club teams compete with other schools across the country, and K-State offers a variety of different sports clubs to choose from.

For the guys out there who are jealous of the K-State women's volleyball team, go out and join the Men's Volleyball Club.

The Rodeo Club is a great club to have here at K-State, since this is an agricultural campus.

I wonder if they have clowns in those barrels.

If water is your thing, you can go out and join the K-State Water Ski team or maybe join Men's Crew.

Recently, I have had a recurring dream of me falling. Just falling, nothing else. In order to find out what the dream is all about, maybe I should join the Parachute Club and see what happens.

For those of you who have started to idolize Patches O'Houlihan from the movie "Dodgeball," go out and join the K-State dodgeball club, and learn about the five D's of dodgeball: dodge, dip, duck, dive and dodge.

Many students at K-State have played table tennis. If you have, and you found the experience life-changing, then maybe you should join the Table Tennis Club.

A group of my friends and I have played Ultimate Frisbee since our freshman year, and most of us have talked about becoming a member of the Flying Dorothys – K-State's Ultimate Frisbee team.

Whichever club seems interesting to you, just know that K-State offers about 28 different sports clubs.

I have just listed eight.

If you want to be involved, go out, get the information and meet new people.

As for me, I regret not being involved during my stay here at K-State.

I have loved all four years I have spent on campus, but I wish I were a member of something else besides the Society of Professional Journalists.

I wish I were involved with something cool like the Paintball Club.

Club sports are a great alternative to intercollegiate sports, but they don't receive the same recognition.

My goal as a sports writer this semester is to make the student body aware of these club teams and what they are all about.

If you know more about the teams, it might make you more willing to become involved.

NFL | Robbins charged with attempted murder

MIAMI — Former Oakland Raiders Center Barret Robbins was charged Wednesday with three counts of attempted felony murder, less than a week after being shot during a struggle with a detective investigating a burglary call.

Robbins

Robbins, a former Pro Bowler, was wounded Saturday night after Miami Beach police found him inside an administrative office at a building housing a nightclub, gym and jewelry store.

NFL | Jets' Hackett resigns under rising pressure

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — New York Jets offensive coordinator Paul Hackett resigned Wednesday, ending a four-year stint marred by criticism for his conservative play-calling.

Hackett

Paul Hackett oversaw an offense that was ranked 17th in the league in scoring.

The move was expected after the Jets' 20-17 overtime loss to Pittsburgh in the second round of the playoffs Saturday.

CFB | Colorado eases player-recruit restriction

BOULDER, Colo. — The University of Colorado has relaxed some recruiting restrictions imposed last year amid a sex-and-alcohol scandal and is allowing prospective football players to spend more time meeting with current team members.

The university banned the use of "player-hosts" to show recruits around campus and required closer supervision by coaches after an independent commission found that some players had arranged sex, drugs and alcohol for recruits.

Provost Phil DiStefano said Tuesday the university is now allowing recruits to spend more time one-on-one with current players "without coaches sitting there."

Recruiting visits are still limited to one night and curfew remains 11 p.m., DiStefano said. Coaches, not players, are still responsible for the recruits during their stay, he said.

MLB | MLB.com buys right to fantasy video game

The Major League Baseball Players Association awarded exclusive rights to the league's fantasy games to Major League Baseball Advanced Media, the league-owned arm that controls MLB.com, for the next five years.

The deal, valued by the league at more than $50 million, would not result in MLB.com being the sole holder of fantasy rights in the future, said Bob Bowman, chief executive of MLB Advanced Media. The organization, he said, will sublicense the league marks and players names to other organizations, as the MLBPA has done in the past.

Bowman said it was too early to tell if fantasy fees for games on MLB.com will increase as a result of the deal.

NHL | Linden, Hotchkiss meet at O'Hare Airport

NEW YORK — The players' association president and a part owner of the Calgary Flames could determine the fate of the NHL season.

Linden

Vancouver Canucks forward Trevor Linden met with NHL board of governors chairman Harley Hotchkiss on Wednesday at a lounge inside Chicago's O'Hare Airport.

Linden and Hotchkiss, a part owner of the Flames, headed three-man teams from each side with hopes of finding a solution to the labor dispute that threatens the NHL season.

Linden set up the meeting to jump-start talks toward ending the 4-month-old lockout. Neither NHL commissioner Gary Bettman nor union-head Bob Goodenow attended the talks.

FUNDRAISER | K-State organizations collect money, raise awareness for tsunami victims

Robert Peters, freshman in political science, pins the ribbon he bought at the South Asian Student Organization's tsunami support fundraising table set up in the K-State Student Union. The group will be selling ribbons from noon - 2 p.m. until Friday in the Union.

about the tragedy," she said.

"I decided to contact the Red Cross and found out that they didn't have a local Manhattan fundraiser, going but were accepting individual donations."

The cheerleaders decided to set up a table in the Union to encourage more student involvement.

"All the money raised will be turned over to the Manhattan Red Cross, who then sends it to the headquarters in Washington, D.C.

Jones said there is no monetary goal set for the fundraiser, as the real goal is to raise awareness and give students the opportunity to make a difference.

"What is great about this is even $5 or $10 helps because all of the money is going to the disaster area," she said.

"Sometimes, especially students feel as though there is nothing they can do, but every little bit is important."

According to the Red Cross Web site, www.redcross.org, $5 can buy mosquito nets for the survivors and workers to lower their risk of contracting malaria from mosquitoes.

The risk is high due to the large population of mosquitoes present from the excessive standing water.

The bulk of funds raised will go to Emergency and Food Supplement aid. The amount of money for that section is estimated at more than $55 million.

Malnutrition was already a widespread problem in the area due to poverty and has now only been exacerbated by the tsunami.

Other areas of need include water and sanitation, vaccination and health, immediate family supplies, psychosocial assistance, emergency response staffing and deployment.

Locally, Manhattan residents have given more than $30,000 in relief either directly to the Manhattan Red Cross office or by online donations.

According to the Web site, the Red Cross has pledged nearly $211 million nationally as of Jan. 19.

Lantz estimated the Red Cross will pledge a total of $400 million when the fundraising is complete.

DODGEBALL
Club competes

Morris said he thinks "Dodgeball" is an awesome movie, but it isn't what inspired him to start the Dodgeball Club.

While the club was started for fun, it sometimes is taken quite seriously. The club is currently a part of the Amateur Dodgeball Association.

"We start out playing for fun," Morris said. "In the end, we get pretty competitive, though. We also play intercollegiately."

Morris said he hopes the club continues to grow and becomes more diverse.

"It is already a real diverse group," Morris said.

"We just want more girls to come out and have fun with us as well."

terminated before it is scheduled to end if both the city and the school board agree it should be.

Also at Wednesday's meeting, the USD 383 Diversity Commission gave board members their report on a plan for improving diversity and what they called "multicultural competency" within the district.

The commission has been meeting for almost three years to come up with a plan for improving the situation in the district, members said. Superintendent Sharol Little said the commission was created three years ago following a parent raising concern after an African-American administrator as well as two African-American teachers retired. The timing also coincided with the departure of an African-American woman on the board of education.

The board passed a motion 6-0 to agree in principle to work with diversity added to future agenda.

Board Vice President Dave Colburn presided over the meeting. President Walt Pesaresi was in Kansas City, where his daughter was scheduled to give birth to his first grandchild.

Bush gets mixed review

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WASHINGTON, D.C. – At the first post-September 11 inauguration, security was tight as President George W. Bush took his second oath of office for the White House.

Thursday afternoon, Bush stood on the steps of the Capitol in Washington, D.C. and extended his term as the 43rd president.

An ailing Chief Justice William Rehnquist swore Bush in as an estimated 500,000 people squeezed through the security checks.

With his address to the nation, President Bush emphasized on security and diplomacy.

"My most solemn duty is to protect this nation from further attacks and emerging threats."

The president said the nation has played a huge international role in the past and that it must continue this role for the future.

Thousands attend ceremony

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Despite the cold and the snow lingering on the ground, hundreds of thousands of people turned out to witness President George W. Bush's second inauguration. Some held tickets for seats on the Capitol grounds, others stood outside the gates and still others watched from the roofs of surrounding office buildings.

The mood was tense but jubilant in the lines winding into security tents. Legions of law enforcement officers staffed metal detectors, patted down attendees, directed traffic and secured the tops of both the Capitol and other nearby buildings. Guests seemed, however, to view such measures as necessary, and their excitement was not dampened.

Once through security, longer lines awaited guests to enter the Capitol grounds and find seats. Draped with flags, the backside of the Capitol building and the surrounding stadium seating bustled with members of Congress, of the Supreme Court and of Bush's cabinet.

Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., called the ceremony to order around 11:30 a.m. An invocation by Rev. Dr. Luis León and musical selection by mezzo-soprano

Senate passes election regulation changes

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Election regulations are now ready.

The change states that voting cannot occur within 20 feet of a campaign table set up in the K-State Student Union, and tables cannot provide a means for students to vote.

In the 2004 elections, questions arose about allowing students to vote at campaign tables. There were also questions about where on campus campaign tables are allowed, which has been resolved by restricting them to the Union.

A section was also added to the regulations, which addresses the appeals process if elections results were contested.

Last year, when former presidential candidate pair Vicki Conner and Jeremy Sandall wanted to appeal the election results, there wasn't a set process to appeal.

The regulations now state that appeals will first be brought before the Elections Commissioner. Then, they can be further appealed to the Elections Re-

Manhattan residents protest Bush policies

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Protesters in Manhattan had a message for President Bush on his inauguration day.

More than 90 protesters waved signs reading "Honk for peace" and "Bring troops home now" at the corner of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue Thursday.

Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice organized the event and advertised it in a letter to the editor in the Manhattan Mercury.

The letter stated, "Those who are deeply concerned about the direction George W. Bush is taking our country, join us." The group asked all people who shared their concerns to join them from 4 to 6 p.m. to wave signs at passing cars.

Sylvia Beeman, member of MAP-J, said she was protesting against the war in Iraq.

"I thought we shouldn't have gone to Iraq in the first place," she said.

However, Beeman said it's more than just the war she is upset about, it's the administration.

"I'm so disgusted that nobody holds the Bush administration accountable for anything," she said. "They never admit they are making a mistake."

"Today is the day that reminds us we've got another four years," he said. "All you can have is hope."

Several K-State students were also present at the protest, many stating they had heard about it on a community Web site, www.theface-book.com.

Laura Wiltrout, junior in social work, said she found out about the protest through a group she participates in called "Don't blame us, we voted for Kerry."

"They sent me a message

The Cryptoquip is a substitution cipher in which one letter stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words and words using an apostrophe give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is by trial and error.

T-shirt store opens Saturday

Aggieville owners modeled shop after New York

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the Dusty Bookshelf's first location.

Then Acme Gifts took over.

But at 10 a.m. Saturday, the doors at 612 N. 12th St. will open to the public as Thread, a new T-shirt shop in Aggieville owned by two individuals who know the location quite well – Diane Meredith, owner of the Dusty Bookshelf, along with her Acme Gift co-owner David Sauter.

Thread allows customers to purchase a T-shirt and then choose a transfer that staff members place on the shirt using a heat press.

"It's basically a place to come and make any T-shirt your mind can possibly imagine," Meredith said.

A computer will also be available at the store for customers who want to select images from the internet. Once customers decide on a transfer, they can purchase a T-shirt in a variety of styles and colors, including long- and short-sleeved, as well as baby and infant shirts.

This weekend, Meredith said, T-shirts will be $10, but the price will increase to $15 or more, depending on the type of shirt. Customers can also bring in their own shirts and will be charged $4.50 for transfer services.

The idea, Meredith said, came about two months ago when she and Sauter saw the T-shirt shops in New York and Chicago.

"It's really big in the East and West Coasts," she said.

"We started to see stores like this crop up. It just seemed the T-shirt craze is something that will never go away and it's something that we wanted to be creative with."

Sauter, who is also a junior in business, said while it is very similar to a screen printing shop or iron-on transfers, Thread has its differences.

"We have products that are similar to screen printing, but the final process is us applying it to a shirt," Sauter said. "It's very popular with the college crowd. This allows them to do whatever they want, a lot of personal expression."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Diane Meredith, co-owner of the store Threads, hangs up T-shirt designs Thursday afternoon. The new store, located at 612 N. 12th St., will be open for business at 10 a.m. Saturday.

Meredith said the store's products are more durable.

"It's a heat press that is at a totally different quality level than ironing at home or screen printing," she said.

This, she said, is why the store will be competitive to larger screen printing businesses, such as Ballard's Sporting Goods in Aggieville or GTM Sportswear.

"We only do small batches, where Ballard's can do a lot more at a more affordable price," Sauter said.

Ballard's declined to comment because they had just found out about Thread, however, they said that it could affect business.

Cheryl Sieben, Aggieville Business Association director, said the new store should not compete.

"Ballard's obviously does a great job of screen printing, but they also offer sporting goods," she said. "There's room for both in Aggieville."

GTM, however, said business would not be affected by Thread, because they do not screen single t-shirts and usually don't do less, said Dave Dreiling, owner.

"We're a national company, so we actually do more business in five or six states," he said. "There aren't any local competition we're worried about."

In the future, Meredith said Thread wants to include shorts, hats and other items.

"We have just a limited budget, so we are starting out small," she said. "There's all sorts of fun stuff we want to do."

Citizens group to evaluate candidates

Public invited to help choose best representatives

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents are concerned with the way elected officials have made decisions recently, so they're taking action.

Citizens for a Better Manhattan was formed to help elect officials that will better serve Manhattan, and they are beginning with the April 5 elections.

Wade Radina, co-chair of CBM, said along with the meeting, they are having a chili dinner, and more than 100 people are expected.

He said the group is bipartisan and has several Republican and Democratic leaders concerned with local issues.

Angela Hubler, co-chair, said CBM is interviewing candidates for City Commission and the school board to decide which ones will best represent the concerns of Manhattan residents.

"I think that dissatisfaction is one of the factors in the formation of CBM," Hubler said.

Another reason CBM has formed is because good candidates weren't elected in past elections, she said.

"I think that there have been good candidates that have reflected some of our concerns, but I don't think there was support," Hubler said.

Hubler said they are planning to support three candidates for City Commission and school board.

Although there was many people with different ideas, Chuck Thomas, treasurer, said since there are only three filed candidates for school board, CBM may be just supporting commission candidates.

Hubler encouraged K-State students to get involved.

If you go

Citizens for a better Manhattan

What: informational meeting and chili dinner
When: 5 to 7 p.m. Sunday
Where: Senior Service Center, 412 Leavenworth St.
How much: $3 or $4 donation
R.S.V.P. at CBMPicnic@cox.net

Principles CBM is looking for in candidates

- maintaining the non-partisan character of local government
- maintaining strong neighborhoods with safe and affordable housing
- supporting the quality of the educational system
- requiring that jobs created by city funding pay above poverty level
- ensuring social services receive adequate public funding
- ensuring all citizens have a voice

"There's a lot of decisions City Commission makes that impacts the lives of students," she said.

TO THE POINT

Revisions vital to election process; SGA delayed for too many months

Last year's Student Governing Association elections turned into a mess of appeals and conspiracy theories because of ambiguities in the regulations.

Now, Student Senate has taken steps to ensure a fair elections process by outlawing wireless Internet voting at campaign tables and by establishing an appeals process.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

These are unfair campaign tactics that weren't fixed last year as immediately as they should have been. Uncertain election officials and doubtful candidates generates a lack of trust in the system. Students who don't trust the elections process won't continue to participate.

Another important change prevents disqualified candidates from being elected to office through write-in campaigns.

While these changes are to be applauded, the process was prolonged for too long. It's now less than a month before the filing deadline and elections regulations are just now ready. The regulations revisions have appeared on previous Senate agendas as long ago as April.

We hope that as problems and questionable campaign activities arise during this election season, senators move quickly to eliminate the inevitable loopholes.

The priority should be on ensuring every K-State students' vote counts in a fair, democratic voting process.

Building a legacy

Bush has second chance to make a name for himself

ABBY HILES

With Reagan, America recalls "Reaganomics."

Bush Sr. begged us to read his lips and not expect any new taxes.

Clinton's memory will forever be the booming economy, tales of cigars and the nagging question of whether it really matters what happens behind closed doors.

You see, each president leaves something behind for America to grasp onto when they leave office. Their legacy is indeed something that not only our country is interested in, but people around the world are as well.

No doubt you have some ideas.

For one, his first presidential election was the most contested and controversial race in American history. In case you forgot, it was weeks before we really knew who the true winner was between Bush and Gore, and by that point, no one even cared. A restless America simply wanted leadership, and no one was providing them with answers.

So when the final tally was counted and Bush declared the victor, the country was once again split. Cohesiveness lost in a sea of election malfunctions and miscounted ballots, in Democrats and Republicans, and in a president that not even half of the country could rally behind.

Could this be all this president is remembered for?

Was his legacy decided before he even took office?

However fickle his getting into office seemed to the American public, Bush's first year in the White House is not something to be taken lightly. After all, he is the president who saw us through a national tragedy that killed thousands and left us feeling vulnerable and afraid.

When 9/11 occurred two and a half years ago, Bush led a nation that was in shambles. He wanted to get out and find the culprit. He wanted retribution. Granted, this led us into an even bigger tragedy (see Iraq war) but just the same, this president never faltered in bringing the entire nation together and creating stronger homeland security.

Of course, this is where the legacy might become a little muddled.

After 9/11, President Bush's zeal for keeping America safe and secure led hundreds of thousands of our armed men and women into war. With his team of "experts" at his side, Bush told tall tales of weapons of mass destruction, of the links between Saddam Hussein and the falling of the twin towers and of America's need to fight.

It has been nearly two years since the Iraq war was declared and our troops were put in harms way without a clue of the reason they were fighting. Could this be Bush's legacy? Is Iraq the new Vietnam?

Whatever your personal views are (pro-Bush, pro-war, pro-choice, etc), it will be an interesting ride these next four years.

A legacy is not born overnight, after all. It takes a term of speeches, new policy initiatives and protests to make an administration truly memorable. And lucky for us, Bush has a second go in the White House to make a real name for himself.

I just hope he's up for the challenge. With social security once again up on the legislative chopping block, Bush can't afford to sit back and let these four years pass him by. Two contested elections and an unjustified war can't be all this president leaves behind.

So step up, Mr. President, it's time to leave your legacy.

K-State community, nation lack respect for Golden Rule

Students walking to class resemble a stampede of animals. Unfortunately, at a mere 5 feet 4 inches, I don't stand a chance.

ANNIE LEWIS

My short little legs fly at twice their normal rate just to try to keep up with the flow of traffic. I frantically look both ways before crossing the sidewalk, but it doesn't help. Right as I dart in front of Hale library, bicycle wheels screech to a halt inches in front of my face.

Worse than sidewalks, of course, are the stampeding students at entrances of buildings. The glass doors offer no visionary aid, and as I reach to open the door I am knocked off my feet as 50 people rush out and trample me. Put icy sidewalks into the equation and you have one blonde mess.

Yes, I do need to learn self-assertion, and no I don't think all the doors are out to get me. I am still left with the question though, where is the love? I've held plenty of doors open for people behind me, and the shock on their faces suggests that it isn't a common occurrence.

When I was almost critically injured by the bicyclist he didn't even care enough to apologize or ask if I was OK.

I know that college brings a lot of stress to students. Homework, financial problems, finding the cure for the common hangover; but you can't honestly tell me those are more important than the well-being of your fellow woman or man.

Of course, the lack of chivalry and basic human kindness isn't foreign only at K-State.

Does anyone in America care what the Golden Rule is?

I grew up in Manhattan, so the biggest city I've really driven in is Topeka. If what I've seen on TV is correct, driving in the Big Apple is even scarier than I-70.

All I'm asking for is a little compassion. Cutting people off, hitting them with doors or trampling them to death on your way to class is the opposite of compassion.

Sometimes I wish I could step into a time machine and travel back to the 1950s. Back then, neighbors actually knew each other's name and their favorite baseball team. The only reason I knew my neighbor's name at home was because our mail would get mixed up.

Neighborhoods are supposed to be places where children can make friends and adults look out for each other. Today the definition of neighborhood is a street address.

It's really disheartening to realize how selfish the American society has become. Luckily, there are still some nice people in the world. When I almost wiped out on the ice the other day, a friendly voice made a joke about it and asked if I was OK.

I smiled, relieved that I found one of the few humans among the masses of animals rushing to class.

Just try opening the door for people, leave earlier for class so you aren't running over people smaller – or bigger – than your are.

You honestly do reap what you sow.

If you happen to make someone's day because you paid for their parking meter, maybe tomorrow (or in two months) you will be bestowed with a parking spot from heaven.

If not, at least you can smile, knowing you possess a virtue few even know exist: kindness.

Consequences of abortion need more research

By Whitney Blake
CAVALIER DAILY (U. VIRGINIA)

This Saturday marks the 32nd anniversary of the landmark Supreme Court decision Roe v. Wade.

While we've all heard the overplayed mantra from the left about women's constitutional rights with respect to the practice of abortion, few stop to consider the actual effects of abortion on women.

Conversely, the pro-life side has primarily focused on the rights of the unborn child, occasionally mentioning the consequences of abortion for women.

It's time for advocates from all sides to consider abortion from an obvious but often overlooked perspective.

Georgette Forney, executive director of the National Organization of Episcopalians for Life, co-founded the National Silent No More Awareness Campaign to provide a forum for post-abortive women.

Forney's quest for her Silent No More campaign can be summed up in this question she posed to the audience: "Is abortion the best we can do for women?"

She posed that abortion has caused more problems than it has solved. She stated, "It may be a legal right, but it's not right for women."

Speaking from a woman's perspective, Forney went on to detail countless stories of women who have regretted their abortions – narratives of guilt, depression, suicide attempts, drug and alcohol abuse, eating disorders and physical health complications, to name a few.

Forney's mission is a noble one. She does not have a political agenda – she wants to help women who have gone through the same thing she has experienced. Raising questions about the practice of abortion is not stripping women of their rights. Rather, it is evoking a thoughtful discussion about the reality of abortion.

As Forney said, abortion is the only surgical procedure that has not been studied in great depth. Patient satisfaction and health after any type of surgery is typically measured and observed to ensure the safety and validity of the procedure, especially for a common surgical operation.

According to the pro-choice Alan Guttmacher Institute, "Abortion is one of the most common surgical procedures in the United States." Some smaller-scale studies indicate that an abortion in a woman's life does lead to an aftermath of physical and emotional devastation described earlier in a significant number of cases.

Campaigns like Forney's come on the heels of a surprising action by the woman whose case legalized the procedure.

While some view pro-lifers as self-righteous fundamentalists, their actions demonstrate they are interested in advancing a healthy lifestyle for women. Pro-choice activists should also welcome Forney's efforts to assist women and investigate an issue to uncover the real benefits.

Regardless of political persuasion, if people are genuinely concerned about the well-being of women, they should advocate for a comprehensive study of post-abortive women's mental and physical health.

TO THE EDITOR

K-State should provide textbook list

Dear Editor,

K-State is robbing its students. Every semester, students spend up to $700 at the local bookstore because this university simply does not allow them any other option.

The lack of a public textbook list created and maintained by the university is to blame for this problem.

Currently, the list is compiled by the K-State Student Union Bookstore, which is contracted by Varney's Book Store.

Because the university will not step up and collect the information, this gives Varney's a sole monopoly on this information.

By having the sole rights to this information, students cannot find out what books are required for their classes without having to go into either of Varney's stores.

This makes it increasingly hard for students to buy their books from cheaper alternatives to the local bookstore company.

If the university maintained an easily accessible public textbook list, this would allow students to search alternate venues to buy their textbooks.

When the K-State Student Union (KSSU) searched for companies to buy their bookstore, they recommended that, "The contractor will also provide text information for a Student Book Exchange if requested to do so by the KSSU."

However, it is apparent that the university and the Union do not care enough about their students to provide this information.

Until the university owns and operates a public textbook list, the students will continue to struggle to find a cheaper way to buy their textbooks.

Social Security system needs immediate reforms

Currently, the federal government is spending the payroll tax revenues to finance the government operations and pay for entitlement checks to current Social Security recipients.

The system is projected to run a surplus through 2015.

Is the system in trouble, as the Bush administration claims? Let's assume for argument that the system is in trouble in the near term, which it is not.

Grow the working population by selectively attracting new immigrants to fill positions being vacated by the Baby Boom generation such as nurses, teachers, engineers and doctors.

Have them sign contracts to work in areas where their skills are needed such as in non-metropolitan counties in the Great Plains and in inner city neighborhoods.

Canada does this.

Uncouple the payment made by employers from those made by employees.

Employers that pay the minimum wage and wages below the prevailing living wage in an area could be required to pay twice as much into the System than their employees.

Take off the lid on who pays Social Security taxes so that the highest paid employees pay on the last dollar they earn.

Finally, raise the minimum wage so that young and low-income people can afford to start and fund private retirement accounts.

Massey stepping up as a leader

It's a beautiful thing when you think something is going to happen and then it actually does.

MATTHEW GIRARD

Last semester, prior to the Big 12 Conference season, I wrote a column stating that the K-State men's basketball team will only go as far as senior forward Jeremiah Massey will take them.

In the column, I wrote "Massey needs to step up and play like a leader," and there was still plenty of time to take charge of this team before league play begins.

The Wildcats (11-3, 1-2) are now heading into their fourth conference game of the season – Saturday against Texas A&M – and both of the above statements are happening before our eyes.

The 6-foot-7, Detroit, Mich. native has embraced his role as the team leader, and it is making a difference on the floor.

Despite two early heart-breaking conference losses, and with the team's backs against the wall, Massey led the Wildcats to a 20-point upset over Missouri for their first league win.

"Saturday night, I think Jeremiah exemplified more of a leadership role than previously," K-State coach Jim Wooldridge said.

Although Massey scored 17 points and grabbed five rebounds, his real contribution to the win was his emotional intensity and how the team fed off it.

Massey was all over the place – taking charges, diving for loose balls and playing tenacious defense.

"I usually try to always show emotion on the court," Massey said. "I just tried to come out (against Missouri) and get my whole team involved."

Whether it is playing through the pain of a sprained ankle, taking a charge or giving a teammate a pat on the head, he is leading the Wildcats in the right direction.

"The team sees a player do that kind of thing, and it is contagious," Wooldridge said.

In three conference games, Massey is shooting 66 percent from the field, averaging 14.6 points per game and 3.6 assists per game. He also leads the team in seven different statistical categories.

Wooldridge said Massey's play as of late is a product of him wanting to win.

"It's a big year for him because it is his senior year and there is a sense of urgency in how he plays and how his team plays," Wooldridge said.

So, since it is his senior year and he has followed through and stepped up as a leader, is it too early to be thinking about beating the 'Chickenhawks' at least once this year?

Wildcats travel to Texas A&M

Aggies present next challenge

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 20-point win over Missouri last Saturday was nice and giving the K-State men's basketball team its first conference win was vital.

But as the Wildcats (11-3, 1-2) get ready for their 3 p.m. clash Saturday at Texas A&M (12-3, 1-3. Players said they have not spent their time bouncing off the walls with joy.

After resting two days to start the week, sophomore forward Cartier Martin said Wildcat practices have been full of intensity as the team prepares for the Aggies.

"We know that (the Missouri game) was just one win," Martin said on Wednesday. "We've got a lot more wins to go before we can get in a comfort zone, so right now we're going to have to continue to practice hard," he said.

The week-long break between games has given several Wildcats battling injuries a chance to improve their health.

Freshman point guard Clent Stewart said the time off was needed for himself, senior forward Jeremiah Massey, sophomore guard Fred Peete and junior guard Schyler Thomas, who have all dealt with injuries in recent weeks.

"It really helped having two days off to get us back, replenished and ready to go," Stewart said.

While K-State comes into Saturday off a victory, Texas A&M enters on a two-game slide.

After knocking off the then No. 9 Texas Longhorns on Jan. 12, the Aggies lost at Texas Tech and on Tuesday to No. 18 Oklahoma – both by double-digit margins.

Despite A&M's recent losses, Martin said he sees a tough challenge ahead in College Station.

"We expect a very aggressive game," Martin said. "They're a real tough-nosed team. They're going to try to get in our heads and bump us around a little bit."

The Aggies – first in the nation in field goal percentage defense at 35.2 percent – have excelled at times on the defensive end in conference play, holding the Longhorns to 63 points in their win and outrebounding No. 2 Kansas 33-27 in a five-point loss in Lawrence.

Texas A&M's defense also held Oklahoma's three-time Big 12 Rookie of the Week, junior forward Taj Gray, scoreless on Tuesday.

That has Stewart impressed.

"They're tuned in really good to opponents' star players," Stewart said. "Taj Gray didn't even score against them. They try to get good players out of their comfort zone."

Though the Aggies have displayed an ability to key in on a star player, they will be going against a Wildcat team that has shown of late it can have several players step up on any given night.

Massey, Peete and Martin have all hit double-figures in each conference game this season. Against Missouri, Martin scored 18 points, Massey had 17 and Peete added 14.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said having that trio and other Wildcats continue to develop and produce is key to future conference wins.

"I think if we continue to get the balance we have right now, and perhaps have a couple other spots improve for us, we have chances to be successful," Wooldridge said.

A tough road test for K-State

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After spending the last three games in the comfy confines of Bramlage Coliseum, the No. 20 K-State women's basketball team heads into one of the most formidable places to play in the Big 12 Conference – No. 10 Texas Tech's United Spirit Arena in Lubbock, Texas.

"They have a really, really tough atmosphere, and they have that home crowd that every team dreams of playing in front of," senior guard Laurie Koehn said. "We have a lot of respect for (Texas Tech) as a team and it is a very tough place to play and we're going to have to come ready to go."

The Red Raiders' home court has never provided much success for the Wildcats.

If K-State (13-3, 4-1) is going to steal a road win at Texas Tech (13-2, 4-0), it is going to need a strong performance from freshman center Shana Wheeler.

Wheeler tied her career-high with 11 points against Texas A&M Wednesday night, and she currently leads the team with 20 blocks.

The 6-foot-2 Wheeler will be matched up against 6-foot-5 Texas Tech senior Cisti Greenwalt, who leads the Big 12 Conference with 62 blocks this season.

Wheeler said there are a variety of ways she will try to break down Greenwalt's game including being aggressive offensively.

"Shot blockers usually go for the shot fake – I should know because I am one of them," Wheeler said with a laugh. "Shot fakes and getting her off of her feet and going into her to try and draw some fouls will be huge."

Aside from Greenwalt, the Wildcats will also have to contend with junior guard Erin Grant, whose turnover ratio of 3.23 assist for every turnover is second in the league.

"Erin Grant is a tremendous point guard," senior forward Megan Mahoney said. "She's got great basketball smarts. She can lead the floor, and see the floor, and she's very quick. It's

'Jug' provides extra motivation for Wildcats at triangular

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track and field team has won the annual K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular traveling trophy – known as "The Jug" – for six years straight and has no plans of losing it this year.

Senior Chaytan Hill, four-time NCAA All-American and Trackwire's No. 1-rated triple-jumper in the nation, said there was a little extra incentive to do well during practice this week thanks to "The Jug."

"The extra motivation is always 'The Jug,'" Hill said. "It is very important to all of us to keep it around. We've always had it for as long as I've been here."

This is the 15th year of the triangular, and the trophy is awarded to the winning team each year. Only twice has the "The Jug" been claimed by a team other than the Wildcats.

Aside from keeping the trophy at K-State, Hill's goals for the triangular are to break the invitational record for the triple jump, qualify for the NCAA Indoor Championship and to help her team win.

"I can't let (Brooklyn Hann from KU) come in here and beat me in my own house," Hill said.

Junior pole-vaulter Breanna Eveland is back in action after she set a new K-State and Ahearn Field House record last weekend with a jump of 13-7 1/2.

Eveland said she feels there is no added pressure this week other than the expectations she is putting on herself to get to the NCAA qualification height of 13–9 1/2.

Playing to forget

Students use video games to procrastinate

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some people play video games every now and then.

Chris Bever, Manhattan resident, said he plays video games because he has played them since he was a kid. He said that gaming hasn't really interfered with his life.

"I've played them ever since I was a kid, but I play them to have fun and it's a stress reliever," Bever said. "I'd say that when I'm not sleeping or working, I'm playing. I'd say I put in five hours a day.

"When I was in school, I'd skip class every once in a while, but I never skipped meals or went without sleep for them."

Know someone who plays too much?

Set priorities: Make sure work is done before playing.
Time management: Think of the best use of time.
Positive reinforcement: Use games as a reward, not as a deterrent.

Jon Bartel, junior in computer engineering, said in addition to owning a computer, he owns Xbox, Playstation 2 and GameCube, the three major gaming consoles. He said he plays for at least four hours a day, and he does it for stress relief.

"I don't do a lot of physical activities, so it is a good way to get out some stress," Bartel said.

James Shanteau, professor in psychology, said time management is the important issue for college students who play video games.

"It's a way to provide something to do for a short term that may interfere with long-term goals," Shanteau said. "You may find some people will play a video game for a couple of hours instead of reading or doing an assignment. It's similar to watching TV, which is a reason as to why some people watch TV, but you can procrastinate by reading a novel or anything else."

Shanteau said he doesn't know a lot about modern video games, but he said anything from solitaire to state-of-the-art video games can be fun yet distracting for some people.

"People need to make a decision to play the game," Shanteau said. "Make it a positive instead of a negative. Work on homework, or whatever, and reward yourself with the game. Don't play the game instead of doing work."

Shanteau said playing video games can be an addiction.

"It could be just like to alcohol, drugs, smoking or even overeating," Shanteau said. "There are a number of methods and groups to help break addictions, the main one being Alcoholics Anonymous."

"I've never heard of a game-player's group, but I think the same approach would be taken: change a little at a time and try to change what you can but that's the most extreme."

Bartel said he understands that some people could get addicted to video games.

"I think people could get addicted to it, but it depends on the person," Bartel said. "Some people may have a problem and get too involved, but it's all about responsibility."

Garner

"Elektra" (rated PG-13)
(1:20), 4:15, 7, 9:30
Following the events of Daredevil, Elektra Natchios (Jennifer Garner), sai enthusiast and assassin for hire, is revived by the Order of the Hand, a group of assassins who helped train her. Assigned by the Hand's current leader, Kirigi, to kill a man and his 13-year-old daughter, Elektra soon befriends them and decides to stand up to her ninja peers.

Quaid

"In Good Company" (rated PG-13)
(1:15), 4:10, 7:20, 9:55
Dan Foreman (Dennis Quaid) is demoted from head of ad sales for a major magazine when the company he works for is acquired in a corporate takeover. His new boss, Carter Duryea (Topher Grace) is half his age. While Dan develops clients through handshake deals and relationships, Carter cross-promotes the magazine with the cell phone division and an indeterminate snack food under the same corporate umbrella. Both men are going through turmoil at home.

Stiller

"Meet the Fockers" (rated pg-13)
(1:10), 4:10, 7:10, 9:45
Having given permission to male nurse Greg Focker (Ben Stiller) to wed his daughter (Teri Polo), ex-CIA man Jack Byrnes (Robert De Niro) and his wife (Blythe Danner) travel to Detroit to "meet the parents," who this time around are Mr. and Mrs. Focker (Dennis Hoffman and Barbra Streisand), who are as different from them as possible.

Keaton

"White Noise" (rated PG-13)
(1:30), 4:30, 7:25, 9:45
Michael Keaton plays successful architect Jonathan Rivers, whose peaceful existence is shattered by the unexplained disappearance and death of his wife, Anna (Chandra West). Jonathan is eventually contacted by a man who claims to be receiving messages from Anna through EVP (Electronic Voice Phenomenon). At first skeptical, Jonathan then becomes convinced of the messages' validity, and is soon obsessed with trying to contact her on his own.

"Racing Stripes" (rated PG)
(1:25), 4:20, 7:25, 9:50
In the middle of a raging thunderstorm, a traveling circus accidentally leaves behind some very precious cargo — a baby zebra. Horse farmer Nolan Walsh (Bruce Greenwood), who takes him home to his young daughter Channing (Hayden Panettiere), rescues the gangly little foal. The little zebra, or "Stripes," as Channing calls him, is soon introduced to the farm's misfit troupe of barnyard residents. The Walsh farm borders the Turfway Racetrack, where highly skilled thoroughbreds compete for horse racing's top honor, the ultra-prestigious Kentucky Crown. From the first moment Stripes lays eyes on the track, he's hooked.

'Kinsey' opens eyes

"Kinsey"

Movie review by Caroline M. Watkins

Ask your parents if they remember "The Kinsey Reports." This question will likely incite enthusiastic nods, uncomfortable giggles, or at the very least, a raised eyebrow.

Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey studied human sexual behavior. He reported his findings during a time when homosexuality was still considered illegal and masturbation immoral.

By interviewing thousands of Americans, Kinsey uncovered the dramatic contrast between what is assumed to be normal sexual behavior and what actually happens in the collective bedroom of society.

Shockingly, Kinsey found that couples usually experiment with more than one sexual position, a concept foreign to some in 1947. He also found that premarital and extramarital sex are common, that nearly everyone masturbates, and that almost a third of American adults have had at least one homosexual experience. These claims rocked the scientific community as well as the American public.

Neeson's performance is often uncomfortable to watch, but this is no mistake on his part. He portrays Kinsey as a man obsessed with his scientific research to the point of alienating his children and deeply hurting his wife.

Although Kinsey never suffered from paranoid schizophrenia, at times the movie feels like a sort of "A Beautiful Mind" wannabe with its portrait of an independent thinker whose research consumes his life. Kinsey's wife (Laura Linney) also fits into the "A Beautiful Mind" parallel. Her unwavering support of her husband's work, even through his darkest hours, reminds me of Jennifer Connelly's portrayal of Alicia Nash. "Kinsey", however, is more than an "A Beautiful Mind" look-alike; unveiling the truth behind American sexual activity is the driving force of the film.

It is difficult to believe that Kinsey, a virgin until he married at the age of 26 and the son of a strict preacher (John Lithgow), grew up to become a strong leader in a sexual revolution.

The film uses humor and charm to ease the tension created by Kinsey's difficult journey to the top. In a particularly humorous scene, Kinsey shocks his college students by teaching them anatomy that we all learned in 6th grade. (You can use your imagination for the details.) However, the fun ends too soon. As Kinsey's work and personal life begin to fall apart, so does the movie.

A slight drag in the plot only intensifies, and the viewer must plod forward towards an unsatisfying conclusion.

The value of "Kinsey" lies not in its actors' performances or even in its level of entertainment. The value of "Kinsey" lies instead in its subject matter.

Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey was a remarkable and brave individual who opened doors and opened eyes that had been closed for far too long.

"Kinsey" is showing at the West Ridge 8 theater in Topeka as well as the Liberty Hall theater in Lawrence but is not showing in Manhattan.

Museum exhibit fails to show futurism of Italian architect

Mazzoni's 11 wooden models on display

By Matthew Peterworth
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is showing an exhibit of Italian architect Angiolo Mazzoni.

He designed over 100 public works projects while Italy was under Facist control. Of the 40 buildings that were constructed, 11 are being being exhibited at Beach.

Mazzoni's projects were associated with Futurism, an art (in this case an architecture) movement established on complete disregard of past designs. Fillippo Marinetti, considered the father of Futurism, said three of Mazzoni's buildings were the first public examples of Futurism.

The exhibit has pictures, descriptions, and wooden models of 11 of Mazzoni's designs. Upon entering the exhibit, one first notices the over-sized blueprint for the Messina Railroad & Maritime Station, which is 4 feet by 14 feet. The actual building was over 2,700 feet long.

The Agrigento Post Office, completed from 1928-1932, is cylindrical in shape and reminiscent of Frank Lloyd Wright's Guggenheim Museum. The post office joined the upper and lower parts of Agrigento which have an elevation change of 40 feet.

All of Mazzoni's designs had a round component of some sort which could be seen in the well-crafted wooden models. Much of the Futuristic design could not be seen. Mazzoni's use of vivid colors and emphasis on total design was lost. For many of his projects, he also designed the furniture and the light fixtures.

The pictures in the exhibit were all in black and white. This is understandable because they were taken before color photography became widely available, and many of Mazzoni's buildings have either been remodeled or were destroyed during World War II. However, some of his buildings are still standing today, and color photographs would help show the Futurism of the designs.

The models, though, definitely make up for the lackluster photographs and make this architecture exhibit worth seeing.

The exhibit will be at the Beach Museum through March 27.

150th celebration plans continue

County, city volunteers discuss historical publications, festival

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan will be celebrating its 150th birthday all-year-long.

Chairman of the Celebrate 150! committee Dave Lewis gave an overview of upcoming events to occur on the sesquicentennial – Riley County's 150th anniversary since its founding in 1855, at a Riley County Historical Society meeting Thursday.

Lewis said the sesquicentennial, while focused around the June festival, is a year-long effort, stemming from its kick off on New Year's Eve.

The June festival in City Park will have the largest firework display in Riley County's history, as well as a nationally-known band playing music from the 50's and 60's after the firework show.

The presentation at the meeting focused on living history, as well as sources for Kansas history. The history will collected from an an upcoming project with KMAN radio station, the writings of Lowell Jack and several books written by members of this active and highly dedicated cross-section of the Manhattan community.

Ray Kurtz, program director for the Riley County Historical Society, said that the June events will be "showcasing all of the things that we have to proud of as residents of Kansas.

"Things don't have to be 150 years old to be important to understanding our history."

Dorothy Dickerhoof, member of the Riley County Genealogical Society, presented excerpts from a book to be released Feb. 1 titled "Pioneers of Riley County, Kansas: 1854-1860."

The book focuses on 120 members of pioneering families and the places where they lived, many of which are still standing.

Kansas quilters will be showing their own timely patchworks at the June 3-5 events followed by a classic car show.

In addition, Riley County Historical Society is having a book sale on Feb. 1 to raise funds for upcoming events related to the sesquicentennial celebration.

The Historical Society will accept books, CDs and cassettes.

All excess books will be donated to the public library and campus libraries.

Lewis said that upcoming events will continue through many venues, including the Country Stampede during the summer months.

He also said that "a world record may be broken," but refused to go into further detail except to say it involves line-dancing.

Multicultural organizations sponsor diversity forum

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A forum for diversity and leadership will be presented by the K-State Alumni Association and the Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development today.

The forum panel consists of Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Provost Duane Nellis and Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration.

Brandon Clark, coordinator of multicultural programs for the Alumni Association, said the panel is to commemorate Martin Luther King Jr. week and its theme is "Remember, celebrate and act."

"We feel that while we've made some great progress in the time since Dr. King's passing, we still have a long way to go," he said. "We need to think about how we can go beyond Dr. King's dream and make that dream a reality."

White said he will be discussing ways the college encourages diversity.

"I think it's an opportunity for students to learn more about diversity initiatives at K-State, but also participate and ask questions," she said.

As a dean, White said he likes to hear what students think about diversity.

"Deans certainly want to know what students think about diversity and get feedback," he said.

Clark said he encourages students to attend because the panel will talk about how to move forward and make positive changes.

"Diversity is important, it's not a threat," he said.

K-State Mortar Board organizes high school academic decathlon

By Gina Ninemire
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

High school students from around the state will take part in the Academic Decathlon in the K-State Student Union today and Saturday.

Mortar Board is host to the two-day competition that challenges high schools students in all areas of curriculum, such as mathematics, English, science and history.

There will be anywhere from 10 to 25 schools participating in this event, and they will also have a chance to move on to regional and even state levels, Assistant Dean of student life Scott Jones said. Jones serves as the state director for the competition on campus.

Mortar Board organizes the K-State-sponsored event. Mortar Board is a national honor society for seniors, which strives to enhance scholarship, leadership and service across K-State, as well as campuses nationally.

"The Academic Decathlon has been hosted by Mortar Board since 1993, and the board will continue to host this prestigious event well into the future," President Victoria Luhrs said.

Robert Peterson of Orange County, Calif., originally founded the Academic Decathlon. Peterson wanted a way to challenge students in all areas of academics, and for students to compete and share their knowledge with other schools.

"The decathlon is a fun and exciting way for high school students to compete with other high schools academically," Academic Decathlon Chairman Zachary Mohr said. "Schools compete with each other athletically all of the time, and it is nice to see that we offer a way for them to be challenged in other areas as well."

The theme for the Academic Decathlon this year will be "Exploring the Ancient World".

"We hope to see students having fun while learning and look forward to future competitions," Luhrs said.

Protesters line Anderson Avenue Thursday to protest George Bush's inauguration speech earlier that morning. The protesters held signs calling for the return of troops and encouraging people to say no to the Bush agenda.

telling me to come," she said.

Not long after the protest began, a group of College Republicans students showed up to express their favorable opinions of Bush by waving Bush and Cheney campaign signs and holding an American flag.

College Republicans Board Member Ben Davis said although he didn't agree with the protesters against Bush, he did support their right to freedom of speech.

"It makes me feel great to be an American because we can come out here and voice our decisions like it should be done," he said.

However, Davis said he thought it was disrespectful to protest against the president on inauguration day.

"If people could just give the president one day and support him, it would be great," he said. "I would not have been here against John Kerry."

SENATE | Election regulations revised to include appeals process

view Committee and the final stop is the Student Tribunal. An appeal has to be filed within 24 hours.

Another noteworthy change to the regulations is that disqualified candidates cannot be elected as a write-in candidate, which includes candidates who fail to submit required reports. Many candidates have not turned in expense reports but became senators through write-in ballots.

The election regulations changes were first introduced April 29, but the kinks are now worked out, said Sarah Laib, chairperson for the Senate Operations Committee.

"I think we finally got it," she said. "I think we took care of all the problems we saw last year."

Bill Muir, faculty representative for Senate, said that senators should encourage students to run for Student Governing Associations positions and make sure there are representatives from every college.

"Now that you have passed the election regulations that leaves you about four weeks to get people interested in elections," he said. "Get people excited about it."

In other business, Student Body President Hayley Urkevich and Matt Wagner, governmental regulations director, spoke about what happened at the Kansas Board of Regents meeting Wednesday and Thursday.

Urkevich said tuition will be going up again. The increases will probably be 9.9 percent.

"That's pretty much for certain," she said.

Wagner said english proficiency for graduate student assistants was also discussed, and now a student can sit on a committee for the hiring of GTAs.

BUSH | Speech focuses on self government, international freedom

"There is only one force of history that can break the reign of hatred and resentment and expose the pretensions of tyrants and reward the hopes of the decent and tolerant, and that is the force of human freedom," he said.

"He is going to go push the United States into a bad place internationally," she said. "Bush has not been responsible or effective with these types of policies."

Some of Bush's policies have been criticized on the national and international level, including his 2001 No Child Left Behind Act and Iraqi regimes.

Other highlights of Bush's 21-minute inaugural address included his deep feelings for international freedom and self-government.

"We are led, by events and common sense, to one conclusion: The survival of liberty in our land increasingly depends on the success of liberty in other lands. The best hope for peace in our world is the expansion of freedom in all the world," he said.

Although the president believes advancing self-government is a better value for other nations, some people think differently.

Wahlberg said, "We cannot push American values on other countries. Things work here for a reason, and our way may not be effective elsewhere."

Wahlberg was one of the several protesters in attendance at the inauguration. Protesters surrounded Capitol Hill and pressed for people to hear their side of the story.

Lorna Ramos-Machado, Puerto Rican citizen, believed expressing one's beliefs is another great thing America can give to all.

"I am glad to be a part of an experience where I can express my thoughts and do what I like," she said. "If you criticize a president in other countries, you could lose your life, but not in America."

Despite conflicting viewpoints, many people of different political affiliations have experienced various events revolving around the inaugural week, including the America's Future Rocks Today concert, inaugural parade and inaugural balls.

Jeb Bush, South Carolina resident, said events such as these keep everyone in high spirits for the president's new term.

"No matter what your party is, I think it is great to take time and celebrate, not divide, over something as important as the presidency of the most powerful nation on earth," he said.

Susan Graham followed before Vice President Dick Cheney took the oath of office on a family Bible.

When Bush was introduced following Cheney's swearing-in, the crowd's applause sounded, and felt, like a mild earthquake.

An ailing Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist – who is undergoing treatment for thyroid cancer – administered the oath of office to Bush, and Lott returned to the podium to present the United States' 43rd president.

Contingents of protesters sprang up around the grounds. One group of pink-clad women stood and held signs protesting the war in Iraq. The crowd around them surged to its feet to hide them from the media. Later, some of the women were taken away in handcuffs.

Two men then unfurled a banner decorated with a skull and crossbones. They were quickly removed from the premises, maintaining a death-grip on the banner. Another man was led away chanting, "Hey Bush, where are the poor? Did you send them all off to war?" The crowd attempted to mute his protest with cries of "USA! USA!" And yes, there were snowballs thrown.

Bush's address touched on some policy issues – social security, education, the Homestead Act – but concentrated mostly on the philosophy of liberty, faith and unity, to the cheers of the audience.

"Liberty will come to those who love it," he said.

Bush praised U.S. allies and took a moment to honor those who have given their lives in service to the United States. He also made a promise to other countries.

"When you stand for your liberty, we will stand with you," he said.

And in a closing reminder directed at the "youngest citizens," Bush urged, "You have seen that life is fragile, and evil is real, and courage triumphs. Make the choice to serve in a cause larger than your wants, larger than yourself - and in your days you will add not just to the wealth of our country, but to its character."

A stirring benediction by Pastor Kirbyjon H. Caldwell and the singing of the national anthem closed the ceremony and freed the frozen attendees to return to someplace warmer with somewhat lighter hearts.

Sebelius' budget proposal to give K-State $9.8 million

By Kt McBratney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Governor Kathleen Sebelius announced her 2006 budget recommendations, providing about $30 million in new support for higher education, with an estimated $9.8 million going to K-State.

The recommendations were made the second week of January.

Cindy Bontrager, budget director at K-State, said with the state of the economy and other interests competing for funds, the governor was funding higher education as well as possible.

"We are pretty pleased," Bontrager said. "In recent years, we haven't been as fortunate."

Sebelius recommends an $18 million block grant for an average 2.5 percent salary increase for all state employees and to address fringe benefit issues. In addition, a $3.3 million appropriation to the Kansas Board of Regents to enhance salaries of ranked faculty was recommended as part of a multi-year higher education act. This would provide an estimated additional 1 percent increase at K-State, for a total increase of 3.5 percent for ranked faculty.

A one-time general fund appropriation of $13 million to the Board of Regents was proposed to offset costs of a 27th pay period in 2007, with an estimated $3.8 million going to K-State. Estimates for K-State are based on historical allocations to the university.

Sebelius also recommends $1 million in additional funds for student financial aid programs, $1 million for vocational-technical schools, and $370,000 for the medical student scholarship program.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said that such funding was simply not a choice last year due to budget constraints, but she is happy to see the governor's attention to higher education. Carlin said she worked with students last year to address concerns like tuition increases and educational budget cuts.

"I think it shows definitely and clearly that the governor listens and takes these concerns seriously," Carlin said. "The students did a wonderful job of coming in. It always helps for the people to speak up."

Funding for K-12 education is less clear since the Kansas Supreme Court's recent ruling, finding K-12 funding insufficient. Sebelius did recommend continuing the $3,863 per pupil spending level approved by the Legislature. She proposes $2.5 million for inservice education,

Graveyard shift workers balance school, sleep

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bartender Lela Tehrani puts sleep aside to succeed in work and school.

"On a good night, I get four to five hours of sleep," she said.

Tehrani, junior in animal science, averages 30 hours of work per week between her two jobs at Panera Bread and Auntie Mae's Parlor. In addition to her two jobs, she's taking 17 hours at K-State.

With bartending shifts running from 9 p.m. to 2:30 a.m., Tehrani prioritizes.

"I study on my evening shifts sometimes," she said. "I've learned to stay awake all night and then go straight to class."

According to www.medicinenet.com, an adult needs an average of seven to eight hours of sleep a night. However, this isn't always possible for many students who hold night jobs.

Kate Brummer, senior in biology, works two 12-hour, overnight shifts a week at Mercy Health Center. She said this job doesn't interfere with school because of her 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. shifts.

"Sunday to Tuesday I know is when I have to get my schoolwork done," she said. "Red Bull's my best friend."

Michael Ashley, senior in pre-medicine, is a bouncer at Porter's Bar. Despite the late hours, he enjoys his job.

"I really like the job because of the people," he said. "It's a fun atmosphere."

For Tehrani and Brummer, having a night job has helped them manage their time accordingly.

Andy Kowal, senior in finance and management, is a bartender at 4-Olives Wine and Bar, and he said having a job can be very helpful.

"Part-time jobs and everyday experiences are what teach you everyday lessons," he said. "You learn more practical things that you will be able to apply to your future."

As tuition continues to increase, having a job could sometimes be more of a necessity than just an extra form of income.

"I just bought a house, so I definitely need to keep my jobs," said Tehrani.

Financial independence from family becomes more real as students start looking for jobs to pay off their living expenses and student loans.

In many cases, jobs available to college students in Manhattan have better salaries if the student is willing to work night shifts.

"I'm on my own now; my parents don't really help me financially," said Kowal. "I make $4 an hour plus tips,

Kansas re-evaluates death penalty

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After the Kansas death penalty was struck down on a technicality, a different plan of action may occur for those inmates on death row.

On Dec. 17, the 1994 Kansas Death Penalty Law was reviewed and ruled unconstitutional because it requires jurors to weigh evidence.

According to The Associated Press, factors of mitigating circumstances, mental state, education level, age and psychological condition weigh evenly with the aggravating evidence and are canceled out with the state favoring death.

Rachelle Colombo, communication director for State Rep. Doug Mays,' R-Topeka, office, said current inmates on death row will be affected by the ruling.

"Inmates who were on death row are in a sort of limbo right now," Colombo said.

If legislation rewrites the technicality, death row inmates will receive a new sentence, possibly for life imprisonment, Colombo said. There are

Six arrested for drug offenses in Manhattan

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six people were arrested for drug-related crimes Friday.

The first warrant was conducted at 640 Moores Lane at 6:30 a.m.

There were six people at the residence, but four were arrested. The warrant came from ongoing drug investigations.

Nicholas Mainville, 24, and Matthew Sundgren, 21, were arrested for manufacturing meth and possession of ephedrine with the intent to manufacture meth. Both bonds were set at $20,000.

Rebeckka Elliot, 21, and Sarah Hamm, 23, were arrested for possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia. Their bonds were set at $1,000.

Eric Steinwand, 28, and Meghan Devault, 18, were arrested for manufacturing meth and possession of ephedrine with the intent to manufacture meth.

Steinwand's bond was set at $35,000 and Devault's bond was set at $20,000.

Sgt. Doug Wood of the Riley County Police Department said there still could be more arrests made.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Murder solicitation
An Ogden, Kan., woman, Patricia Lee Grower, was arrested for solicitation to commit murder on Friday. Detectives from the Riley County Police Department were serving an arrest warrant when they went to Grower's residence and arrested her for solicitation to murder her previous husband in September 2004.

Wagner Field scare
At 4:07 p.m. Sunday, Manhattan Fire Department firefighters responded to a fire alarm in the press box at KSU Stadium. The department said no fire was found when firefighters arrived. The cause of the alarm was determined to be water from a water pipe that had frozen and burst. The case has been turned over to K-State.

Mideast peace
Palestinians and Israelis moved closer to peace Sunday, with the new Palestinian leader saying he had made progress toward a truce with militants. Israel pledged for the first time to hold fire if calm prevails. Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas extended his stay in Gaza until Monday.

GETTY IMAGES

Paratroopers from Company C, 3rd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division, line up against a wall of the compound they are preparing to raid during an operation Thursday in central Baghdad. The cordon and knock operation targeted suspected insurgent safe- houses.

Iraqi insurgents against the Jan. 30 elections unleashed attacks Jan. 17 and 18, killing more than 20 people.

In Buhruz, a city in central Iraq, gunmen armed with grenades and rifles attacked a small bus carrying Iraqi soldiers, killing at least seven soldiers and a civilian.

'YOU'RE HIRED'

Trump

Instead of firing, "Apprentice" star and billionaire Donald Trump did some hiring Saturday when he married Slovenian model Melania Knauss at the Episcopal Church of Bethesda-by-the-Sea.

This is the third wedding for the 58-year-old Trump, who is 24 years older than his bride.

ONE STEP CLOSER

Rice

Condoleezza Rice is one step closer to being named Secretary of State after the Senate Foreign Relations Committee endorsed her with a 16-2 vote Jan. 20.

Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.), who lost the presidential election to President Bush, and Sen. Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.) were the two members of the committee who voted against Rice's nomination.

STUDENT DIES

Dixie Spence, senior in apparel marketing and design, was killed Jan. 17 in a car accident.

Spence was a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and an employee of American Eagle Outfitters at the Manhattan Town Center.

A memorial service will be at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday at All Faiths Chapel.

FOUR MORE YEARS

Bush

President Bush entered his second term Thursday, proclaiming his vision of America as a worldwide liberator. With his re-election, Bush becomes the 16th president in American history to begin a second term.

UKRAINE'S NEW PRESIDENT

Following two months of public protests, Viktor Yushchenko was sworn in as Ukrainian president on Sunday. Yushchenko was declared the loser of the Nov. 21 presidential election due to a fraudulent election.

The Supreme Court annulled the election and Yushchenko won a second election on Dec. 26.

GAY MARRIAGE DEBATE

House leaders on Tuesday halted a proposed constitutional amendment that would ban gay marriage in Kansas.

The proposed amendment, which the Senate passed 28-11 without a hearing, will undergo public hearings before a vote takes place.

Residents discuss future direction for city's government

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly 200 people showed up Sunday to discuss the future of Manhattan's government.

Citizens for a Better Manhattan, a new political action committee, sponsored a chili supper at the Senior Center to discuss plans to support City Commission and school board candidates who share their vision for Manhattan.

"Our intent is to be a resource for candidates that will perhaps take Manhattan in a different direction than we've been going in the last few years," Wade Radina, co-chair of CBM, said.

Radina, who owns Radina's Coffeehouse and Bakery, said the group was formed in October when people began to discuss their dissatisfaction with the way things were done in government.

"We sat around and griped about what we didn't like in our community and found that there was some common ground," Radina said.

From there, they tried to get more people involved and chose some basic principles to advocate.

Those ideals include maintaining safe neighborhoods and affordable housing and requiring that jobs created with city funding enable families to live above poverty.

"We want neighborhoods families can live in," Angela Hubler, CBM co-chair, said.

Radina said that includes student housing.

"We want to improve how well we enforce codes and to make them safer and better," he said, making the only reference to K-State that evening.

They also said it won't help the city to bring in businesses whose jobs pay wages below the poverty line.

"If our city uses tax dollars to bring businesses here, they should provide a level of income such that those families wouldn't need other government subsidies," Radina said.

CBM has no specific plan for achieving its objectives. They will support candidates who they think most embody their ideals.

To determine who those candidates are, they will hold interviews and select three school board and three city commission candidates.

The first interviews will take place this Wednesday in the auditorium of the Manhattan Public Library. Anyone can attend and vote for a candidate.

"We aren't going to run or manage anyone's campaign," Hubler said. "We are just going to help by passing out literature and signs and by supporting them financially."

CBM is only allowed to give each candidate $500. With six candidates, they are looking to raise $3,000, Treasurer Chuck Thompson said.

They are about a third of the way to their goal.

A diverse group of residents attended and the chili supper facilitated a sense of community, as people ate with new acquaintances.

Longtime Manhattan resident Kae Olson came out of curiosity.

"I wanted to see what this was all about. There were people I respected, and I wanted to know more," Olson said.

She said she is hopeful for the future of the city.

"We've lived here for a long time, and I would like to see the town prosper," she said.

College Bowl registration due Tuesday

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

What may seem like a useless amount of knowledge may finally be put to use Saturday.

The Union Program Council is sponsoring the K-State College Bowl at 8 a.m. in the K-State Student Union.

Ben Hopper, UPC program adviser, said the event is a question-and-answer game that tests contestants on history, literature, science, multiculturalism, religion, geography, pop culture, the arts, sports and social sciences.

"It's like Trivial Pursuit on steroids," he said.

Teams are composed of four students with an optional alternate. Two teams are asked questions by a moderator and the team to buzz in first with the correct answer receives the points.

Prizes are awarded to the top three teams with $120 going to first place, $80 to second and $60 to third.

The money comes from the $30 entry fee that each team is required to pay, Hopper said.

While some say the only way to prepare is to know the answers, Hopper disagreed.

"The best way to practice is for each member to write 10 to 15 questions and ask other members for the answers," he said.

"Also using games like Trivial Pursuit is good for just brushing up on basic trivia knowledge."

Shea Larson, co-chair of the UPC social events committee, said as long as there are four people, anyone can have a team.

"If you have four friends who are interested in doing something like this, it's a great opportunity to get together on a Saturday morning and have fun," she said.

Did you know?
College Bowl questions

- The first scientist to attribute global weather changes to volcanic activity was also the only person to sign these three documents: the Treaty of Paris ending the American Revolution, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Who was the scientist, politician, writer and visionary?
- You won't find them at the bottom of bug zappers because they're not attracted to ultraviolet light. They are attracted to sweat and lactic acid and can sense up to 100 feet away. What are these insects in the order Diptera whose females bite and whose name is Spanish for "little fly"?

Answers: 1. Benjamin Franklin 2. mosquitoes

How to Register a team

- Go to the Union Program Council office in the K-State Student Union to enter.
- There is an entry fee of $30 that contributes to prize money.
- The entry deadline is 4 p.m. Tuesday
- The K-State College Bowl is Jan. 29. Registration is from 8 to 8:30 a.m. on the first floor concourse area of the Union.

TO THE POINT

Legislators should focus on school funding

The state of Kansas has known for years that school funding is insufficient.

They've known since Jan. 3 that requirements of the state constitution haven't been met.

Yet the problem of figuring out a formula for school funding remains to be solved.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has proposed $2.5 million for in-service education, $1 million for a mentor teacher program, and $300,000 in additional school audits to assess spending.

Although these are good first steps toward solving the shortfalls, the initiative should have been taken years ago.

The budget recommendations remain just suggestions until approved by the Legislature.

Morality decisions affecting only some on personal levels have already been sent as legislation to the Senate, such as the gay marriage ban.

However, a problem like school funding that affects every Kansan remains to be fixed.

Manhattan schools have to make $2 million worth of cuts and will close a school at the beginning of the 2005-2006 school year.

Funding in Kansas schools remains a problem after years of known detriments to education, and it's time that these problems got fixed.

Legislators should tackle the issue as their first action.

Political mispeak

Columnist strives to present great opinion unlike government leaders

I must admit that slighting the mental giants that compose the Democratic party is no small task.

JONAS HOGG

One of those guys has the mental capacity of 19 Einsteins, and that's a lot. Nevertheless, occasionally someone with the mental capacity of only four Einsteins works his or her way into the only political party in the universe strong enough to carry around the awesomeness that is Teddy Kennedy.

It will be difficult for me to slander such great men and women; I am not a mean person and, as Al Gore once said, "A zebra does not change its spots." But for the sake of good writing, I will have to try.

I encourage anyone to point out to me misquotations or errors that I may produce. I am much more welcoming than the good Hillary Clinton, who, on one occasion, laid down the law by saying, "I'm not going to have some reporters pawing through our papers. We are the president."

I may make the occasional mistake, such as the one made by Susan Rice, Secretary of State for African Affairs under the Clinton Administration, in 1997, when she refused to patch up ties with Sudan, even when they offered to arrest Osama bin Laden, who was, at the time, a wanted criminal. Fortunately, Osama disappeared after leaving Sudan and no one has ever heard from him again.

But I will not be deterred, no matter how futile my efforts may be. I will follow the example that John Kerry set when he stated the need for "Muslim-speaking" troops in Iraq. I was not aware that Muslim is a language, but if Muslim-speakers were truly what we need, then let us rally together and support Muslim-speakers everywhere, even if John Kerry will not be the president.

I write because it is my obligation – nay, my duty – to present you with a great opinion column. I realize my own fallibility, however, and will try to avoid such nonsense as, "If the...if he...if is means is and never has been, that is not – that is one thing. If it means there is none, that was a completely true statement."

There are only a few people in the world who can get away with logic like that.

But despite all these failings and the enormity of the task in front of me, I will strive nonetheless.

Just as Joseph Lieberman took the reins of censoring video games so parents do not have to be bothered with actually parenting their children, so too will I throw all my might into the jaws of the unequaled Democratic party.

There is nothing left to stop me. I will write this article, and it will make it into Justin Hall, and Eisenhower Hall, and Ahearn Gymnasium, and McCain Auditorium, and Bluemont Hall, and the Veterinary Medical Sciences Building, all the way to Jon Wefald's house.

Republican dominance will provide hilarious bloopers

You're undoubtedly aware from the non-stop TV coverage that last week was the swearing-in of President Bush to his second term in the Oval Office.

JEREMY PARKER

If you're conservative, this means you've only stopped touching yourself long enough to read this because of that pesky "refractory period."

I assure you, this will only take a moment, and then you can get back to where you left off (punching the clown to footage of last Thursday's George Bush/Toby Keith/Rush Limbaugh triple-kiss).

If this term is anything like the last one, the GOP will spend the next four years providing us with so many goofy gaffes that we'll need Henderson Hornswoggle's Fraptrabulous Flumpet-gun to blast the grins off our grills.

In an effort to cheer up the left and shift the embarrassment back to the right, we shall now reflect on some of the their funniest foibles, hypocrisies, and blunders of the last four years.

I'm calling it, "Oops! Pardon My Bloops. GOP Bloopers, 2000-2004."

Things got off to a good start for Republicans in 2000 when John Ashcroft lost the Missouri senate race to Democrat Mel Carnahan, who was dead. Whoopsie-daisy!

Next up, we have President Bush making a paper football out of the August 2001 "Bin Laden Determined to Attack Within the United States" memo. Hold on there, George... I think that might be important.

A month later, surprisingly, bin Laden attacked inside the United States (if only there had been some sort of warning). To remedy the situation, Bush vowed to hunt him down: dead or alive.

When this turned up nothing but empty caves, the search for bin Laden started to look like O.J.'s search for the real killer. So how did Dubya save face? By changing the subject, of course.

In November 2001, Saddam Hussein refused to allow U.N. weapons inspectors into the country of Iraq.

Bush kindly reminded Hussein that Iraq is a member of the United Nations, and as such, they can't just ignore U.N. decisions whenever they want. That type of blatant disregard is reserved only for the United States of America, as we saw a few months later when Bush sidestepped the United Nations when they didn't want us to go to war.

When the search for Iraqi WMDs turned out not to be a slam dunk after all, people began to get angry. Liberal movie stars started speaking out against the war, which prompted bellyaching by the right.

"Hollywood actors know nothing about politics and should stick to making movies," they said. "Unless, of course, they're actors on our side, like Ronald Reagan or Arnold Schwarzenegger."

In April 2003, Senator Rick Santorum (R-Pa.) compared homosexuality to polygamy, pedophilia and bestiality.

It was the most embarrassing comment from a Republican senator since, well, four months before that, when Trent Lott lamented that if Strom Thurmond had been elected, our country "wouldn't have had all these problems over all these years."

Thurmond, of course, was a pro-segregation southern Dixiecrat... which is what made it even funnier in December 2003 when it was revealed that the racist, conservative Thurmond fathered a child out of wedlock with his black maid and bought her silence for six decades.

So, you see, Democrats? There's always a silver lining.

Four more years of Republicans in the spotlight means four more years of laughing at stuff like Rush Limbaugh's hilarious addiction to painkillers. Or Bill O'Reilly's puzzling reference to falafels.

I don't know about you, but I can't wait.

To all you peace-loving, hippie liberals: I say we repeal the 22nd Amendment and have G.W. for eight more years, third term.

I mean honestly, who throws a shoe?

Am I the only one who thinks dental dam sounds like a bad trip to the dentist?

Is it wrong that I'm in my room jamming out to Journey and eating applesauce in my bra with my gay roommate?

I'm glad we were able to spend $30,000 on such a worthless clocktower that doesn't even have a clock yet to honor such a worthless person.

You know, fraternity life really isn't very great. Except for the large quantities of alcohol consumed, and the, uh, incredible desire to be prettier than everyone else.

Hey, there's nothing wrong with taking five years to graduate from the College of Business. Besides, leaving school after four years is like leaving a good party at 11 p.m..

That's a brilliant idea. Let's just send all our video-game-addicted friends to Alcoholics Anonymous. I bet the alcoholics would really love that.

If those commercials are true and STDs show no symptoms, then what's the problem? I'm not worried.

Texas Hold 'Em poker gains popularity at K-State, becomes recognized as sport on ESPN

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mark Twain once said, "There are few things that are so unpardonably neglected in our country as poker... Why, I have known clergymen, good men, kindhearted, liberal, sincere, and all that, who did not know the meaning of a 'flush.' It is enough to make one ashamed of one's species."

Almost 150 years later, Twain's words contain a note of prophecy following the recent rise in the popularity of poker.

With networks like ESPN broadcasting the World Series of Poker, the ancient game is finally becoming a recognized sport.

Be it online, at bars, or simply in someone's living room, poker is thriving in Manhattan.

Dave Lynn, sophomore in open-option, said that he regularly likes to meet with friends at someone's house for an amicable game of poker.

"My friends and I usually have small home games," Lynn said. "We used to play at the bars, but we've decided that there is just more skill involved with small games. It cuts down on bad bets."

Lynn said that he and friends usually play Texas Hold 'Em, a version of poker in which players are dealt two cards face down.

Players then make bets or fold, depending on their cards, and then three cards are placed face up in the middle of the table.

Using their own cards in connection with the three community cards, players can bet or fold before two final cards are taken from the deck to be overturned.

How to Play Texas Hold'Em

Texas Hold 'Em is a seven card poker game with simple rules that a beginner can easily learn and begin to play immediately.

- A dealer button is used to indicate where the cards are to be dealt. Before the deal, the two players to the left of the button place live bets called small and large blinds, or bets without looking at the cards.
- Play begins with two cards dealt face-down to each player. Action starts with a betting round beginning with the player to the left of the blind bets and continues clockwise.
- Players may bet, check (abstain from betting), raise, or fold (withdraw hand) in turn. The large blind has the privilege of last action and may check or raise the bet.
- Three community cards are then dealt face up in the center of the table and another betting round takes place beginning with the player to the left of the dealer button. Another card is dealt face up followed by a round of betting. The fifth and last card is dealt face up and a final round of betting takes place.
- Players remaining in the hand will then show their cards and the winning poker hand will be awarded the pot. Any combination of hold cards and community cards may be used to make the best five-card poker hand.

Straight flush
The second-highest hand — five consecutive cards of the same suit. The highest hand is an ace-high straight flush, called a royal flush.

Four of a kind
Four cards of the same rank.

Flush
Five cards of the same suit.

Full house
Three cards of one rank and two of another, such as three fives and two queens, called fives full of queens.

Straight
Five consecutive cards of mixed suits. (In a straight, an ace can be used as either a high or low card.)

Royal flush
The highest ranking hand — five consecutive cards of the same suit descending from Ace to 10. If two players have this, it is a tie.

Three of a kind
Three cards of the same rank.

Two pairs
Two cards of the same rank and two cards of another rank.

Pair
Two cards of the same rank. (If two players both have the same pair, the highest other card in their hand, called a kicker, determines the winner).

Johnny Carson dies at 79

Carson

Johnny Carson , the quick-witted "Tonight Show" host who became a national institution putting his viewers to bed for 30 years with a smooth nightcap of celebrity banter and heartland charm, died Sunday. He was 79.

Carson died early Sunday morning, according to his nephew, Jeff Sotzing. "He was surrounded by his family, whose loss will be immeasurable," Sotzing told The Associated Press.

He did not provide further details, but NBC said Carson died of emphysema — a respiratory disease that can be attributed to smoking — at his Malibu home.

"Inside Deep Throat" examines legacy of porn

"Inside Deep Throat," a documentary that premiered this weekend at the Sundance Film Festival, examines the legacy of the 1972 flick, a forerunner of today's hardcore adult-entertainment industry and a touchstone for obscenity laws.

"Deep Throat" was shot for $25,000 in just six days. Its male star was a film-crew member shoved in front of the camera as a last-minute replacement.

"Inside Deep Throat" — produced by Brian Grazer, whose films include "Apollo 13" and "A Beautiful Mind" — opens theatrically in New York City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Boston and five other cities Feb. 11.

NBC denies rumors of Couric's departure

NBC Universal Television Group President Jeff Zucker is trying to shoot down rumors that "Today" show co-host Katie Couric is a candidate for the soon-to-be-vacant job as anchor of the "CBS Evening News."

Zucker said he expected Couric to remain at NBC for a long time. Her contract extends for another year and a half, and he said negotiations over an extension have already begun.

Zucker did have a friendly — we think — warning for CBS Chairman Leslie Moonves, who will decide Dan Rather's successor at the evening news.

"We've decided that if CBS goes after Katie Couric, we're going after Julie Chen," he said Friday.

"In Good Company"
Movie review by Brett Hamilton

Cashing in a million dollars in paychecks, marrying a beautiful woman, buying a Porsche and being a top executive at a magazine – not bad goals before I turn 30.

Sounds like the top of the world, right? For some, yes, but the movie "In Good Company" takes an interesting look at a man who believed he had it all.

The film starts off showing the man everyone knows. Dennis Quaid plays Dan Foreman, the anything-for-my-family dad, even if that means a heart attack. Dan has just found out that his wife is having his third child and his oldest daughter Alex (Scarlett Johansson) wants to transfer to an expensive college.

Dan's life plagues him throughout the movie, and everything is worsened by his demotion by a man half his age.

Enter Topher Grace as Carter Duryea, a big up-and-comer in a merging, "think-outside-the-box" global firm. Carter's career is his main priority, and shows happiness at the thought of the head honcho knowing his name. And Grace does a good job of showing that.

Obvious and often funny quarrels ensue between Carter and Dan about how to run the business. The film pulls you in and shows that these are "real" people when Carter invites himself to dinner at the Foreman's.

The movie then builds, showing the company's downsizing and the growing relationship between Carter and Alex.

The movie plays on many things you can relate to: wanting to do everything you can for your family, finding your true self and discovering whether your job is really the life you want. Grace does a great job by being the bad guy you want to root for.

The movie had a great pace at the beginning, moving along from antics to romance, all leading up to the moment when Dan catches Carter having an affair with his daughter.

After this peak of emotion, however, the pace slows.

With a stronger ending this movie would have been great, not just good.

Texas A&M loss sinks Wildcats into deep hole

JOSH WITT

We know the K-State men's basketball team is better than it was last year. The Wildcats know they have the talent to go places this season.

There's just one problem.

After Saturday's 65-51 loss to Texas A&M at College Station, the Wildcats are in the same position they were in last year – in a deep hole.

Though K-State's overall record is a quality 11-4, the Wildcats are now 1-3 in Big 12 conference play. That's the same spot the team was in last year, in a season that ended with a 6-10 conference mark and no post-season play beyond the first round of the conference tournament.

Yes, it's early, but this team could be in some trouble.

The Wildcats let the first two Big 12 games slip away, but came back with their best performance of the season in a 20-point win over Missouri on Jan. 15.

Things were looking good. The offense was clicking and the defensive intensity was at its highest level of the season.

But it didn't matter.

Talking to a few Wildcats on Wednesday, the vibe was that the team was busting its tail in practice and a letdown against the Aggies was doubtful.

They said they were ready for A&M's physical play.

They weren't.

The Aggies out-muscled the Wildcats

Wecker records 2,000th career point

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All-America senior forward Kendra Wecker hit a jump shot with 7.4 seconds left to lift No. 20 K-State to a 55-53 win over No. 10 Texas Tech on Saturday.

Before a crowd of 13,927 at Texas Tech's United Spirit Arena, the win was the first since 1978 that the Wildcats won in Lubbock.

Wecker, who scored a game-high 19 points to go with a career-high four blocks, became just the fifth player in Big 12 conference history to score 2,000 career points.

She joined former Wildcat Nicole Ohlde on the list, who is the Big 12's all-time leading scorer with 2,241 points.

In a second half that featured 13 lead changes and six ties, Wecker hit the winning shot after Tech guard Erin Grant tied the score at 53-53 on a short jumper the previous possession.

Grant had a chance to tie the game at the buzzer, but her shot rolled off the rim and the Wildcats escaped with the victory.

Senior guards Laurie Koehn and Megan Mahoney also came up big for K-State (14-3, 5-1).

Mahoney recorded a double-double with 10 points and 11 rebounds, and Koehn scored 12 points on 4-of-6 3-pointers – the biggest of which gave the Wildcats a 48-47 lead with less than four minutes to play.

For K-State, the win moved them into a tie for second place in the Big 12 and set up a rematch with league-leader Iowa State this Tuesday.

The Wildcats opened league play with a 78-59 loss at Iowa State, but have since won five straight over Big 12 foes.

Texas Tech fell to 14-3 overall, 5-1 in league play.

Cats struggle offensively in loss to Aggies Saturday

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats were simply outplayed in their 65-51 loss to Texas A&M on Saturday.

"They beat us to most of the loose balls and a lot of rebounds, and we just didn't do the small things to win today," said senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

Despite having a week off and coming off a 20-point win over Missouri Jan. 15, the Wildcats (11-4, 1-3) were not able to find any offensive rhythm against the Aggies (13-3, 2-3), scoring a season-low 51 points.

"We couldn't generate any offense outside of Jeremiah Massey," coach Jim Wooldridge said. "Our guards really struggled, and we played out of rhythm and out of tempo."

K-State's starting backcourt, freshman Clent Stewart and sophomores Cartier Martin and Fred Peete, had a combined 7-of-23 from the field and 2-of-9 from

Wildcat tennis sweeps Drake

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Drake Bulldogs were no match for the women's tennis team Saturday.

The Wildcats swept the Bulldogs 9-0 at the Cottonwood Racquet Club in Manhattan. The win over the Bulldogs marked the largest season-opening defeat of an opponent in seven years.

In their first singles matches of the spring season, senior Maria Rosenberg defeated Zorana Stefanovic 6-3, 6-0 at the No. 1 spot to push her career record to 69-45, while freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia woh 6-1, 6-1 over Irina Kalashnikova at the No. 2 spot to move her record to 16-2.

At the No. 3 spot, junior Jessica Simosa defeated Eveline Rusdianto 6-4, 6-1 and freshman Olga Klimova beat Allison Wilkie 6-2, 6-2 at the No. 4 spot.

In doubles action, the No. 1 pairing of Rosenberg/Kvaratskhelia beat Stefanovic/Wilkie, 8-0, the No. 2 duo of Simosa/Klimova defeated Kalashnikova/Thomas, 8-1 and the No. 3 combination of senior Judith Diaz/Prochazkova were victorious over Rusdianto/Alkhatib, 8-3.

K-State captured the K-State-Kansas-Missouri team championship for the seventh straight year and kept the triangular's traveling trophy — the "Jug" — in Manhattan for another year.

Behind NCAA automatic qualifying performances from juniors Breanna Eveland and Kyle Lancaster and senior Chaytan Hill, the Wildcats scored a total of 257 points to Missouri's 236 and Kansas' 228.

Lancaster won the high jump with a new meet record and a season-best jump of 7-3 3/4.

Eveland set the Ahearn Field House and K-State record in the pole vault for the second straight week with a 13-9 1/4 vault to win the event.

Hill — Trackwire's No. 1 ranked triple-jumper in the nation — won the event with a Triangular record distance of 44-8 3/4.

Boxing | Former champion looking to leave retirement

LONDON — World heavyweight champion Vitali Klitschko is ready for a re-match with Lennox Lewis if the Briton were to come out of retirement.

Lewis

Bernd Boente, manager of WBC title-holder Klitschko, told BBC Radio Five Live: "I have talked to Vitali and he's happy to go."

News of a possible comeback by 39-year-old Lewis, who retired a year ago, stunned most observers. Lewis has spent much of 2004 in Jamaica with his partner and their first baby, the Mirror reported.

CFB | Neuheisel's lawsuit against NCAA starts Monday

The former Washington football coach has waited 17 months for his trial against the NCAA and his ex-employer, firmly believing he will be vindicated after the facts are presented.

Neuheisel

University officials are equally confident, saying it was "sad and painful" to dismiss Neuheisel but warranted because the coach wasn't fully honest with NCAA investigators when asked about his high-stakes gambling.

Neuheisel also claims the NCAA improperly meddled in his employment by pressuring Washington administrators to fire him. An NCAA investigation ultimately imposed no sanctions against the coach.

MLB | Houston Astros sign Franco on $700,000 contract

HOUSTON — John Franco agreed to a $700,000, one-year contract with the Houston Astros on Sunday.

Franco

Franco, 44, is the major league's all-time leader in saves by a left-hander. He was 2-7 with a 5.28 ERA with the New York Mets last season, his 14th year with the team. The Mets cut ties with Franco in December after declining to offer him arbitration.

better salaries if the student is willing to work night shifts.

"I'm on my own now; my parents don't really help me financially," Kowal said. "I make $4 an hour plus tips, so that's not bad."

Kevin Alton, freshman in secondary education, works an average of 24 hours a week at Dara's Fast Lane, and said he didn't think the balance between school and work is incredibly difficult.

"I had a harder time with it my first semester working," said Alton. "But it's definitely helped me just to see actually how much time I need to give in school."

Even though it may be challenging at times, having a part-time job during college could prove to be beneficial in students' lives, Kowal said.

"I encourage people to either take a part-time job or get involved with extracurricular activities," he said. "Most people are more efficient when their schedule's full."

$1 million for a mentor teacher program and $300,000 in additional school audits to assess spending.

"We're in a waiting mode now to see what the Supreme Court and the Legislature decide and how it influences the governor's budget," said Michelle Jones, communication coordinator for USD 383.

Jones said the district is doing what it can to influence funding, including working frequently with area legislators.

The governor's budget awaits approval from the legislature.

Fast facts

School finance

■ Dec. 2, 2003

Shawnee County District Judge Terry Bullock ruled that the funding formula in Kansas is unconstitutional. He ruled the school finance law is flawed because Kansas doesn't spend enough on its schools or distribute the money fairly, hindering poor and minority students whose scores are behind other students.

■ June 28, 2004

A 21-member select committee on school finance started revamping Kansas' school finance formula.

■ May 11, 2004

Bullock ruled that Kansas must close its public schools while it addresses problems in how it pays for education. Bullock blasted the Legislature for not solving spending discrepancies in its $2.6 billion school finance formula.

■ May 19, 2004

The Kansas Supreme Court granted a stay on Bullock's decision to close down public schools.

seven convicted murderers who have the potential to be affected by a change in the law.

The ruling will be sent to the Kansas Legislature this session.

Colombo said the law must be reviewed and will then go through a committee of federal and state affairs where it will be analyzed and regarded from every angle. The pros and cons will be assessed along with all probable consequences.

From there, it will go through the House of Representatives and be voted on and possibly amended. If everything goes as planned, it will make its way to the Senate and a new law will be made.

Activist groups such as the Kansas Coalition Against the Death Penalty and Amnesty International are using this opportunity to encourage the abolition of the death penalty in Kansas.

Donna Schenck-Hamlin, a faculty adviser for the K-State Amnesty International chapter, said they are pushing for absolute prohibition of the death penalty.

"It is the ultimate torture and ultimate injustice," Schenck-Hamlin said.

As long as the 90-day session runs routinely, Colombo said the results are expected by late spring or early summer.

behind the three-point arc. Massey – the only Wildcat to score in double figures – had 20 points.

The Aggies, on the other hand, had four players score in double figures and were led by sophomore guard Acie Law. Despite an ankle injury that forced Law to sit out most of the first half, the 6-foot-3 point guard was 3-of-4 from behind the arc and scored 14 of his 17 points in the second half to down the Wildcats.

"They hit a couple of deep threes on us against the zone, and I think that gave them a little momentum and more confidence, and we just couldn't find enough offense to fight that off," Wooldridge said.

The lone bright spot for the K-State offense was a 10-0 run with just under four minutes to play in the first half to tie the score at 30 heading into the locker room.

"We wanted to go into halftime either up or tied, and we went in tied," Stewart said. "We felt like we had the momentum going into the second half, and they came out and outplayed us in the second half."

Texas A&M came out of halftime with a 14-4 run and never looked back, scoring 20 points off of K-State turnovers and outrebounding the Wildcats 24-9.

"I think our guys played hard; we just didn't play very well, and we didn't handle the pressure very well," Wooldridge said. "If we would have been able to play better offense, that would have changed the outlook of how our guys saw the second half."

COLUMN | Wildcat men need passion to find wins

on Saturday, played with more intensity on both ends of the floor and looked like they flat-out wanted the game more than K-State.

One stat says it all.

Second-half rebounds: Texas A&M 24, K-State 9.

That was an ugly thing to see from the friendly confines of my El Paso Lane couch.

In the next month, K-State must travel to Missouri, Oklahoma State, Texas and Iowa State, and play Kansas at home.

Ouch.

For teams in major conferences wishing to make the NCAA Tournament, a .500 conference record is almost always a minimum requirement.

The Wildcats must go 7-5 the remainder of the conference season to reach that mark.

It will be tough, but it's achievable – depending on several factors.

One: senior forward Jeremiah Massey has got to get some help.

The Wildcats won't win another game if he is the lone player in double figures like he was on Saturday.

Sophomore forward Cartier Martin needs to get back on the tear he was on prior to the A&M game, and sophomore guard Fred Peete needs to become more in-tune with the offense and avoid 1-of-11 shooting performances like the one he had against A&M.

Either Peete or Martin, and sometimes both, must provide Massey with double-digit scoring support each night.

It was the team's most shining trait in the Missouri win and its point of demise against A&M.

The Wildcats must rebound, hustle and take charges like they did against the Tigers – not every once in a while, but every game.

K-State did not show that defensive fire against the Aggies.

Up next for the Wildcats is a clash with Iowa State on Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Cyclones are a horrible road team, and I wouldn't be the least bit surprised if we see a win and the same fire we saw against Missouri.

But here's the thing – it can't stop there.

The Wildcats have put themselves in a position in which they need to string a couple wins together.

The team must come out with passion on Saturday when it travels to Columbia for a rematch with Missouri.

Already owning three conference losses, there really isn't another option.

Family, friends to celebrate K-State senior's life at memorial today

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State community will celebrate the life of Dixie Spence today.

Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said the service will include memories from friends and family – an important step in the grieving process.

"The memorial service is an important opportunity for friends and students to share their stories about Dixie's life," Fallon said. "It helps to bring healing to share their feelings at this time, both painful and hurtful as well as joyous and happy memories. It's especially helpful for family members to hear their daughter was loved and accepted on our campus."

Dixie's father, Lee Spence, will be speaking, as well as Gwendolyn O'Neal, head of the Department of Apparel Marketing and Design. Time will also be available for anyone wishing to share a memory.

Dixie was killed in a car accident on Jan. 17 in her hometown of Hutchinson, Kan. She was a senior in apparel marketing and design and a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Because of Dixie's involvement in campus life, Fallon said many students, roommates and professors are feeling the loss.

"I think since she had been here so many years, she had developed many close friends," he said. "I think for many of them – roommates, her fiance, family and sorority sisters – they have been going through many ups and downs. Most have been able to go to class and carry on normal things, but it's always interrupted with thoughts and memories and grief."

Meghan Coulter, president of Kappa Alpha Theta, said the sorority has been meeting to share memories of Dixie and discussing plans for a permanent memorial. She said many

The great debate

The landmark abortion case

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Who is Roe?
A woman who went by Jane Roe during the trial but whose real name is Norma McCorvey. She challenged the criminal abortion laws in Texas in 1973.

Who is Wade?
Henry Wade is the Texas Attorney General who defended the anti-abortion law.

About the case
The Court's decision came on Jan. 22, 1973.

The ruling was based on the privacy rights of the 14th Amendment, that women have the right to privacy when making decisions concerning their own reproductive health.

It is estimated that there are over 1,365,000 abortions in the United States each year.

There have been approximately 40 million in the United States since 1973.

47 percent of all abortions in the United States are performed on women who have already had one or more abortions.

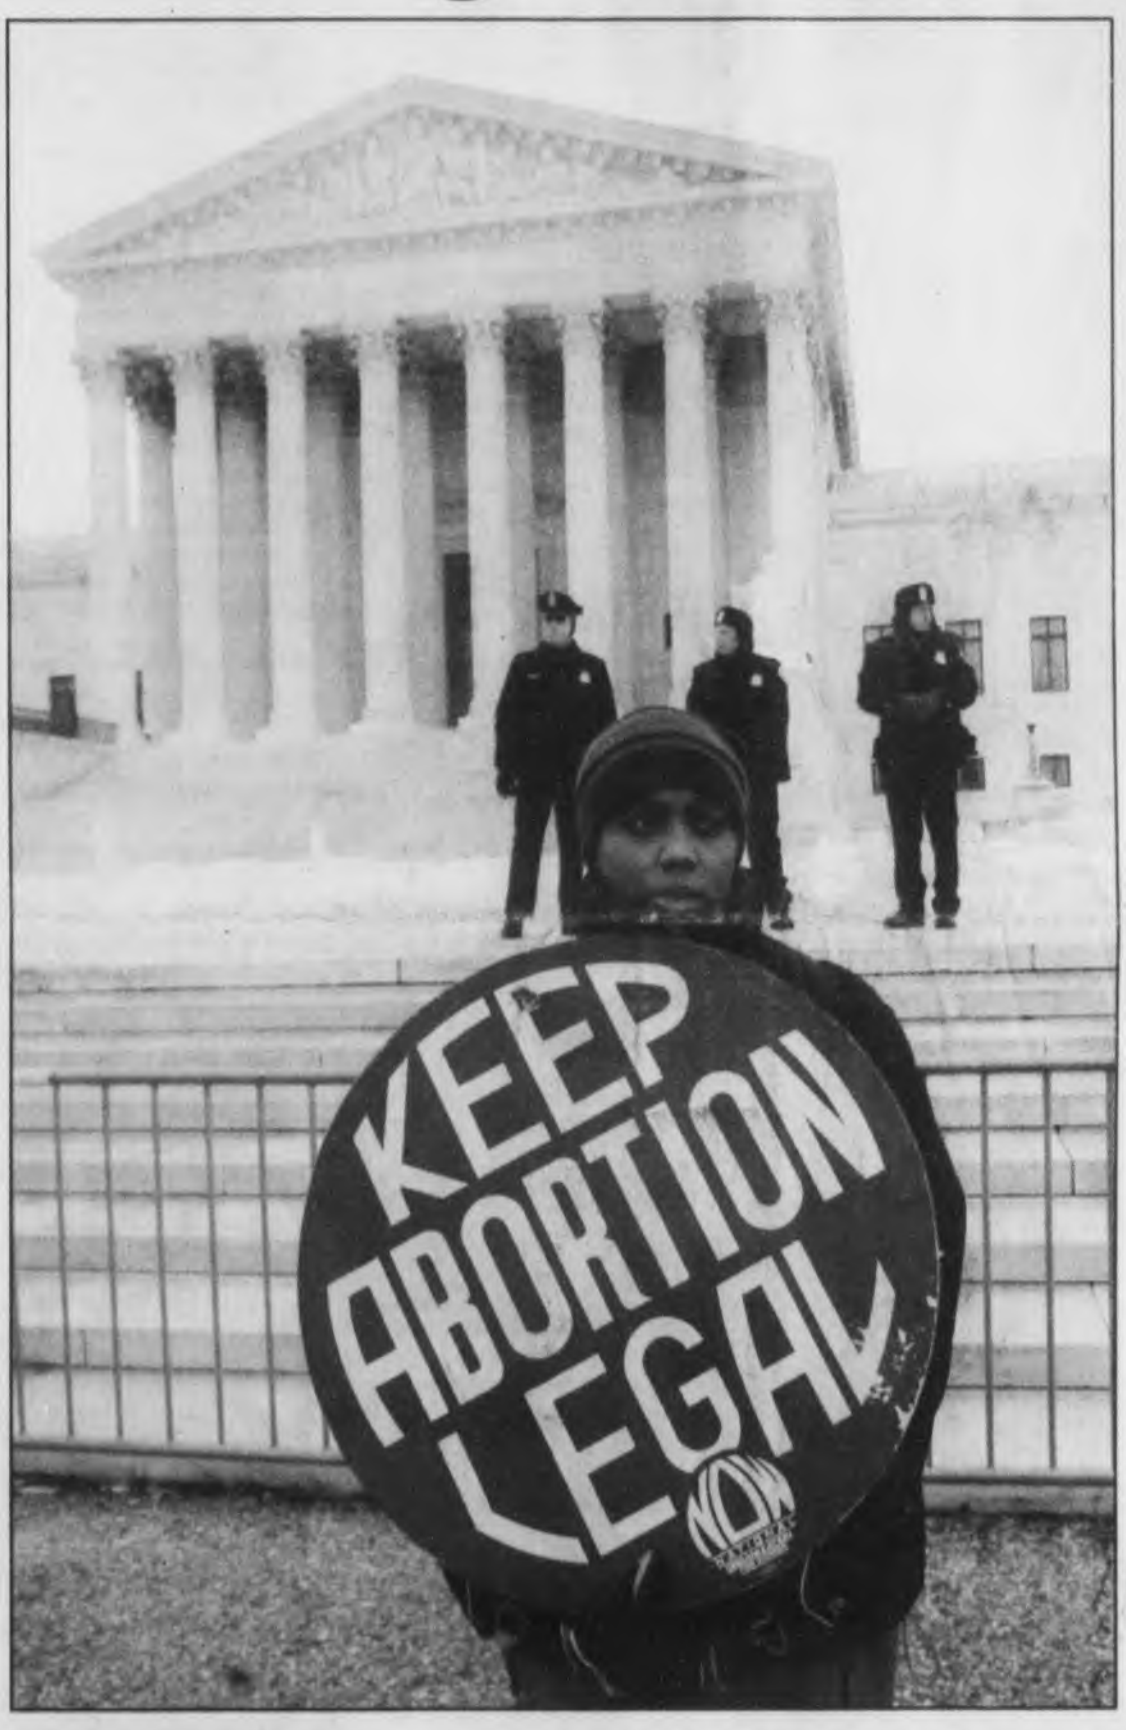
52 percent of all abortions are performed on women who are under the age of 25.

19 percent of all abortions are performed on teenagers.

The top two reasons women give for having the procedure are wanting to postpone childbearing and inability to afford a baby.

54 percent of women who had an abortion said they used some form of contraception during the month they became pregnant.

Nearly 90 percent of abortions in the U.S. occur in the first 12 weeks of pregnancy.



86 percent of U.S. counties and 95 percent of rural counties do not have an abortion provider.

42 states have enacted parental consent or notification laws requiring young women under 18 to get the permission from or inform one or more of their parents.

In 2004, one in five abortion clinics experienced some form of severe violence, including incidents of arson, bombings, blockades, invasions, death threats, stalking and murder.

Norma McCorvey (Jane Roe) has changed her view on abortion and now directs the Crossing Over Ministry, a nonprofit pro-life organization. Last year she filed a motion with the U.S. District Court in Dallas requesting that Roe v. Wade be reversed, and more recently a federal judge agreed to hear her arguments.

WASHINGTON D.C. – Pro-life advocates marched in Washington, D.C. on Monday, 32 years and two days after the Roe v. Wade Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion was handed down.

Pro-choice advocates marched on the same turf Saturday, 32 years after the decision was made.

In 1970, an unmarried pregnant woman fought to have a Texas anti-abortion ruling declared unconstitutional. Her right to privacy was upheld. Even today, people still argue which side is right.

In the nation's capital, thousands of pro-choice supporters marched through the city, held posters and chanted their beliefs. And although there were many displaying their beliefs in Washington, D.C., several organizations, including the National Organization for Women and NARAL Pro-Choice

Arson case causes $30,000 in damage

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An arson case caused $30,000 in damage Saturday.

At 2:08 a.m., the Manhattan Fire Department was alerted by 911 dispatchers to a fire in the 600 block of Vattier St.

Riley County Police Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the fire, which caused approximately $30,000 in damage to a storage shed and its contents, was believed to be caused by arson.

The structure was a 20' by 30' three car garage owned by Janet Weddle. Weddle said the structure had several valuable antiques inside.

Moldrup said an officer noticed flames rising from a storage shed behind the address.

He said the case has been referred to the Manhattan Fire Department for investigation.

Donald Francis, assistant chief of technical services for Manhattan Fire Department, said it is believed to be arson because the fire started on the outside of the structure and burned in.

"There are no other natural or accidental causes that could have caused it in that area," Francis said.

The fire, he said, started in a trash can that was leaned up against the building.

Francis said that though there is no direct link to other believed incidents of arson in the area, the circumstances are very similar.

"Just about all of these have happened in alleys or in trash cans," Francis said. "I think we're probably looking at the same person or group of people."

He said the department is concerned because the fires seem to be growing in intensity.

Three of the fires in question were set in the area of Bertrand and Ratone Streets between the late-night hours of Nov. 20, and the early-morning hours of Nov. 21, when a car, camper and other property were damaged in three fires.

The suspects were described as two white males, one 5'11" with brown hair, were seen leaving the area.

The damages in those cases were all $1,000 or less.

Francis said it was unclear whether these incidents were the result of careless pranks or if they were part of a growing trend, but in either case, the fire department wants to catch the person or persons responsible.

"These first started out with trash cans out away from structures, now it's burning trash cans up against combustible buildings," he said.

USD 383 begins superintendent search

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The superintendent search begins today.

A screening committee is reviewing all applicants today.

The committee, which is made up of Max Heim, Western Kansas field specialist for the Kansas Association of School Boards, and four other individuals will submit candidates for the USD 383 superintendent position to the school board.

Heim said the committee will review applications, background information and references. He said they will narrow the field to five candidates and one alternate. After that, the school board will interview candidates.

Michele Jones, communications coordinator for the district, said the public has a chance to meet the candidates on the day they are interviewed.

Public meeting times are scheduled for 2 p.m. at Anthony Middle School and 5 p.m. at Robinson Education Center.

Interview dates are tentatively scheduled for Jan. 27-29, Jan. 31 and Feb. 1, but they depend on the availability of the candidates, Jones said.

"Every candidate will follow the same interview schedule," she said.

A new superintendent will be announced around Feb. 11.

Jones said there was a series of meetings in October in which the qualities expected of the new superintendent were discussed.

The qualities included having vision, good budget knowledge, good communication skills, a personable attitude and a passion for education.

School board member Roger Brannan said such problems as declining enrollment and concerns about funding for the district are ones with which the new leader will have to deal.

"We have all sorts of uncertainties in front of us, and we want someone who will dive into the uncertainties and help come up with solutions," he said.

One area that will be negotiated is the salary for the new superintendent. Little's is $147,000.

"That will have to be resolved when we finally make a candidate selection," he said.

Teaching methods more important than demographics

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Having a minority teacher can increase student success, K-State students said.

Some students at K-State said that the race of the teacher shouldn't affect the success of a student but might affect their relationship outside of the classroom. A teacher's interaction with the student after class or in the teacher's office has a large impact on the student's level of comfort with their teacher.

"I think it boils down to the after-class relationship and if they are comfortable there. I don't really know, because I've never had a black teacher at K-State and I was undergrad for six years," said Joel Pearson, graduate assistant for the Multicultural Student Organizations.

Matt Ibarra, junior in marketing, agreed there might be a comfort-level issue in regards to a teacher's race.

"It may be easier at times to relate to them, but I've never had a real big problem with teachers of a different ethnic background, like not learning the subject," Ibarra said.

Ibarra is a Mexican American student and has never had a teacher of the same race during his three years at K-State.

Nelson Pratt, senior in mechanical engineering, agrees there might be an issue of comfort outside the classroom, but it shouldn't necessarily affect the student's success in the classroom.

"I don't think there is any correlation between a teacher's race and a student's success. I've had plenty of teachers who were of a different race than me and I did just as well in their classes," Pratt said.

Ibarra and Pearson never had an instructor of the same race during their time at K-State and said this creates a larger problem at K-State.

The College of Arts and Sciences understands that this issue has received a lot of attention and its department heads are committed to increasing diversity, said Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The College of Arts and Sciences has a good ratio of minority students to teachers. About 13.5 percent of its students are minorities and about 18.7 percent of the staff are minority as well.

White said that he is working with the department heads and most of them have attended diversity training.

The College of Arts and Sciences has also formed a diversity committee, which was formed to address minority issues in the college and at K-State.

It is also working to increase the recruitment of minority faculty and students into the College of Arts and Sciences.

"My own experience tells me, that we are seeing more of a commitment today as opposed to the past, in terms of increasing diversity in the students and faculty," White said.

Roy Barnett, instructor in sociology, anthropology and social work, agreed that a student might feel more comfortable with a minority teacher but not necessarily of the same race. He said the real issue is the instructor's methods and if a student can relate them.

Charles Sanders, assistant professor of history, said that the race of the instructor should not take precedent over his effectiveness as a teacher.

"It doesn't make a difference. If a student wants to learn, a student will learn, if they don't want to learn, they won't," Sanders said.

More than 3,000 students access Wildcat Information Network

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcat Information Network student portal has been up and running for almost two weeks now, and administrators say the program has been nearly problem-free.

Wolfington said the Web site has only experienced one period of interrupted service for updating.

"Mostly we've just been making sure that our code and some of the code we got from other people is working," Wolfington said.

He said since the Web site integrates information from different places they have to make sure everything works together.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich, who, along with Vice President Erik Ankrom, used the Wildcat Information Network idea as a campaign platform, said she is pleased with the success of the network.

"I think we're all really excited about the success following the release of the portal," Urkevich said. "However, I think there is a lot of work that will take place and really needs to take place."

Fast facts

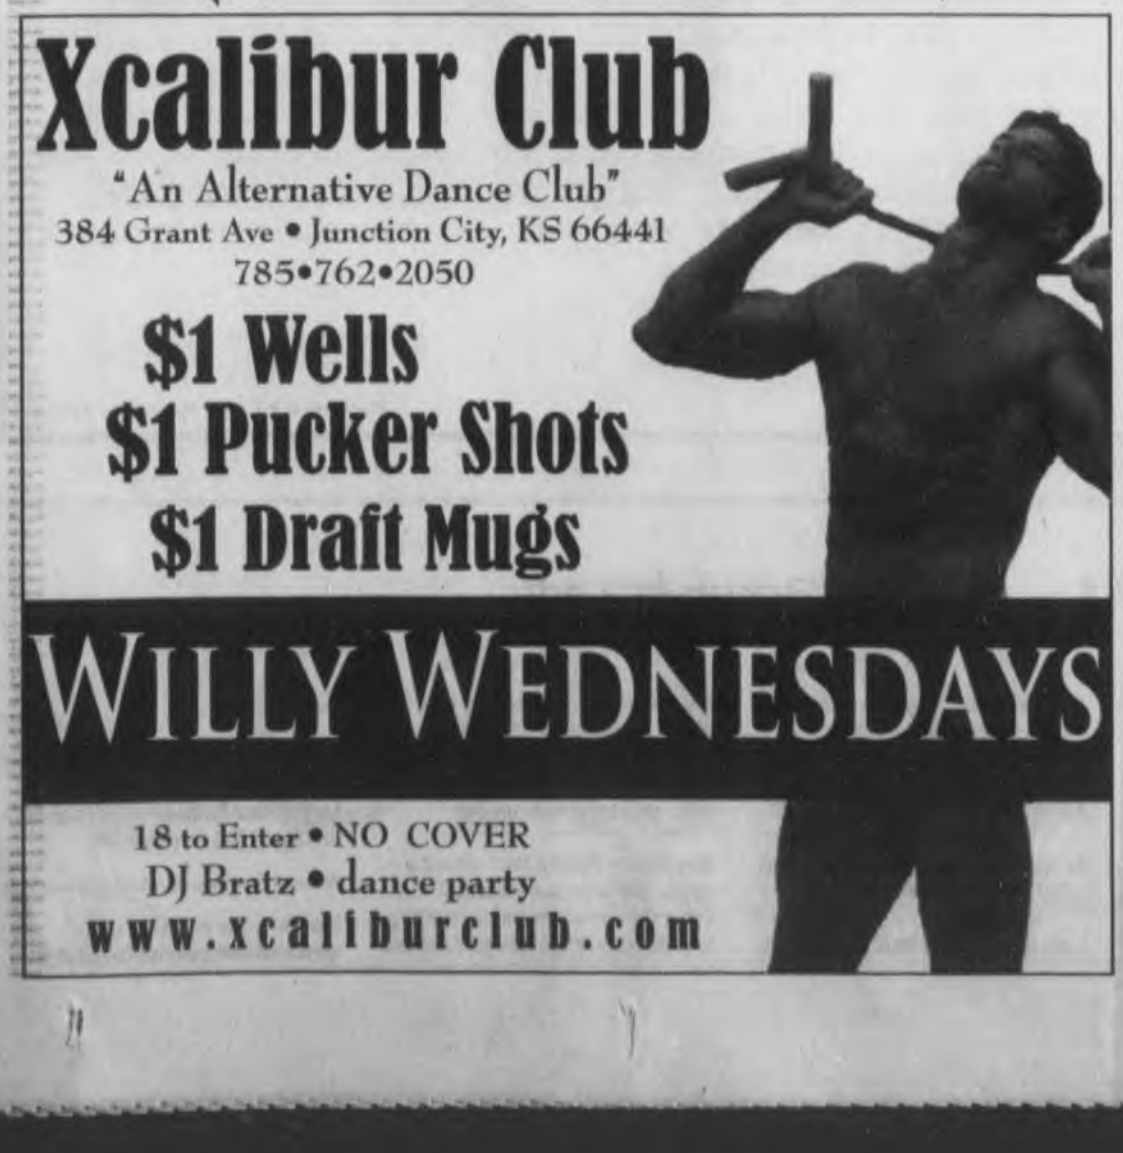
By the numbers

3,134 - Number of users registered on the Wildcat Information Network*
1,964 - Number of unique visitors to the Web site between Jan. 16 and Jan. 23
875 - Number of unique visitors to the Web site on its most active day, Jan. 17
75 - Number of users from Salina campus
13 - Number of days since the portal project was launched

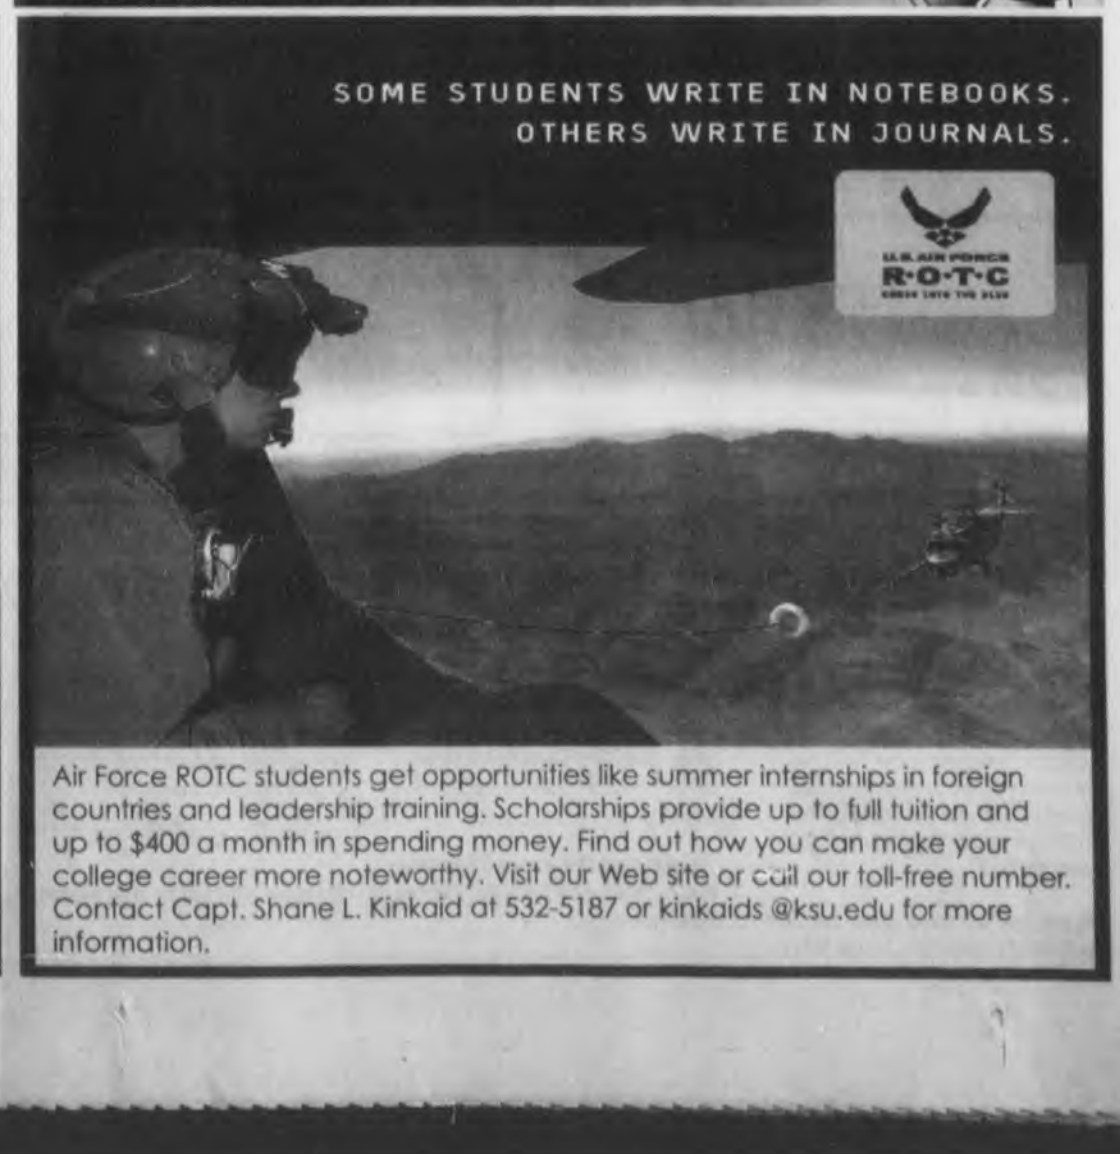
Urkevich said one problem with the Web site has been that students who have filled out the form with the Registrar's Office to have their personal information kept private can not be verified by the system and thus are unable to sign up.

"On CNS' database, if a student fills out that particular request, it's impossible for us to authenticate them," Chris Althoff, project director for WIN, said.

Althoff said they are working to fix the problem so that the roughly 200 students who have been affected so far can access the site.



As of 12 p.m. Monday, Althoff said 3,134 users had registered on the site, which has registered thousands of hits in its first two weeks of existence.



Urkevich said she would like to see more as advertising.

"I think it's a solid number, but I'd like to see it a lot higher," she said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Students can expand views inside classroom

A college career should be a chance for students to expand their world views, both inside and outside the classroom.

While studies show it is advantageous to be in a class with an instructor who is of the same culture, we cannot ignore the benefits of taking classes from those of other cultures.

The university should continue its hiring policies, conducting wide searches to find the best candidates.

The importance of finding and hiring instructors from a variety of backgrounds cannot be ignored, but the system of hiring the candidate most qualified for the job, no matter what his or her race, will prove to be the best end result for all parties.

In turn, students should not look to the culture, nationality, ethnicity or gender of their instructors as an excuse for not performing well in a class.

Every student should take it upon himself to make the most of the knowledge each instructor has to offer.

Ask questions. Visit your professor outside of the class time. Read about your instructor's country of origin.

We as students are here to perform in the classroom, and resisting instruction from those different than us will serve as a barrier to receiving the most important aspects of our education.

It is imperative that students take advantage of every opportunity to educate themselves – especially about things that cannot be learned from books.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Next best thing

Every time I hear someone complaining about America's oppressive role in the world, I'm reminded of a scene from the comedic classic Monty Python's Life of Brian.

In this scene, The People's Front of Judea is holding a secret meeting about conducting a raid on Pontius Pilate's palace. Reg, the tough-talking anti-imperialist leader of the group is psyching up his followers. "And what have the Romans ever given us?" he asks smugly.

Illustration by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

His question is clearly rhetorical but his group sees things in a different light. "The aqueduct?" suggests one man. "Sanitation," says another. "And the roads." Men around the room nod and murmur in agreement.

DAVID LIANG

Reg, looking clearly irate at this point, replies sharply "Well obviously the roads. The roads go without saying... Apart from the roads, sanitation, aqueduct, baths, education and public order, what have the Romans done for us?"

In the modern world, we often hear a slightly different but equally Pythonesque question: "What have the Americans ever given us?" Well, for starters, there's electric light, airplanes, computers, Starbucks, victory in World War II, green cards and a better way of life.

We live in a world that has "made in America" written all over it, and it's time for people to acknowledge that.

When it comes to the international scene, America leads the world in the promotion of democratic ideals and human rights. The truth is, no other nation in history has devoted as much time, energy and resources as the United States to the betterment of the human condition around the globe.

The Office of Economic Cooperation and Development noted that in 2003, the United States donated more than $15 billion in foreign aid to developing countries, outstripping Japan, the second highest donor, by nearly $7 billion.

Critics of the United States have long shaken their fists at the American "empire," calling it the same old British imperialist production with an added democratic soundtrack. But there are real differences between what the United States is doing today and what the British Empire did during the 19th century and the early half of the 20th century.

The American approach rests on a belief in open markets and free trade, as well as the gradual promotion of democracy to people who would otherwise not know it. The British, in contrast, were far more pragmatic rulers. They saw themselves as masters of the world and just wanted their subjects to shut up and pay their taxes.

After World War II, they left their colonies in a hurry and often in shambles. Comparing that with the economic miracles of post-war Japan and Germany made possible by development aid from the United States, which would you prefer?

Sure, the United States has acted in self-interest before and still does. Anyone who thinks the Iraq invasion was only about WMDs or "liberating the Iraqis" is blind. Still, can no good come of it? Traditionally, the United States has always treated its protectorates far better than, say, the Soviets ever would have.

It will take time, money and a lot of goodwill before the Iraqis will even begin to trust the United States, but the goal of setting up a functioning democracy, however secondary, is still in place, so we may yet see a free Iraq in the future.

In a utopian world, no single power would reign supreme as a global hegemon and every nation would uphold the principles of democracy and human rights. But since we don't live in an ideal world, having the United States on top may just be the next best thing.

Smoothie Shack takes off

New Union cart sells 100 drinks daily since opening

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The new smoothie cart in the K-State Student Union offers eight flavors including wild berry, peach, strawberry and cappuccino.

Steel said the stand sells about 50 to 100 smoothies a day.

"It's to help students maintain a healthy lifestyle," Steel said.

Steel, who owns two General Nutrition Centers in Manhattan, got the idea from students who came to his stores.

"This is a way for students to grab something on campus for a healthy alternative," Steel said.

The smoothies are all-natural and customers can add protein powder, white willow bark, ginseng, herbs and proteins, or just have the regular fruit smoothie.

Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Union, said that the Smoothie Shack is on a trial basis to see how students react.

"We try to start the new semester with some new program each year," Pitts said. "After a month or so, we'll evaluate then will look at incorporating it into a permanent location."

After being evaluated, the Union Governing Board will make the final decision.

"They are 100 percent natural fruit and are lower in calories," Steel said. "If you add some carbs, it would be the perfect meal."

Pitts said the Union had a smoothie shack in the past that did not do well, but they hope that this will give students something different.

"What we want to do is provide a variety of options," Pitts said. "It gives us an opportunity to support a local business."

Josh Yarrow	"It tasted like strawberry and quenched my thirst."	"It tasted like banana and was very good because I love bananas."	"It tasted like mango-orange, and it was my least favorite.."
Kendra Stiles	"It tastes like a strawberry smoothie... mmm."	"This one tasted pretty gross... kind of like baby food. The poor babies. Please don't sell this to innocent people."	"It tasted like something tropical. Jimmy Buffet would like this one."
Joanna Testa	"I like it. It's sweet and somewhat tart. There is a nice blend of flavors."	"It tastes smooth. The banana taste is not too strong."	"It tastes like orange and peach. It was tropical and refreshing."
Amanda Johnson	"It tastes like a strawberry-kiwi smoothie. It's very sweet."	"It tastes like those yellow banana-flavored popsicles. I liked it."	"It tastes like apricot or peach. It has a really bad aftertaste! Yuck!"

New cup of coffee in town; Dillons adds Starbucks

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Monday marked the opening of yet another place to get a daily coffee fix.

Starbucks fans can now go to the Dillons Store on Sarber Lane to get the cup of joe they so desperately need.

The reason for opening a Starbucks here is that Manhattan is a great community with a great college base, said Su-ella McKinzie, director of advertising and public relations for Dillons.

McKinzie also said Dillons had done no prior research as to how this would affect the local coffee shops that have already established themselves in Manhattan, but the locals don't seem to fear the threat of more competition.

Aldridge said that a little known fact is that when a Starbucks moves in, the coffee market actually expands, increasing business for the rest of the coffee shops.

Barry Bedford, store leader of the Hardback Cafe in Hastings, said that a reason coffee shops aren't afraid of losing business is that the new Starbucks is just a booth within a store. This is not be able to offer the same atmosphere as Radina's Coffeehouse and Bakery or the Hardback Cafe.

Trish Chaput, employee at Radina's Coffeehouse and Bakery, agreed it was the atmosphere that will keep the local stores going.

She said Dillons would be too crowded and noisy to be able to just relax with a cup of coffee.

Such atmospheres don't just attract random people, though. There are also groups of regulars that keep them going.

"We really do have a pretty strong regular clientele," Chaput said.

There will always be the die-hard Starbucks fans and people who get a cup while they're shopping, Bedford said.

"I love it. I actually worked there for two years in Chicago," she said.

"I think that everyone should go and try it, even if they don't like coffee. They have great hot chocolate."

Not all students are so excited about the corporation moving in, however.

"I hate Starbucks. I'm from Minnesota, and they have a whole movement to 'Secede from Starbucks Nation,'" Sarah Overbee, senior in apparel design, said.

The movement in Excelsior, Minn., Overbee's hometown, was a big deal, she said.

There were fliers and people picketing the new Starbucks that moved in.

"What's going to happen to the local businesses when the equivalent of Wal-Mart for coffee shops moves in?" she said.

Love them or hate them, the local coffee shops aren't afraid.

"They have good coffee, not as good as ours, but they have good coffee," Bedford said.

Warmer weather hasn't lowered bills

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While the East Coast is experiencing extreme blizzard-like conditions, residents in Manhattan are being spoiled by spring-like weather.

However, despite the abnormally high temperatures, residents' heating bills are not abnormally low.

"This weather is great – I've been wearing flip flops to class, which is unusual in January," Marti Prieb, senior in marketing, said.

"Surprisingly, our gas bills have not been lowered, though. They are about the same as last winter's."

Manhattan landlord Fay Fattaey said she has not seen any significant increase in her clients' heating bills, either.

"The price of energy is high right now, but I have not really seen an increase in bills," Fattaey said.

Fattaey said she speculated that many of her residents' high bills could be attributed to day-to-day carelessness, such as not shutting windows and doors tightly.

Ed Rice, associate vice-president of K-State's Department of Facilities, said the K-State campus, along with many other campuses nationwide, has been directly affected by rising natural gas prices as well as rising electrical costs.

In fact, Rice said, K-State has a contract with Chevron/Texaco to work together to reduce energy consumption on campus.

In an effort to stay within the budget, which this year was $10,330,000, Rice said, K-State has invested $20 million to improve various components on campus that contribute to high energy and electrical bills.

A few changes that have been made around campus are new lighting, the installation of toilets that use less water and more energy-efficient new boilers, he said.

"It is always our goal to try and stay within our budget each year, but it is very difficult," Rice said.

"We are already over our budget right now."

Rice said he believes the damage done by the recent hurricanes in Florida, Mississippi and other parts of the Gulf Coast could be a major reason why natural gas prices have risen.

Al Walker, manager of Kansas Gas Services in Topeka, said while external forces such as hurricanes do affect natural gas prices, he does not see the hurricanes affecting natural gas supply in Kansas.

Walker said that the main reason natural gas prices have risen is probably the fact that there are fewer people in the drilling industry.

Surprisingly, Walker said, natural gas prices have been lower than most anticipated.

"Forecasters predicted that by late fall (of 2004), gas prices were going to increase by 15 percent," he said.

"That never even happened."

Walker explained that the gas supply is indeed limited, but there is still a sufficient supply.

Not only that, he said, but the gas supply would not cause residents' heating bills to increase.

"Because of the milder winter, there has not been a need to generate a lot of energy," Walker said.

"Customers, then, are saving on consumption, not on rates."

Wildcats to battle Iowa State

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For No. 16 K-State, Tuesday's rematch with No. 18 Iowa State is a way to ease the sting of the 78-59 stomping the Wildcats suffered at the hands of the Cyclones in open league play.

During the Jan. 5 loss in Ames, Iowa State (15-1, 5-0) steamrolled K-State (14-3, 5-1) behind the three-point shooting of sophomore forward Megan Ronhovde and senior guard Anne O'Neil.

The duo combined to shoot 6-of-7 from behind the arc, helping Iowa State as a team hit 71 percent of its 3-pointers for the game.

K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker said the Wildcats will have a clear and simple goal tonight.

"Hopefully, we're a lot better than what we did up there," Wecker said. "We know what we need to do. We need to contain their shooters. If they're going to beat us, they're going to beat us in the post game."

Track & Field | Wildcats sweep weekly Big 12 honors

K-State juniors Kyle Lancaster and Breanna Eveland were named the Big 12 Indoor Athletes of the Week for the week of Jan. 18-23.

Eveland

The honor was the first of Eveland's career, as the Grand Rapids, Mich. native set the K-State women's pole vault record for a second consecutive week with a winning vault of 13-9 1/4.

Lancaster won the high jump for the third straight week; this time with a season-best height of 7-3 3/4. The honor was the second of Lancaster's career.

Both honors were the first for the Wildcats this season.

NFL | Schottenheimer named Ram's d-backs coach

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams on Monday hired Kurt Schottenheimer as their new secondary coach.

Schottenheimer replaces Perry Fewell, who left the Rams to work for the Chicago Bears. That move was announced last week and reunited Fewell with Bears coach Lovie Smith, who was the Rams' defensive coordinator from 2001 to 2003. Fewell joined the Rams in 2003 after spending the previous five seasons coaching defensive backs in Jacksonville.

Schottenheimer

Schottenheimer served as defensive backs coach for Green Bay last season. Before that, he worked as a defensive coordinator for the Detroit Lions from 2002-2003, for the Washington Redskins in 2001 and for the Kansas City Chiefs from 1999-2000.

NBA | Artest returns to practice with the Pacers

INDIANAPOLIS — Ron Artest practiced with the Indiana Pacers on Monday for the first time in over two months since he was suspended for fighting with Detroit fans.

The Pacers welcomed Artest back Friday, his first practice in over two months.

Artest

Artest did not comment as he left the practice court at Conseco Fieldhouse, but teammates and coach Rick Carlisle said his presence gave the struggling Pacers a much-needed lift.

"Having a guy like Ron in practice helps raise the level of practice in terms of intensity because he's one of the real warrior-type players we have in this league," Carlisle said.

Commissioner David Stern suspended Artest the remainder of the season after he bolted into the stands at The Palace on Nov. 19.

3 athletes to compete at NCAA

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's track and field team will have at least three representatives at the NCAA Indoor Championships in March.

Juniors Breanna Eveland and Kyle Lancaster punched their tickets on Saturday, joining senior Chaytan Hill, and helped the Wildcats win the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular for the seventh straight year.

On Saturday, she cleared 13-9 1/4 to break the record she set the previous Saturday at 13 - 7 1/4.

With her jump this past Saturday, Eveland reached the automatic-qualifying mark for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

"I am really excited about my performance," Eveland said. "Getting an automatic-qualifying mark was definitely one of my goals for this season."

It was the third straight week Lancaster had won the event. He also reached the NCAA qualifying mark.

"It's just nice to get the automatic mark and get it out of the way," Lancaster said. "Now I don't have to worry about it because I already have my ticket."

Along with getting the NCAA qualifying mark, Lancaster also set the Triangular high jump record with a jump of 7 - 3 3/4.

The old record was set by Charles Burney of K-State in 1999 at 7 - 3 1/4.

Hill broke the previous record of 43 - 21/4, set by Vanitta Kinard of K-State in 1998.

Unlike Lancaster and Eveland, Hill had already reached the NCAA qualifying mark, which she earned in December.

Head Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was impressed with Hill.

"Chaytan had a huge jump," Rovelto said. "That distance indoors and this early is really very good.

"That could go through the whole season being the longest indoor jump in the country."

The Wildcats will be on the road for the first time this season next Saturday at the UNI Invitational in Waterloo, Iowa.

Freshman discovered talent as a young girl

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After she set a K-State record for the most wins by a freshman last fall, Tamar Kvaratskhelia shows no sign of letting up.

Tamar, or "Tako," as her teammates affectionately call her, is a talented international player who had played tennis in three different countries and participated in countless tournaments before chance landed her at K-State.

As a young girl in Tbilisi, Georgia – a small country in eastern Europe – she didn't have much interest in tennis until her father introduced her to the sport.

A couple of months and a tournament title later, she discovered her talent and love for the game.

"I was seven when I started playing tennis," she said. "My father said, 'If I have a girl, she will be a tennis player. If I have a boy, he will be a soccer player.'"

"At first I did not want to play tennis. I thought it was boring and hard work. But when I played my first tournament, I took first place. That is when I initially got into it."

Kvaratskhelia continued to play tennis in Georgia until the age of 15, when she received an invitation to train in several places in Ukraine.

She lived and trained in Ukraine for the next four years, where she was ranked No. 3 in the nation in the under-18 division.

She then moved to the Czech Republic to play for four more months.

Kvaratskhelia never had any contact with K-State until she played at a United States Tennis Association tournament in Miami last winter.

"Last winter I was in Miami at a tournament, and they told me that Kansas State University – if I would like to go there to study and play tennis – was asking me to come," she said. "I went back home and then was told that Kansas State had an invitation and a scholarship for me."

Kvaratskhelia accepted the offer from K-State and arrived in Manhattan in time for the fall season. Since signing with K-State, Kvaratskhelia had the most successful fall season of any freshman in K-State history, finishing with a 15-2 record in her first semester of collegiate play.

Although she has a long time until she is finished as a Wildcat, after college she said she hopes to someday try her hand in coaching.

"I've been thinking about it a lot," she said. "I would like to be a coach. An assistant or head coach – something in sports."

Columnist reveals excitement from world of K-State sports

Today, I am going to comment on some of the happenings in the world of K-State sports. It has been an eventful week, and I always have an opinion on Wildcat athletics, so here it goes.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

What a weekend for the Wildcat women.

On Saturday, K-State won 55-53 at Texas Tech, one of the hardest places to play in women's college basketball.

It was a huge win in a very tough environment, and the players were relieved to get the win.

Tech has a tradition in which its band plays its school song after every game and the players, coaches and fans all sing it together.

As its song played, the K-State players continued to celebrate with their families and the other K-State fans who had made the trip.

She later called the Wildcats' celebration during Tech's precious school song "not very classy."

I'm sorry, but when did celebrating a huge win become wrong?

Here's an idea: If you don't like teams celebrating on your home court, then don't lose to them. Simple as that.

The person who lacked class was Coach Sharp, for having the nerve to think it was disrespectful of the Wildcats to celebrate, and for having the audacity to call the K-State players and coaches and their "actions" unclassy after the game.

The fact is, no team in the nation has more class than the K-State's. They carry themselves so well and are so polite, and I'm sure they meant no harm to the Tech players or fans.

Consider it a compliment that the K-State players celebrated so much, Coach Sharp. It means you have a good team, and it was that big of a deal to win there.

TRACK AND FIELD

On Saturday, K-State won the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular for the seventh straight year, and kept the "Jug" – the traveling trophy that goes to the winner – in Manhattan for yet another year.

I just love it when the Wildcats whoop up on the Jayhawks and the Tigers.

It doesn't matter what sport it is.

Seeing K-State win the Triangular once again makes my heart swell with pride that much more.

Also, as I watched Wildcat high-jumper Kyle Lancaster clear the bar at 7-3 3/4 on Saturday, I couldn't help but be amazed.

It blows my mind to think that he could jump over K-State basketball player Tyler Hughes – who stands at 6-foot-11 – and still have almost five inches of room to spare.

Wow.

A home for local music, vinyl records

Sarah Cunnick, owner and operator of SOS Music, prepares the cash register for business Monday morning. SOS Music is a new store that offers used CDs and vinyl records in Aggieville.

Long awaited SOS Music store opens in Aggieville despite setbacks

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sarah Cunnick signed the lease the day before Thanksgiving and, less than a month later, she fulfilled her longtime dream by officially opening her own record store.

Sarah Cunnick, along with sister Leah Cunnick, recently opened SOS (Sisters of Sound) Music in Aggieville. The store specializes in new and used vinyl albums and CDs.

"Opening my own record store has been something that I talked about for years and I had talked it over with many different people. It finally worked out," Sarah Cunnick said.

With the opening of SOS Music, she is also looking to change a string of bad luck that has shrouded her past musical endeavors.

After working at Streetside Records in Aggieville for nine years, she and fellow employees were disheartened after the business's closing five years ago.

Cunnick's luck seemed to change after she began selling CDs in operation with the Game Guy store. However, a gust of wind toppled part of a newly constructed wall on Game Guy, causing the store to close and leaving her with no place to run her business.

Ever determined, she kept her ears open and jumped at the opportunity to sign a lease on a store in November.

"After Streetside closed, I really wanted to see another record store open up in Aggieville, but it's not something someone can do alone," she said.

Sarah Cunnick said that the support that she has received from fellow Aggieville businesses, friends and family members has been monumental.

"I can't stress enough how important their help has been. So many people have been great and you can't have a successful business without support," she said.

SOS Music is located in the alleyway next to Olson's Shoes. The walls of SOS Music are painted in lively shades of orange and yellow and the music bins are bright blue. The nostalgic scent of dusty records mingles with the fresh odor of newly plastic- wrapped CDs.

Purple signs advertising all used vinyls for $2, 10 percent off new CDs and 20 percent off used CDs adorn the walls. A maroon vintage leather couch is nestled next to a vinyl listening station where one can check out a record and gaze through the large picture windows.

"We do a lot with selling local music. We are big supporters of the local music scene," Leah Cunnick said.

"Along with vinyl and CDs, we also sell parts for record players and we can special order CDs."

Cunnick's devotion to her store is illustrated by the merchandise she used to start SOS Music.

Sarah Cunnick said that most of the records and CDs with which she started came from her personal collection. Sarah Cunnick is also using her knowledge of minor labels to help customers find rare albums.

"Not only are we knowledgeable, but our prices are reasonable and the majority of our used merchandise is in mint condition. We are also pretty flexible with our prices," Sarah Cunnick said.

Sarah Cunnick said that SOS Music is the perfect place to find rare music.

"For people who cannot find something, stop here. We go through many different distributors and we can special order. If it's out there, we'll find it," she said.

Students are also excited by the prospect of a new record store in Aggieville.

"This store is great because LPs sound better than CDs. They have that distinct sound and they can be hard to find. This store also gives more variety to Aggieville and we all know that Manhattan needs a little more culture," said Charles Crummins, senior in biology.

Band creates album that touches listener's emotional side

"Fabulous Muscles"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

To say that Jamie Stewart's band Xiu Xiu is an acquired taste is an understatement. Ever since its debut album, "Knife Play," in 2002, Stewart has been challenging the music community by using bizarre instrumentation and unusually dark lyrical subjects that are sung in an over-the-top delivery.

Xiu Xiu has slowly been gaining recognition as its sound becomes more unified.

Stewart uses drum beats, synthesizer drones, guitar and his powerful tenor to create an album that is as affecting as it is brilliant.

The album opens with "Crank Heart," immediately setting the stage for what is to come. The song sounds like it could fall apart at any minute, but Stewart's lyrics and the pounding synth chorus hold it together.

The song, "I Luv the Valley OH!" is quite possibly Xiu Xiu's best song released to date. Stewart's strained pop sensibility is combined with lyrics about the disintegration of the suburbs and sung with perfect theatrics.

Stewart sings lines such as, "That's a heart that you made/And I won't rest until I break it" and "That's a razor and you make a threat/And I won't rest 'cause I heard it all before" with a chillingly exaggerated tone. The highlight of the song is the release of built-up tension and emotion created in the track.

The album almost dissolves into chaos on the song, "Support Our Troops, OH!" in which he shows his anti-war sentiment not through sloganeering but by examining the psychological drama of the battlefield. The lyrics along with the droning backing music wrench the stomach.

Another album examines an abusive relationship in ways that few artists have before: "Cremate me after you cum on my lips/Place my ashes in a vase beneath your workout bench."

The trimmed down instrumentation creates a powerful song. "Fabulous Muscles" is not just dark songs about dark subjects. "Clowne Towne" brings about humor as Stewart sings to a person who has screwed up his own life: "Your true self has become weak and alone and annoying."

Xiu Xiu has created a vital album that is anguished but given a treatment by Stewart that brings an emotional accessibility to the mix.

Matt LeMay from www.pitchforkmedia.com highlights this: Xiu Xiu proves that "sometimes you have to reach pretty far up your ass to find your heart strings."

Listening in on Kidman

Detectives have launched an investigation into an electronic listening device that was allegedly planted outside actress Nicole Kidman's Sydney mansion, police said Tuesday.

Kidman

The device was found near a security car that was monitoring Kidman's home from the street, chief bodyguard Neil McMaster told Sydney's The Daily Telegraph for its Tuesday edition.

He said he believed the device was intended to intercept conversations between the Australian-born Oscar-winning actress and her bodyguards outside the mansion.

Carson's legacy lives on

Per Johnny Carson's request, there will be no memorial service for the late-night TV king who died Sunday. But per his legion of admirers, there will be a multitude of tributes.

Carson

Monday's Tonight Show paid homage to its former host in a special episode, NBC said. Longtime Carson sidekick Ed McMahon and longtime Carson favorites Bob Newhart and Don Rickles were to appear with current host Jay Leno, along with Drew Carey and singer k.d. lang.

Standing on the Tonight stage more than a decade into his own run as its star, Leno opened the telecast by saying he still felt like a guest in "his" — Carson's — "house."

"Because he built this place," Leno said. "Everyone who does this for a living owes it to him. Johnny was the best, plain and simple."

Baby girl for Rowling

"Harry Potter" author J.K. Rowling has given birth to a baby girl, a Scottish hospital said. The 39-year-old British author, who shot to fame with the publication of the popular boy-wizard fantasy book series, gave birth to her third child at Edinburgh Royal Infirmary on Sunday, a hospital spokesman said. The baby girl hasn't been named.

Rowling

Rowling and her husband, Neil Murray, have a 22-month-old son, David. The author also has an 11-year-old daughter, Jessica, from a previous marriage.

The hospital spokesman said the writer and her baby were both doing well and were discharged from the hospital early Monday.

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams on Monday hired Kurt Schottenheimer as their new secondary coach.

Schottenheimer replaces Perry Fewell, who left the Rams to work for the Chicago Bears. That move was announced last week and reunited Fewell with Bears coach Lovie Smith, who was the Rams' defensive coordinator from 2001 to 2003. Fewell joined the Rams in 2003 after spending the previous five seasons coaching defensive backs in Jacksonville.

Schottenheimer

Schottenheimer served as defensive backs coach for Green Bay last season. Before that, he worked as a defensive coordinator for the Detroit Lions from 2002-2003, for the Washington Redskins in 2001 and for the Kansas City Chiefs from 1999-2000.

NBA | Artest returns to practice with the Pacers

INDIANAPOLIS — Ron Artest practiced with the Indiana Pacers on Monday for the first time in over two months since he was suspended for fighting with Detroit fans.

The Pacers welcomed Artest back Friday, his first practice in over two months.

Artest

Artest did not comment as he left the practice court at Conseco Fieldhouse, but teammates and coach Rick Carlisle said his presence gave the struggling Pacers a much-needed lift.

"Having a guy like Ron in practice helps raise the level of practice in terms of intensity because he's one of the real warrior-type players we have in this league," Carlisle said.

Commissioner David Stern suspended Artest the remainder of the season after he bolted into the stands at The Palace on Nov. 19.

3 athletes to compete at NCAA

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's track and field team will have at least three representatives at the NCAA Indoor Championships in March.

Juniors Breanna Eveland and Kyle Lancaster punched their tickets on Saturday, joining senior Chaytan Hill, and helped the Wildcats win the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular for the seventh straight year.

On Saturday, she cleared 13-9 1/4 to break the record she set the previous Saturday at 13 - 7 1/4.

With her jump this past Saturday, Eveland reached the automatic-qualifying mark for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

"I am really excited about my performance," Eveland said. "Getting an automatic-qualifying mark was definitely one of my goals for this season."

It was the third straight week Lancaster had won the event. He also reached the NCAA qualifying mark.

"It's just nice to get the automatic mark and get it out of the way," Lancaster said. "Now I don't have to worry about it because I already have my ticket."

Along with getting the NCAA qualifying mark, Lancaster also set the Triangular high jump record with a jump of 7 - 3 3/4.

The old record was set by Charles Burney of K-State in 1999 at 7 - 3 1/4.

Hill broke the previous record of 43 - 21/4, set by Vanitta Kinard of K-State in 1998.

Unlike Lancaster and Eveland, Hill had already reached the NCAA qualifying mark, which she earned in December.

Head Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was impressed with Hill.

"Chaytan had a huge jump," Rovelto said. "That distance indoors and this early is really very good.

"That could go through the whole season being the longest indoor jump in the country."

The Wildcats will be on the road for the first time this season next Saturday at the UNI Invitational in Waterloo, Iowa.

Freshman discovered talent as a young girl

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After she set a K-State record for the most wins by a freshman last fall, Tamar Kvaratskhelia shows no sign of letting up.

Tamar, or "Tako," as her teammates affectionately call her, is a talented international player who had played tennis in three different countries and participated in countless tournaments before chance landed her at K-State.

As a young girl in Tbilisi, Georgia – a small country in eastern Europe – she didn't have much interest in tennis until her father introduced her to the sport.

A couple of months and a tournament title later, she discovered her talent and love for the game.

"I was seven when I started playing tennis," she said. "My father said, 'If I have a girl, she will be a tennis player. If I have a boy, he will be a soccer player.'"

"At first I did not want to play tennis. I thought it was boring and hard work. But when I played my first tournament, I took first place. That is when I initially got into it."

Kvaratskhelia continued to play tennis in Georgia until the age of 15, when she received an invitation to train in several places in Ukraine.

She lived and trained in Ukraine for the next four years, where she was ranked No. 3 in the nation in the under-18 division.

She then moved to the Czech Republic to play for four more months.

Kvaratskhelia never had any contact with K-State until she played at a United States Tennis Association tournament in Miami last winter.

"Last winter I was in Miami at a tournament, and they told me that Kansas State University – if I would like to go there to study and play tennis – was asking me to come," she said. "I went back home and then was told that Kansas State had an invitation and a scholarship for me."

Bottom: Tamar Kvaratskhelia returns a volley during doubles action Saturday afternoon at the Cottonwood Racquet Club. Kvaratskhelia won her doubles match 6-1, 6-1 to help the Wildcats to a 7-0 victory over the Drake Bulldogs.

Kvaratskhelia accepted the offer from K-State and arrived in Manhattan in time for the fall season. Since signing with K-State, Kvaratskhelia had the most successful fall season of any freshman in K-State history, finishing with a 15-2 record in her first semester of collegiate play.

Although she has a long time until she is finished as a Wildcat, after college she said she hopes to someday try her hand in coaching.

"I've been thinking about it a lot," she said. "I would like to be a coach. An assistant or head coach – something in sports."

Columnist reveals excitement from world of K-State sports

Today, I am going to comment on some of the happenings in the world of K-State sports. It has been an eventful week, and I always have an opinion on Wildcat athletics, so here it goes.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

On Saturday, K-State won 55-53 at Texas Tech, one of the hardest places to play in women's college basketball.

It was a huge win in a very tough environment, and the players were relieved to get the win.

Tech has a tradition in which its band plays its school song after every game and the players, coaches and fans all sing it together.

As its song played, the K-State players continued to celebrate with their families and the other K-State fans who had made the trip.

She later called the Wildcats' celebration during Tech's precious school song "not very classy."

I'm sorry, but when did celebrating a huge win become wrong?

Here's an idea: If you don't like teams celebrating on your home court, then don't lose to them. Simple as that.

The person who lacked class was Coach Sharp, for having the nerve to think it was disrespectful of the Wildcats to celebrate, and for having the audacity to call the K-State players and coaches and their "actions" unclassy after the game.

The fact is, no team in the nation has more class than the K-State's. They carry themselves so well and are so polite, and I'm sure they meant no harm to the Tech players or fans.

Consider it a compliment that the K-State players celebrated so much, Coach Sharp. It means you have a good team, and it was that big of a deal to win there.

TRACK AND FIELD

On Saturday, K-State won the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular for the seventh straight year, and kept the "Jug" – the traveling trophy that goes to the winner – in Manhattan for yet another year.

I just love it when the Wildcats whoop up on the Jayhawks and the Tigers.

It doesn't matter what sport it is.

Seeing K-State win the Triangular once again makes my heart swell with pride that much more.

Also, as I watched Wildcat high-jumper Kyle Lancaster clear the bar at 7-3 3/4 on Saturday, I couldn't help but be amazed.

It blows my mind to think that he could jump over K-State basketball player Tyler Hughes – who stands at 6-foot-11 – and still have almost five inches of room to spare.

Wow.

A home for local music, vinyl records

Sarah Cunnick, owner and operator of SOS Music, prepares the cash register for business Monday morning. SOS Music is a new store that offers used CDs and vinyl records in Aggieville.

Long awaited SOS Music store opens in Aggieville despite setbacks

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sarah Cunnick signed the lease the day before Thanksgiving and, less than a month later, she fulfilled her longtime dream by officially opening her own record store.

Sarah Cunnick, along with sister Leah Cunnick, recently opened SOS (Sisters of Sound) Music in Aggieville. The store specializes in new and used vinyl albums and CDs.

"Opening my own record store has been something that I talked about for years and I had talked it over with many different people. It finally worked out," Sarah Cunnick said.

With the opening of SOS Music, she is also looking to change a string of bad luck that has shrouded her past musical endeavors.

After working at Streetside Records in Aggieville for nine years, she and fellow employees were disheartened after the business's closing five years ago.

Cunnick's luck seemed to change after she began selling CDs in operation with the Game Guy store. However, a gust of wind toppled part of a newly constructed wall on Game Guy, causing the store to close and leaving her with no place to run her business.

Ever determined, she kept her ears open and jumped at the opportunity to sign a lease on a store in November.

"After Streetside closed, I really wanted to see another record store open up in Aggieville, but it's not something someone can do alone," she said.

Sarah Cunnick said that the support that she has received from fellow Aggieville businesses, friends and family members has been monumental.

"I can't stress enough how important their help has been. So many people have been great and you can't have a successful business without support," she said.

SOS Music is located in the alleyway next to Olson's Shoes. The walls of SOS Music are painted in lively shades of orange and yellow and the music bins are bright blue. The nostalgic scent of dusty records mingles with the fresh odor of newly plastic- wrapped CDs.

Purple signs advertising all used vinyls for $2, 10 percent off new CDs and 20 percent off used CDs adorn the walls. A maroon vintage leather couch is nestled next to a vinyl listening station where one can check out a record and gaze through the large picture windows.

"We do a lot with selling local music. We are big supporters of the local music scene," Leah Cunnick said.

"Along with vinyl and CDs, we also sell parts for record players and we can special order CDs."

Cunnick's devotion to her store is illustrated by the merchandise she used to start SOS Music.

Sarah Cunnick said that most of the records and CDs with which she started came from her personal collection. Sarah Cunnick is also using her knowledge of minor labels to help customers find rare albums.

"Not only are we knowledgeable, but our prices are reasonable and the majority of our used merchandise is in mint condition. We are also pretty flexible with our prices," Sarah Cunnick said.

Sarah Cunnick said that SOS Music is the perfect place to find rare music.

"For people who cannot find something, stop here. We go through many different distributors and we can special order. If it's out there, we'll find it," she said.

Students are also excited by the prospect of a new record store in Aggieville.

"This store is great because LPs sound better than CDs. They have that distinct sound and they can be hard to find. This store also gives more variety to Aggieville and we all know that Manhattan needs a little more culture," said Charles Crummins, senior in biology.

"Fabulous Muscles"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

To say that Jamie Stewart's band Xiu Xiu is an acquired taste is an understatement. Ever since its debut album, "Knife Play," in 2002, Stewart has been challenging the music community by using bizarre instrumentation and unusually dark lyrical subjects that are sung in an over-the-top delivery.

Xiu Xiu has slowly been gaining recognition as its sound becomes more unified.

Stewart uses drum beats, synthesizer drones, guitar and his powerful tenor to create an album that is as affecting as it is brilliant.

The album opens with "Crank Heart," immediately setting the stage for what is to come. The song sounds like it could fall apart at any minute, but Stewart's lyrics and the pounding synth chorus hold it together.

The song, "I Luv the Valley OH!" is quite possibly Xiu Xiu's best song released to date. Stewart's strained pop sensibility is combined with lyrics about the disintegration of the suburbs and sung with perfect theatrics.

Stewart sings lines such as, "That's a heart that you made/And I won't rest until I break it" and "That's a razor and you make a threat/And I won't rest 'cause I heard it all before" with a chillingly exaggerated tone. The highlight of the song is the release of built-up tension and emotion created in the track.

The album almost dissolves into chaos on the song, "Support Our Troops, OH!" in which he shows his anti-war sentiment not through sloganeering but by examining the psychological drama of the battlefield. The lyrics along with the droning backing music wrench the stomach.

Another album examines an abusive relationship in ways that few artists have before: "Cremate me after you cum on my lips/Place my ashes in a vase beneath your workout bench."

The trimmed down instrumentation creates a powerful song. "Fabulous Muscles" is not just dark songs about dark subjects. "Clowne Towne" brings about humor as Stewart sings to a person who has screwed up his own life: "Your true self has become weak and alone and annoying."

Xiu Xiu has created a vital album that is anguished but given a treatment by Stewart that brings an emotional accessibility to the mix.

Matt LeMay from www.pitchforkmedia.com highlights this: Xiu Xiu proves that "sometimes you have to reach pretty far up your ass to find your heart strings."

Listening in on Kidman

Detectives have launched an investigation into an electronic listening device that was allegedly planted outside actress Nicole Kidman's Sydney mansion, police said Tuesday.

Kidman

The device was found near a security car that was monitoring Kidman's home from the street, chief bodyguard Neil McMaster told Sydney's The Daily Telegraph for its Tuesday edition.

He said he believed the device was intended to intercept conversations between the Australian-born Oscar-winning actress and her bodyguards outside the mansion.

Carson's legacy lives on

Per Johnny Carson's request, there will be no memorial service for the late-night TV king who died Sunday. But per his legion of admirers, there will be a multitude of tributes.

Carson

Monday's Tonight Show paid homage to its former host in a special episode, NBC said. Longtime Carson sidekick Ed McMahon and longtime Carson favorites Bob Newhart and Don Rickles were to appear with current host Jay Leno, along with Drew Carey and singer k.d. lang.

Standing on the Tonight stage more than a decade into his own run as its star, Leno opened the telecast by saying he still felt like a guest in "his" — Carson's — "house."

"Because he built this place," Leno said. "Everyone who does this for a living owes it to him. Johnny was the best, plain and simple."

Baby girl for Rowling

"Harry Potter" author J.K. Rowling has given birth to a baby girl, a Scottish hospital said. The 39-year-old British author, who shot to fame with the publication of the popular boy-wizard fantasy book series, gave birth to her third child at Edinburgh Royal Infirmary on Sunday, a hospital spokesman said. The baby girl hasn't been named.

Rowling

Rowling and her husband, Neil Murray, have a 22-month-old son, David. The author also has an 11-year-old daughter, Jessica, from a previous marriage.

The hospital spokesman said the writer and her baby were both doing well and were discharged from the hospital early Monday.

U.N. commemorates Nazi camp liberation

By Nick Wadhams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With calls of "never again," the U.N. General Assembly commemorated the 60th anniversary of the liberation of the Nazi death camps with a special session Monday, a stark change for a body that has been reluctant to address the extermination of the Jews during World War II.

Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel, a Nobel peace prize winner, joined world leaders in confronting a question that has long haunted the United Nations: Do its member states have the will to stop future genocide? With mass atrocities in Sudan's Darfur region, the question took on new poignancy.

"The Jewish witness that I am speaks of my people's suffering as a warning," Wiesel told the General Assembly. "He sounds the alarm to prevent these tragedies from being done to others. And yes, I am convinced if the world had listened to those of us who tried to speak we may have prevented Darfur, Cambodia, Bosnia and naturally Rwanda."

There were subtle reflections of a changed stance at the United Nations, where efforts to condemn anti-Semitism and commemorate the liberation of the camps had been blocked for years by the Soviet Union. In 2003, Ireland withdrew a General Assembly resolution condemning anti-Semitism because of Muslim and Arab opposition.

In his remarks Monday, Secretary-General Kofi Annan made a rare reference by a U.N. chief to the Holocaust by name before the General Assembly. Later Monday, a photography exhibit opened at U.N. headquarters featuring images from the death camps, the first time an exhibit about the Holocaust is being shown at the United Nations.

"We must be on the watch for any revival of anti-Semitism, and ready to act against the new forms of it that are appearing today," Annan said. "That obligation binds us not only to the Jewish people, but to all others that have been, or may be, threatened with a similar fate."

But just one Middle East country – Jordan – delivered a speech commemorating the liberation of the camps. While 138 nations, including several Arab ones, had said they supported the commemoration, few attended.

Late last year, U.S. Ambassador John Danforth requested a commemorative session on Jan. 24, three days before a similar event in the former Auschwitz death camp in Poland to mark its liberation by Soviet troops on Jan. 27, 1945.

Between 1 million and 1.5 million prisoners – most of them Jews – perished in gas chambers or died of starvation and disease at Auschwitz. Overall, 6 million Jews were killed in the Holocaust.

Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz appeared to make a veiled reference to Iraq during his speech, saying that though leaders had agreed to set aside politics for the commemoration, they must do so with "a unanimous resolve to give real meaning to those words 'never forget.'"

"Last Thursday, as he began his second term in office, President George Bush expressed his belief that our nation's interests cannot be separated from the aspirations of others to be free from tyranny and oppression," Wolfowitz said.

Shalom pointed to the strength of movements denying the Holocaust, asking if there was anything worse than the destruction of an entire race.

"There is something worse: to do all this and then deny, to do all this and then take from the victims and their children and grandchildren the legitimacy of their grief," he said.

The United Nations was created in the wake of World War II. It voted soon after, in 1947, to carve out two countries in Palestine, one Jewish, the other Arab, but the Palestinians' share was lost in the 1948 Mideast war with parts divvied up among Israel, Jordan and Egypt.

Al-Qaeda lieutenant confesses to Iraq car bombings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An al-Qaeda lieutenant in custody in Iraq has confessed to masterminding most of the car bombings in Baghdad, including the bloody 2003 assault on the U.N. headquarters in the capital, authorities said Monday.

Sami Mohammed Ali Said al-Jaaf, also known as Abu Omar al-Kurdi, "confessed to building approximately 75 percent of the car bombs used in attacks in Baghdad" since the Iraq war began, according to the interim Iraqi prime minister's spokesman, Thaer al-Naqib.

Al-Jaaf was taken into custody Jan. 15 and confessed to 32 car bombings, a government statement said, including the bombing of the U.N. headquarters that killed the top U.N. envoy in Iraq, Sergio Vieira de Mello, and 21 other people.

The suspect, a top lieutenant of al-Qaeda's Iraq leader, Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, also built the car bomb used to attack a shrine in the Shiite holy city of Najaf that killed more than 85 people, including Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim, in August 2003, the statement said.

It said he also assembled the car bomb used in May to assassinate Izzadine Saleem, then-president of the Iraqi Governing Council.

Two other militants linked to al-Zarqawi's terror group also have been arrested.

They included the chief of al-Zarqawi's propaganda operations and one of the group's weapons suppliers, the government statement said.

The government offered no evidence to support its claims, and the announcement followed a series of car bombings, kidnappings and assassinations of Iraqi security personnel, all of which have lowered public morale as the nation prepares for elections next weekend.

Since June 28, when the interim Iraqi government took power, there have been about 70 car bombings reported in or around Baghdad, according to an Associated Press tally. At least 372 people were killed and 1,038 were wounded.

Prime Minister Ayad Allawi has been promising to crush the insurgency and restore public order if he holds onto his job in the new government.

In the latest attack, a suicide bomber blew up a carload of explosives Monday outside the headquarters of Allawi's party, wounding at least 10 people in the latest blast claimed by al-Qaeda in Iraq.

The violence raised fresh fears about the safety of voters in Sunday's national elections, which Sunni Muslim insurgents have threatened to sabotage.

Al-Zarqawi has been trying to incite Sunni Arabs against the Shiite majority, playing on Sunni fears that the elections will spell the end of their privileged position in Iraq.

Monday's car bombing struck at a police checkpoint near the offices of Allawi's party, the Iraqi National Accord. Police said the guards opened fire moments before the blast, a thunderous explosion that reverberated throughout the city center.

Eight policemen and two civilians were wounded, according to Dr. Mudhar Abdul-Hussein of Yarmouk Hospital.

It was the second suicide attack on the office this month.

In an Internet posting, al-Qaeda in Iraq said the attack was carried out by "one of the young lions in the suicide regiment" against the "agent of the Jews and the Christians."

ABORTION | D.C. protesters remember anniversary

America, sponsored events in Seattle and New York City.

Susan Hillcrest, Virginia resident, said her beliefs were set in stone.

"It is my body, my mind, my choice," she said. "The government cannot control that."

Several pro-choice organizations advocate that a woman's right to choose prevents women from turning to black-market abortions or self-induced abortions.

"A woman in need shouldn't have to resort to a clothes hanger for comfort when her boyfriend or husband abandons her," Hillcrest said. "With the new Republican control on Congress, there is a huge push for a reversal of the Roe decision."

Democratic National Committee Chair Terry McAuliffe believes overcoming the Bush administration will be quite a challenge over the next four years.

"I don't expect any Democrat-based legislation passing anytime soon," he said.

For those in favor of abortion, this is bad news.

Marsha Willis, New York resident, said she thought the protests were effective.

"We may do these events every year, but we are making a statement, and if legislatures don't notice it, other people will," she said. "We do change women's lives, and I don't think by protesting pro-choice, I am going to increase or endanger more lives than those without abortion."

The numbers of pregnancies and abortions have significantly decreased over the past 10 years, especially among teenage women. These numbers might be influenced by state legislatures, which have, in the past 10 years, implemented abortion restrictions related to partial-birth and third-trimester abortions.

of the sorority women will be speaking at the memorial – a service which she hopes will introduce Dixie to those who never had the chance to know her.

"I hope they understand what a powerful influence Dixie had on so many lives, and she will be missed," Coulter said. "I hope it's another time to celebrate her life."

Coulter said the women have been supporting each other, knowing the pain they are all feeling. Fallon said students who are experiencing grief that is interfering with their daily activities should seek help. For many, though, the memorial service will serve as a time of closure.

"After a number of days of grieving, it helps bring some closure and helps people get back to their normal routine," he said. "I would hope that in sharing their feelings of Dixie, they would go back to their studies and be able to focus better than they are now."

Second-year head coach Brad Hill got this team out to a great 19-6 start last season and even guided the Wildcats to their first ranking ever at No. 30.

With another offseason under his belt, Coach Hill will have this K-State squad playing better than ever and I, for one, can't wait.

I need to go get my stash of sunflower seeds and peanuts ready, because the season is right around the corner.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

She is now just eight wins shy of tying the K-State career record for singles wins at 77.

Not only is she a great tennis player, she is also one of the nicest, most determined and most humble athletes you will ever meet.

Big props to the rest of the tennis team as well.

A 9-0 sweep of Drake is a great start to the spring season.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

The Wildcats absolutely must have someone else step up and compliment senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

Whether it be sophomores Fred Peete, Cartier Martin or Lance Harris, junior Marques Hayden or senior Justin Williams, a secondary threat must be present every single game, or this season could end like the last nine – back at home with no postseason play.

K-State has won five games in a row, the biggest of which came on Saturday as the Wildcats upset then-No. 10 Texas Tech 55-53.

It was the Wildcats' first win in Lubbock since 1978, and the first win on the road against a top-10 team since Jan. 2, 2002.

Head coach Deb Patterson said even after a huge win like the one against Texas Tech, she feels her team knows how quickly it has to put it behind them and prepare for the next game.

"I think everyone is feeling so positive about winning on the road at Texas Tech," Patterson said.

"The reality is, immediately, you have an incredible amount of preoccupation right away with Iowa State. You know you are lining up against a team that really took a whipping to you the first time out. We understand that in this league, the challenges are just constant."

Iowa State – led by O'Neil's 17.5 points per game – comes into the game as the highest scoring team in the Big 12 at 81 points per game.

"Iowa State has always been a team that is really intelligent and executes a really good offense," senior guard Laurie Koehn said. "It seems like they always have five players out on the floor who can score from anywhere on the floor. When a team shoots the ball as well as they do, it makes it really difficult to defend."

Patterson said in order for her team to avoid another loss to the Cyclones, a commitment to defense will have to be the Wildcats' top priority.

"They're just so potent offensively," Patterson said. "Obviously, we've got to work extremely hard to be a proficient defensive team. We have to be majorly preoccupied with the quality of defense we bring to the floor."

5 file for USD 383 school board

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Manhattan residents added their names to the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board race Tuesday, bringing the total number of candidates to five.

The deadline to file was noon Tuesday.

Dan Morin and Peter Paukstelis, along with Keith Miller and Beth Tatarko, filed for the first time, while incumbent school board president Walt Pesaresi will run for his second term. Three seats are open, as Pesaresi's term, as well as Dorothy Soldan's and Jim Shroyer's, end this year.

Newly elected board members will begin their terms in July.

Because of the low number of candidates, there will not be a primary election and Manhattan residents will vote for the positions during the county's general election, April 5, said Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk for Riley County.

Seven candidates are required for a primary election to take place.

Helen Petrik, clerk of the school board, said typically there is a lower turn-out for school board candidates.

In 2003, Petrik said there were four open seats on the school board and only four candidates filed.

The year before, in 2002, the school board had three open seats with six individuals filing.

"For school board members, it's a very demanding job," Petrik said. "There is no pay for it, and it requires a lot of time for meetings and activities.

It takes someone who can really commit to it."

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight candidates filed to be on the April 5 ballot to fill City Commission spots.

Three positions are open on the City Commission, so there will be a primary election March 1. Primary elections require at least seven candidates for three positions.

Incumbent Mark Hatesohl is the only commissioner running for re-election. Mayor Brad Everett and Commissioner Mark Taussig did not seek re-election.

The other candidates are Brad McCune, Jayme Morris-Hardeman, Tom Phillips, Sam Robinson, Matthew Schindler, James Sherow and Vincent Tracey.

Jolene Campbell, deputy clerk for Riley County, said having a primary for

Bush wants $80 billion for Iraq

By Alan Fram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

As Congress started to digest a new Bush administration request of $80 billion to bankroll wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, its top budget analyst on Tuesday projected $855 billion in deficits for the next decade even without the costs of war and President Bush's Social Security plan.

Three senior administration officials said the White House would request $80 billion for the wars, or a bit more, soon after Bush submits his budget for fiscal year 2006 to lawmakers on Feb. 7.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity because the program has not yet been announced, said $75 billion of it would be for U.S. military costs, with the rest including funds to train and equip Iraqi and Afghan forces, aid the new Palestinian leadership, build an embassy in Baghdad and help victims of warfare in Sudan's Darfur province.

Congress approved $25 billion for the wars last summer. Using figures compiled by the Congressional Research Service, which prepares reports for lawmakers, the newest request would push the totals provided for the conflicts and worldwide efforts against terrorism past $300 billion. That includes $25 billion already provided for rebuilding Iraq and Afghanistan.

In a written statement, Bush said the money would support U.S. troops and help the United States "stand with the Iraqi people and against the terrorists trying desperately to block democracy and the advance of human rights."

Amid the White House's preparations, the Congressional Budget Office predicted the government will accumulate another $855 billion in deficits over the next decade.

The projection, for years 2006 through 2015, is almost two-thirds smaller than what congressional budget analysts predicted last fall.

Family and friends mourn the death of K-State senior Dixie Spence

A life of courage

Student will be remembered for contagious happiness

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

She had an infectious smile, bubbly laugh and giving heart, but what Dixie Spence's father will remember most is her courage.

"I am talking about the courage that was inside Dixie," Lee Spence said. "This is what made her special. She was small, she was petite, but she was full of courage."

That courage is what Dixie's father said shone through even in her death.

The Spence family received a letter from a woman named Carla, who was with Dixie in her last minutes of life. Dixie was killed in a car accident Jan. 17 north of her hometown of Hutchinson, Kan.

In Carla's letter, she assured the Spence family that their daughter was not alone.

"She said to her, 'Hold on honey, you are going to be OK,'" Lee Spence read from the letter.

Sara Speed, junior in apparel marketing, and Mollie Spicer, senior in apparel marketing, remember Dixie Spence while looking at pictures and other items before entering the chapel for her memorial service Tuesday evening.

Spence recalled his memories of his daughter's birth, her first car and the butterfly kisses he gave her each night.

"Her eyelashes were always longer than mine," he said.

Melody LeHew, associate professor of apparel, textiles and interior design, said Dixie's professors and classmates are grieving as well.

"She will be missed, and she will be remembered," LeHew said.

Friends shared memories of Dixie's love of the color pink, her habit of sneezing seven times in a row and her

Country Stampede awarded $20,000 in marketing funds from state tourism grant program

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Country Stampede is getting some help – more than $20,000 worth – from the Kansas Department of Commerce for its marketing campaign.

An Attraction Development Grant of $20,750 was awarded to Country Stampede in order to fund an out-of-state campaign to get the word out that the event is still on.

Rumors that Country Stampede would be moving from Kansas have been circulating for years. But recent construction on the dam at Tuttle Creek State Park has sparked even more rumors of that nature.

Wayne Rouse, president and general manager of Country Stampede, said it was for this reason that they applied for the grant, which is given out by the Department of Commerce's Travel and Tourism division.

"We applied for the grant because we started getting a lot of questions," Rouse said. "We wanted to do an aggressive campaign that told people Country Stampede and Tuttle Creek State Park are in good shape, and we're going to be here."

The campaign will be focused on states surrounding Kansas, such as Nebraska, Oklahoma, Iowa and Missouri, and will include newspaper and radio advertising and posters.

Regina Nicol, Travel and Tourism fiscal and grant program manager, said the money given to Country Stampede will be used only for out-of-state marketing. Marketing for Kansas will be paid for by Country Stampede.

"What we did give them must be used to get across the concept that the Stampede has

Bolstering ranks
Looking for new ways to bolster its thinning ranks, the Army National Guard is seeking legal authority to offer $15,000 bonuses to active-duty soldiers willing to join the Guard. The Chief of the National Guard Bureau said Tuesday that the Guard is 15,000 soldiers below its normal strength of 350,000.

Israel stops targeting
Israel has stopped targeting Palestinian militants for death, Israeli security officials said early Wednesday, fulfilling a key Palestinian demand for a truce to end four years of violence. The officials said Israel has informed the Palestinians of their decision. It came after generals met Tuesday.

Global warming
At an international climate conference in Argentina, British scientists told of a slow-motion kind of chemistry in the tropical forest, one foreseen by supercomputers running intricately programmed models of global warming. Rain forests in South America have seen decomposition of vegetation because of carbon dioxide.

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Co-eds bare almost all for tsunami victims

STANFORD, Calif. – Summertime in Maine, with the lobster fishers working the bays and inlets, can evoke a lot of pastoral images in the traveler.

It was the Maine lobster fishermen, after all, that gave him the idea for a pinup calendar featuring 14 naked first-years.

"Every year the lobstermen make these fake calendars of themselves all posing naked on their lobster boats," said Burmon, a shaggy-haired frosh from Weston, Mass.

"They can't make enough money, ever, on lobster fishing, so they have to do something."

When an earthquake sent tsunamis crashing across the Indian Ocean shoreline Dec. 26, killing tens of thousands, Burmon and fellow first-years Pam Geist and Joel Lewenstein, had the idea of emulating the lobstermen to raise money for the affected areas.

It took them two weeks to shoot and produce the 12-month calendar, each month featuring a different coed – or two – from Larkin, the university's largest all-freshman dorm, baring almost everything for the penetrating camera lens of Burmon and Lewenstein.

The black-and-white calendar – produced by the on-campus FedEx Kinko's at cost because of its charitable aims – starts selling next week for $10, half of which will go to Save the Children by way of the umbrella group Stanford Students for Relief.

They have already received orders for 70 calendars, and advertising efforts will continue with a table in White Plaza next week and visits to dorm meetings by semi-clad Larkinites.

The pictures, which never show the, ahem, most personal parts, are meant to tease more than arouse.

The theme, "A Day in the Life of a Larkin Student," mixes naked coeds with everyday scenarios and settings in ways once imagined only by pornographers and frat boys.

STUDENTS PROTEST COCA COLA

IOWA CITY, Iowa – Fifteen members of Students Against Sweatshops distributed more than 2,000 fliers at the Iowa Memorial Union on Wednesday – a second-straight day of protests against the University of Iowa allegedly "unethical" relationship with Coca Cola, the university's official beverage distributor.

The student group also circulated a petition asking students to boycott Coca-Cola products until the UI adopts an "Ethical Purchasing Code of Conduct." The proposed change would require "all UI vendors and contractors to live up to basic human rights standards."

In response, Phillip Jones, the UI vice president for Student Services, said the university is already examining a new code of conduct regulating who the UI does business with through the Humans Right Commission, a charter committee made up of faculty, staff, and students.

That commission has recommended a task force be established to further study the idea.

Ned Bertz, a member of the anti-sweatshop group, said it is demanding results, not bureaucracy, and contended that the task force has no real power and is a "delaying tactic."

"It's a public-relations move to make the university look like it's doing something," he said.

Steve Parrott, the director of University Relations, said UI President David Skorton is planning to formally respond to the group in a letter sometime this week.

At issue is the school's five-year contract with Coke, which was renewed in May 2003. A press release from the anti-sweatshop group Tuesday noted reports that Coke is connected to violence in Colombia and child labor at sugar plantations in El Salvador.

Coke denies the allegations.

Student collects supplies for underprivileged

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a trailer full of supplies, Staceylee Carlson drove 13 hours to Tallahatchie County, Miss., to deliver school supplies to underprivileged children.

Carlson, graduate student in sociology, started an effort called Fair Chance for Children so she could help those in need.

She was inspired by the HBO documentary titled "LaLee's Kin: The Legacy of Cotton," that she watched in a course called The Family or FSHS 550.

Carlson "watched the movie and sat there, jaw dropping."

She realized she needed to do something. Her first step was to contact Reggie Barnes, the man in "LaLee's Kin" found to save the county's floundering school district. She obtained a wish list of needed supplies and began her search.

"I just started asking," she said. "I started asking people if they wanted to help."

They did.

Several churches, Wal-Mart and Walgreens donated new and used school supplies to Carlson's effort.

She has made two trips to Mississippi with a trailer full of supplies. She will go for the third time in August.

For each trip, Carlson purchases and requests donations of pens, pencils, paper, books and backpacks. She scours yard sales with her 6-year-old son, Tyler, for books to build the school's classroom libraries.

"I really wanted him to have the idea that community service is really important," Carlson said.

Carlson describes Tallahatchie County as "a huge county that has no industry whatsoever.

"If you don't reach a certain level of educational attainment, your life opportunities – they're pretty well closed," she said.

"Kids come to school not knowing their name. They can't read, they can't write."

Carlson is in the process of obtaining non-profit status for this effort.

She would like to see if federal funds are available to aid her and non-profit status will make her purchases tax-exempt.

"It would legitimize it a little more," she said.

"It is sending the message that (poverty) is really happening here."

Tim Andersen | COLLEGIAN
Stacylee Carlson, graduate student in sociology, adds the finishing touches to a tote bag, which will be sold in a fund raiser. Carlson is in the process of starting a non-profit organization to help impoverished children in Mississippi.

Additional funds are raised through Totes of Hope. Carlson and Jessica Backhus, junior in life sciences, create handbags and sell them for $20-$35 at craft fairs and to family and friends. The profit margin of $10-$12 per bag goes directly back to purchasing more school supplies.

Carlson and Backhus met when the idea of selling handbags was introduced.

"She had the inspiration but she needed more hands," Backhus said. "I'm just really the workforce."

Carlson stresses the ability and responsibility of one person to make a difference.

"A buck goes a long way," she said. "Most of us buy a new backpack. Give me your old one. We each need to find a way to give back."

Carlson said the most rewarding aspect of her effort is the help she receives from others.

"I'm humbled every time somebody else will help," Carlson said. "I like to know that that humanity's there."

For Backhus, the reward is more visual.

"The most rewarding thing is being able to see the kids' faces," she said. "Staceylee explains it like it's awesome."

Following graduate school, Carlson would like to work for a non-profit organization, but continue her work with Fair Chance for Children.

"I'll keep doing this. I'll do it for a long time," she said. "It's my passion."

Spring break plans should be made soon

Students who book early get the best deals

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Spring break is still two months away, but it may not be too late to start booking trips.

Mary Gugle, a travel agent at Jade Travel in Manhattan, said trips should be booked in early December for trips in March.

"You need to book it before you go home for winter break," she said.

She also said that the earlier students book their trips, the cheaper the airfare and hotels will be.

"The fuller the flights, the higher the fare becomes," Gugle said. "Also, the least expensive hotels sell out first."

However, not everyone takes advantage of early booking in the fall. Kathy Stacken, owner of Cruise Holidays in Topeka, said many students wait until after the first of the year to book trips.

She said that students take a risk in waiting until January because many of the best deals have already been booked solid. For cruises, students should book their trips no later than the end of January.

"Spring breakers want to do four-night cruises which run somewhere between $800-$900 a person," Stacken said. "But that covers airfare, port taxes, meals and rooms."

Mid-February to mid-April is the spring break season for travel, so the travel agencies get busy early, Gugle said

"This time is busier than July and August," Gugle said. "This is not the off-season for warm places."

Gugle said that she has booked a lot of student trips to Mexico and Florida.

"Mexico is the best seller among students," she said.

"They have some very nice hotels in Mexico that are less expensive than they are in the States."

Stacken has also had many trips booked for Mexico, as well as the Caribbean. She said that her agency represents the Royal Caribbean and Carnival cruise lines.

Stacken explained that she tries to match people to the best cruise package based on interest. She also said that her agency performs these matches and assists clients for free.

"Cruise lines pay us to represent them," Stacken said, "so you don't have to pay the agent. It's the best of both worlds."

Both agents have said that they do not see less business due to Internet Web sites like www.travelocity.com or www.expedia.com. Slacken said that her agency has better tools to use when booking trips, and Cruise Holiday's rates are just as good as those found on the Internet.

Ian Oswald, a senior in information systems, said he goes to Florida every year for spring break to visit his dad.

He said he drives rather than flies due to cost and the number of people who go with him.

"Most people can't afford to fly," Oswald said. "Sometimes it's just fun to see new country."

The bottom line that both agents emphasized was to book trips early.

Gugle agrees. "It's always worth checking now," she said. "If you have an idea, check it out because you never know."

Rec complex offers spring break fitness program

By Leann Sulzen

Students can get fit with the Spring Break Training Program at the Peters Recreation Complex.

For a $15 fee, students meet with a trainer for six weeks and receive a workout plan that is made specifically for them, Steve Martini, associate director of programs at the Rec Complex, said.

Martini said this is the third year the program has been available, and in previous years it has filled up quickly.

While the Wellness Center in the Rec Complex does have consultations at any time, he said the training program is different.

"Part of our service is to consult with people about exercise and nutrition programs, but this program is six consecutive meetings and progressive," he said.

Larry Simonson, fitness consultant, said the program has a lot to offer beyond exercise.

"A lot of students, for the most part, may only know a little bit about following an exercise program," he said.

How to Sign up for the Spring Break training program

- Go to the Peters Recreation Complex office. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday-Friday.
- There is a $15 charge to participate in the program.
- The program begins on Feb. 7 and ends on March 18.

Kansas earthquake possible but unlikely

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Humboldt fault line along Tuttle Creek Dam and Reservoir could lead to an earthquake if there is a shift in the fault, but the chances of it are slim.

"The movement along the fault is very small," said Stephen Gao, associate professor of geology. He said the fault line runs from Wichita to Nebraska and was probably responsible for the earthquake that occurred in Manhattan in 1867. That earthquake reached a 5.1 on the Richter Scale.

Gao said that $20 million was spent refurbishing the dam to help prevent its damage or rupture. Warning systems have also been put in place in case the dam does break in an earthquake.

Gao thinks more research should have been done before the $20 million was spent.

"I don't think the money was spent wisely," he said.

Mary Knapp, state climatologist with K-State Research and Extension and the Department of Communications, said there have been earthquakes in Manhattan in the past but that they were so light that people didn't feel them. The were not very strong on the Richter Scale and people barely noticed things shaking or breaking.

Most people are more concerned about natural disasters like tornadoes hitting Kansas and think earthquakes stick to the California area, but major earthquakes have occurred nearby.

"One of the very worst earthquakes to hit the United States was in Missouri," Knapp said.

The earthquake hit New Madrid, Mo., along the New Madrid fault in 1811. It bypassed an 8.0 on today's Richter Scale and caused new lakes to form and the Mississippi River to change its course. Its aftershocks were felt as far away as Richmond, Va. and Montreal, Canada.

Gao and Knapp both agree that the chance of an earthquake occurring along the Humboldt

OPINION

TO THE POINT

City, school elections still important

In three months, local elections take place.

Although, these elections are not as well known, they are still just as important.

Now is the time to begin paying attention.

Commissioners can affect students' lives, by making laws and regulations that affect Manhattan residents.

Changes in housing codes, construction projects and taxes are just some of the ways the commission can directly affect students' lives.

Also, the city of Manhattan and K-State work closely together in some areas.

For example, the city may decide to provide funding for better lighting on busy streets or public places students might frequent.

City officials more directly affect residents than state and national elected officials, so let your voice be heard.

School board members are also elected on the April 5 ballot.

On the April ballot, there is a quarter-cent sales tax increase question on the ballot. It is to help fund the Manhattan-Ogden school district, because it is experiencing financial woes.

If it is passed, consumers will pay 25 cents more in Manhattan sales tax.

Students need to pay attention to this election, because the results will affect them for the rest of their college career.

Remembering Johnny Carson

Late-night TV legend found success without ego

JESSE MANNING

I was nine years old when he hosted the Tonight Show for the last time in spring 1992, and Johnny never came back to TV after that. But his legacy lives on; we see it every night in a whole host of other pretenders on the late night throne.

Johnny Carson will be fondly remembered for many reasons by those who watched him host the Tonight Show. His easy-going, Midwestern manner made an entire generation of TV watchers and insomniacs comfortable with his show and all that it encompassed: monologues, skits, interviews, comedy routines and music and dance performances.

After nearly 30 years and 22,000 guests in 4,350 shows, America knew Johnny Carson, and he knew America.

Carson wasn't the first host of the Tonight Show, but he's certainly the most well-known. Even if TV watchers of our generation don't know Johnny, we're more than familiar with the gap that he left when he signed off for the final time.

One person couldn't fill that gap, so now we have Jay Leno, David Letterman, Conan O'Brian and what's-his-face who replaced Craig Kilborn who replaced Tom Snyder who was never all that popular in the first place.

There are Leno watchers and Letterman watchers and a lot of people who prefer neither, but everybody liked Johnny Carson. And as the network late-night hosts compete for Carson's ratings, cable TV keeps slicing off ever-larger chunks of the viewing audience. Jon Stewart's Daily Show keeps growing in popularity. Cable TV didn't compete with Johnny. In his day, cable TV couldn't compete with him.

Carson presided over an age in which his witty social commentary, a well-timed eye roll and a straightening of the tie got more laughs than the outright crude humor that is required to get a chuckle out of today's audiences. His 30 years on the Tonight Show saw seven presidents and eight vice-presidents, which was great for jokes.

Johnny's last show came around a period of cultural change in the world; the Reagan-Bush era was coming to a close, the Cold War was over and newer, hipper television was in demand. He exited the stage gracefully and on top of his game.

So why should my generation care about Johnny Carson? Off the air and out of the spotlight for 13 years, he didn't have that personal connection with us as he did with folks 15 or 20 years older than we are. We should care because Johnny was the standard bearer.

His influence has given rise to the shows that we enjoy today: Tonight Show varieties, cable interview shows and late-night's sister, day-time talk shows.

None have the lasting influence or the staying power that Johnny Carson did, but they've all been influenced by his style and the standard he set.

And Carson's Tonight Show launched the careers of many of the comedians who found immense success in the 1990s – Roseanne Barr, Billy Crystal and even Leno and Letterman themselves. Without Johnny, we may not even have had Seinfeld.

Maybe Hollywood has the most to learn from Johnny Carson. He was funny without being in-your-face and vulgar. He was immensely popular and successful without having an enormous ego. He kept his private life very private. He went out on the top of his game, no less popular than when his first show aired in 1962.

Johnny's popularity never died, and in a way, his humor has touched us all.

Denver woman's parenting failures cannot be ignored

JULIA STOSKOPF

Sylvia Johnson of Denver, 40, had illegal sex at least five times from 2003 to 2004 and she is awaiting her court hearing next month.

No, Johnson is not a middle-aged prostitute, instead, she is a mother who not only facilitated and participated in drug and alcohol parties at her house on a weekly basis, but also had sex with five high school boys in attendance, according to CNN on Saturday.

When a disturbed adult like Johnson begins to exploit and abuse her influence, we must all answer the call to arms. As former high school students, we understand the pressures and influences that towered over our high school lives.

To prevent monsters like Johnson from influencing students that may one day be our children, we must take responsibility now and pay close attention to a case that is neither the norm nor the practice, but is simply sick and wrong.

According to Friday's Rocky Mountain News, Johnson provided alcohol, marijuana and methamphetamines to the high school students who attended her parties.

One boy stated that Johnson performed oral sex on him after he had consumed three shots of a bottle of Southern Comfort.

The story doesn't end here. Johnson admitted that she provided children with amphetamines to control their actions – including asking one boy in November 2003 to clean her house.

In perhaps her most disgusting moment, Johnson exchanged McCormick for yard work with another boy, and after the drunk boy ran over an apple tree, Johnson loaned him her car to drive the branches to the dump.

The atrocities of this behavior are inexcusable, but Johnson has more than one excuse. After admitting to her actions, she proclaimed that she was beginning to feel like a "cool mom" and she was just a little bit on the flip side of sobriety when these events occurred.

Now, providing alcohol to high-school students is an issue for a different columnist on a different day, but the fact cannot be ignored that, according to the April 29 Birmingham News, 65 percent of minors polled by the nonprofit Century Council claimed that older siblings, parents or friends of parents provided them with alcohol.

Johnson, however, not only provided her high school drinking buddies with alcohol, but also gave them drugs and had sex with them. No person in his right mind can justify these actions.

The question then remains, what do we – as students – do about this?

The answer is not that complicated. While most K-State students are not parents, those are the ones who have the most influence.

In other words – if you are a parent and decide to drink with your children, do not have sex with other high school students and do not exchange alcohol for chores!

If you need someone to clean your house, hire a maid – it's cheaper than the alternative of jail time.

For the rest of us, the best way to have an impact on this situation is to express outrage.

If you find this woman's actions appalling and disgusting, tell someone else. If you do, others will not be able to ignore this situation either.

Blast this woman's reputation into oblivion and expose an atrocity that cannot be ignored. It may just expose another scandal or hinder the activities of another parent like Johnson.

Sylvia Johnson is a mother and member of a community. Now she is also a sexual predator.

Spread the word and hopefully Johnson and others like her will be exposed, closed and locked away.

PERSPECTIVES

Dear Mr. President,

Illustration by Jesse Manning | COLLEGIAN

It's time for a legacy, return to prosperity

By Allison Cullin
INDEPENDENT FLORIDA ALLIGATOR (U. FLORIDA)

Mr. President,

With Thursday's inauguration, Americans again have cause to celebrate.

You were re-elected with a clear majority vote and will govern with a solid Republican majority in both houses of Congress.

The election was hard-fought and the results clear. We won't spend the next four years debating your legitimacy, but we will spend them debating policy.

Social Security reform and foreign policy choices will define the coming months as your ambitious agenda is introduced in Congress.

With you at the helm, we can hope for defined vision and clear action that will carry America into the future.

Social Security must be reformed to ensure its long-term viability.

Both you and the leaders of Congress face the difficult task of redefining a program reliant on "fuzzy math" and inaccurate projections and recreating it into a program in which workers define their own retirements and ensure their own futures.

With the plan you've proposed, the work of my generation may pay off by providing the benefits we expect.

Critics claim the program is viable as is; let's not leave it to chance.

When I retire, I'd rather not be told the thousands of dollars of my salary that I've contributed to Social Security has been spent, and there's nothing left for me.

Legislation and judicial appointments no longer will be held up by obstructionist members of the Democratic Party who don't understand the concepts of democracy.

The majority of Americans voted for Republican members of Congress, and single members of the Senate should not attempt to thwart democracy by preventing good, legitimate legislation from reaching the floor for a vote.

Our nation remains strong with the free exercise of political will, but the obstructionist tendencies of some members of the minority defy the principles of a government for the people.

While many members of Congress work against the will of the people, we as Republicans still can reach out a hand to those on the opposite side of the aisle and encourage the bi-partisan work that brought us the No Child Left Behind Act and other valuable pieces of legislation.

The last four years have been a challenge for the United States.

Sept. 11 was the defining moment of my generation's memory and your first term.

Changes in global policy, governmental structure and domestic dialogue have reshaped the political scene not just for your presidency but for American history.

We no longer define America's relationships with the outside world on a nation-to-nation basis.

I stand with you in the hope that freedom can take hold in the nations to which we've brought liberty.

You've told the world that terror and tyranny are no longer negotiable.

On Thursday, you reminded everyone, "The best hope for peace in our world is the expansion of freedom in all the world."

You expressed hope for a world in which oppression and tyranny are fought from within a nation and not forgotten abroad.

We are grateful for our freedoms and must not forget the people who never have known liberty.

President Bush, on Thursday you outlined your hope for the next four years, the promises you made during your campaign and the work that remains from your first term.

As your presidency continues, we can hope for economic prosperity, strength at home and abroad and the passing of the torch of freedom around the world.

The American people celebrated the renewal of hope and the promise of progress with the President's re-election.

It is time to join in the work that will define America's future and create a lasting legacy of peace and prosperity.

TO THE EDITOR

Saying goodbye

Editor,

We are less a brother today
Less a brother, forever
Nothing we can do will return him to us
We can't go back and tell Chris to slow down
We can never go back...
What we can do is tell ourselves to slow down
What we can do is stop this thing from taking more of us
We can make sure the death of our friend is not a waste
We can learn
And through this unfathomable tragedy we can bring some good
We can save some lives by looking back
When the gas pedal looms large
When you feel like flying without leaving the earth
Think of Chris Camarena, our fallen brother...

Abortion not necessary if women trust God, plan for their lives

Editor,

In my opinion, if people would just stop having random sex, especially dating couples that aren't even married, then abortion wouldn't be such a huge problem.

A woman states, "But I can't afford a baby."

Well, there are always consequences for your actions.

God knows what you did was wrong and sinful, so that's when you make the decision to repent and turn to Him for forgiveness and He will forgive you.

If we trust in Him, He will bless us with all of our financial needs.

Or you could just give it up for adoption.

But a pro-choice woman states, "It's my body, and I can do whatever I want with it."

That's selfish and not true because it's God's body.

He created it. Did you decide for yourself to be created?

Start taking responsibility for your own actions.

If a married couple decides to make love and the wife gets pregnant, that's wonderful.

But problems arise when the wife begins to say that she can't have the child because of health issues.

Instead of seeking, trusting and asking for His strength and deliverance, they give up and don't even give life a chance.

God created you in His divine wisdom, so He obviously has a plan for the mother and the unborn.

To those who are raped and end up pregnant, trust God.

I know it's a sad and horrible act, but sometimes you have to go through the bad to get to the good.

If you end up pregnant, there must be a reason for it.

Maybe your combined genes would become a great doctor who would go on to find the cure for cancer.

What if Mother Teresa was aborted before she was able to make such a huge impact? We kill our future every time we choose to abort instead of giving life.

K-State Olympic silver medalist prepares for 2008 Olympics

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For 2004 Olympic silver medalist and K-State assistant track coach Austra Skujyte, achieving Olympic glory was something she never thought would happen.

"It was one of the dreams I didn't even think would come true that came true," Skujyte said. "It was amazing."

Skujyte said her words cannot fully express what she felt on the medal stand in Athens, Greece this past fall.

"I was crying," Skujyte said. "I prayed to God and asked that I could stand on one of the (medal) stands. It didn't even matter what kind of medal. I just wanted something, and when I won (the silver), I was so happy that God heard me – He gave me the medal."

Skujyte competed in the heptathlon in each of the previous two summer Olympics for Lithuania, her native country.

She said she wanted to enjoy her experience in Sydney, regardless of her performance.

K-State assistant track coach Austra Skujyte won a Olympic silver medal during the 2004 Olympics in Athens, Greece. Skujyte competed in the heptathlon for her native country Lithuania. She is training for the 2008 Olympic Games.

"It wasn't too much about how I was going to perform, it was more about just being there," she said. "Nobody really expected anything from me."

Her mentor, K-State head track coach Cliff Rovelto, said when he first heard Skujyte was interested in training in the United States, he called her and offered her a scholarship.

Nebraska, Minnesota, South Carolina and Wake Forest were also interested in the talented athlete from Europe, but Skujyte said she chose K-State based on its quality of athletes and coaches.

Skujyte came to Manhattan and competed for the Wildcats in the 2001 and 2002 seasons.

Rovelto said the 6-foot-2 athlete's work ethic was second to none.

"I don't think I've worked with an athlete who was more thorough in terms of doing everything they were asked to do," Rovelto said.

Skujyte's hard work paid off, as she won two NCAA Championships in the heptathlon. She also became the

No. 18 Iowa State went into Tuesday night's game against No. 16 K-State as the highest-scoring team in the Big 12 Conference with an average of 80.9 points per game.

K-State held Iowa State to nearly thirty points under their average in a 74-52 win over the Cyclones at Bramlage Coliseum.

The win moves K-State (15-3, 6-1) into first place in the Big 12 Conference and moves its winning streak to six games.

The loss was the first for Iowa State (15-2, 5-1) in conference play, and snapped the Cyclones' 12-game win-streak.

The Wildcats' last loss came on Jan. 5 against Iowa State in the opening game of Big 12 play. That night, the Cyclones shot 64 percent from the field and 71 percent from three-point range.

Tuesday night, Iowa State shot 31 percent overall, while hitting a paltry 12 percent from behind the arc.

"The guards did awesome tonight," freshman Shana Wheeler said. "They defended (Iowa State's) three-point shot real well and it was a complete turnaround from the last game in keeping their perimeter shooting low."

K-State opened up the game quickly,

20 events available for intramural teams

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may only be January, but basketball means the beginning of the spring intramural season today at Peters Recreation Complex.

Basketball, one of the 20 events offered at the Rec Complex in the spring, is probably the most popular, along with softball, Marian Brandenburg, administrative specialist at the Rec Complex, said.

Freshman Matt Begnoche, intramural chairperson for FarmHouse fraternity, said he agrees that basketball is the most popular spring sport in his fraternity.

"Basketball is the sport that we take the most seriously and take the most pride in," Begnoche said.

Despite the popularity among basketball and softball, there is a wide variety of other spring intramural sports offered at the Rec Complex.

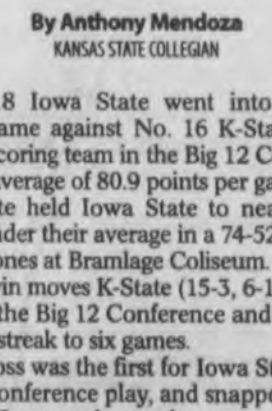
Although they are not as recognized as basketball and softball, they still attract many students, Begnoche said.

"We try and get people involved in as many different sports as we can," Begnoche said.

Although intramurals at the Rec Complex attract many former high school athletes who still want to compete, Brandenburg said intramurals serve a social purpose as well.



"Everyone is encouraged to participate, even if you aren't an athlete," Brandenburg said. "It's a great way to meet people."

Senior Spencer Mahurin, who plays on Sigma Phi Epsilon's basketball team, said besides the exercise, the social aspect is what entices him to participate.

"Of course it's a great way to exercise and compete, but it's also a way to come out and see people you wouldn't normally see," Mahurin

Wecker best women's basketball player in K-State history

ANTHONY MENDOZA

It was not the game everyone was watching, but it should have been.

While most K-State fans tuned into ESPN-plus to watch the men lose at Texas A&M, they missed a more exciting game that took place on another network.

It was a game that solidified Kendra Wecker as the best women's basketball player in K-State history.

I have only been in Manhattan for less than a year, but I am willing to make that bold of a statement.

She became the fifth player in Big 12 history to score 2,000 career points in the 55-53 win at Texas Tech.

Wecker scored most of those 2,000 points as option No. 2 behind former Wildcat Nicole Ohlde.

Even more impressive is that she scored the Wildcats' final seven points of the game Saturday – the last one a leaning one-handed jumper under the outstretched arm of a taller defender.

Wecker is the glue that holds this team together.

This was never more evident than in K-State's double-digit loss to Liberty, Mo. in the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic, when Wecker was out with an ankle injury.

Since returning, the pre-season Big 12 Conference Player of the Year and National Player of the Year candidate has led the Wildcats near the top of the Big 12 standings and kept them in the Top 25 standings.

Wecker is near the top in the conference in points, three-pointers and steals, which makes her not only a scorer, but a complete player who is willing to jump into passing lanes or cut off the defender at the point of penetration from the outside.

Nobody expected K-State to be this good after losing the Wildcats' all-time leading scorer Ohlde, but they are.

She has been there all season hitting the big shot. Not the one that necessarily wins the game like she did on Saturday, but the one that beats the shot clock, the one that stops a run by the opposition or the one that just frustrates the defense.

First she squares the defender up and then takes her off the dribble to her right. Just as the defender thinks she has her step for step, that's when Wecker has her right where she wants her.

A quick stop-and-spin back toward the key leaves the defender clueless as to where she went, which equals an easy 15-foot jump shot and another two points for Wecker.

It's a patented move; one that I've been trying to use when I play pick-up basketball.

The only difference between the two of us, though, is that it hardly works for me.

It should be the last time number 53 is worn on the court at Bramlage Coliseum, and it should be placed in its proper home – in the rafters.

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens' doctor said Tuesday he will not give the All-Pro receiver clearance to play in the Super Bowl.

Owens

Owens saw his doctor Tuesday, one day after telling reporters he would play against the New England Patriots on Feb. 6.

Dr. Mark Myerson said he's pleased with Owens' recuperation, but maintains the surgery requires a recovery period of eight to 10 weeks. Myerson said in a statement Tuesday night that any attempt to accelerate the rehabilitation process poses the same risk for injury.

Owens said he plans to be in uniform for the Eagles in Jacksonville, Fla. The Eagles' doctors and training staff should have the final say on Owens' status.

Delgado

Delgado agreed Tuesday to a $52 million, four-year contract. The deal, which includes an option year making it potentially worth $64 million over five seasons, is contingent on the Delgado passing a physical Wednesday.

With the addition of the free-agent first baseman, Florida becomes perhaps the team to beat in the NL East.

The Marlins won the World Series in 1997 and 2003 but still are seeking their first division title.

ROCHESTER HILLS, Mich. — Five Indiana Pacers players and three fans charged in one of the most violent melees in NBA history appeared in court Tuesday — each at a separate hearing — and were released on bond.

The Pacers players, charged with misdemeanor assault and battery in the brawl with Detroit fans at The Palace of Auburn Hills, appeared for about three minutes each before District Judge Lisa Asadoorian.

Asadoorian allowed each of the players to leave the state and barred them from the Palace "except for employment-related purposes." Ron Artest, Stephen Jackson, Anthony Johnson, David Harrison and Jermaine O'Neal also were told they must attend the next hearing in the case, scheduled for April.

Three fans charged with misdemeanor assault and battery — John Ackerman, William Paulson and John Green — also appeared in court and were released on bond.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Wizards owner Lamar Hunt said Tuesday he expects the club to play its entire 2005 season in Kansas City, even as he continues to work to sell the Major League Soccer franchise.

Hunt

Hunt, who also owns the Kansas City Chiefs, said that in the past six weeks, 15 groups have expressed an interest in the team, including two from major cities outside of the Midwest. Three groups have also indicated an interest in developing a new soccer stadium in the Kansas City metropolitan area, he said.

Hunt announced on Dec. 9 that he was looking for a buyer of the professional soccer team, which plays most of its home games at Arrowhead Stadium. At the same time, he encouraged the construction of a soccer-specific stadium somewhere in the Kansas City area for the team.

Glassblower composes for chemistry department

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Jim Hodgson begins his work at 1,260 degrees Celsius.

That is because the glass he works with, borosilicate, the most common form of glass used for scientific glassblowing, is workable at that temperature equivalent of 2,300 degrees Fahrenheit.

In his cluttered laboratory in the basement of the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building, Hodgson uses a natural gas/oxygen torch at his work bench, where he does most of his glassblowing work.

Students glance at Hodgson through his laboratory window as he perches on his stool, concentrating on his work through safety sunglasses. He carefully rotates a piece he is preparing for entomology research over an intense blue flame.

When he is done, he leans back, switches a knob and the flame leaps to life. The piece is engulfed in a large yellow flame. He is flame annealing his work, a process that relieves stress in glass-blown works.

Hodgson became the senior scientific glassblower for the Department of Chemistry in July 1996. He said in the eight years he has worked at K-State, he has created several devices for the chemistry research department.

"There's a lot of variety to what I do," Hodgson said. "I do a lot of repairs to broken pieces and I created a lot of pieces for the chemistry department.

"I interact a lot with the professors or graduate students, and they tell me what they want. If it's something I can do, I'll do it. But sometimes what they want can't be done in glass – it's just not possible to do."

Hodgson said the process of scientific glassblowing is different than the artistic glassblowers in the past.

"There turns out to be a lot less blowing in this type of glassblowing," Hodgson said. "It's more like changes in pressure inside the piece, it's more of a controlled blowing. It's different than the glassblowers making huge bowls in a furnace."

Hodgson said the variety of his work is what makes him enjoy his job so much. He said the array of work helps him improve.

"I have a lot of variety in what I do, I really enjoy that, and I think it's fun," Hodgson said. "It's nice to do a lot of the same things, but I like having something different to do, too.

"I think glassblowing is a lot like learning to play an instrument. You have to practice a lot to get better, and it helps when you have different things to do in your job."

Eric Maatta, head of the chemistry department, said K-State is lucky to have a scientific glassblower like Hodgson.

"Jim builds glassware for chemistry groups that would normally cost an incredible amount of money if we were to purchase it commercially," Maatta said. "He builds custom-designed work for research faculty. He comes and talks with the faculty member and fabricates it. It's a tremendous savings in time and money."

Jim Hodgson seals a piece of glass tubing to a flask in his laboratory in the Chemistry/Biochemestry Building last week. Hodgson creates and repairs glass devices for the university, but focuses mostly on repairs for the Department of Chemistry.

How to
Add an extra arm to a glass flask

1. Take a piece of tubing and prepare to seal to the flask.
"By making the end of it more of an angle and cleaning the end, it creates a nice surface to seal."

2. Make a hole in the flask.
"We need a spot on the flask for a hole. We'll heat up a spot, create a blister the same size, heat the top and blow it out to open a hole and create a shoulder to seal to."

3. Make sure everything's the right size and attach arm to flask.
"We need to make sure both pieces of glass are the right size to attach. They are, so we heat both pieces of glass so that they can be sealed together."

4. Flame annealing for stress in the final product.
"The glass is stressed because it is being heated in a confined spot. If that stress isn't eliminated, the piece will not last — it could easily break in a day or a month. In order to relieve that, we do what is called flame annealing where we take the final product and heat it over a big bushy flame, so that the whole thing is heated evenly."

Jim Hodgson heats a piece of glass tubing at 1,260 degrees Celsius to attach to a flask for research for the Department of Entomology.

Meg Fasulo, sophomore in chemistry, said she has worked with Hodgson in the past.

"I've taken some general stuff to him to be repaired, and he's the faculty adviser for the chemistry fraternity, so I've worked with him a bit," Fasulo said. "He's really helpful and friendly. He'll do whatever is needed to help and to fix things if that's what's wrong."

Hodgson said he graduated with a geophysics degree from K-State in 1982. He said he worked with that degree for 10 to 11 years and decided he wanted to do something else.

"I wanted to find something that I love and can do for the rest of my life," Hodgson said. "I found glassblowing and it was something I really enjoyed."

Hodgson received an associate degree in scientific glassblowing from Salem County Community College in Carneys Point, N.J., the only place in the United States to offer a scientific glassblowing degree. He said he came to K-State and met his predecessor, Mitsugi Ohno.

"Mr. Ohno started glassblowing in the early 60s," Hodgson said. "His scientific glassblowing was superb.

"When I came back I got to work with him and I learned a lot by watching him do things. Looking back at the notes I took, I didn't even know what I should have asked him at the time. There aren't many people like him."

Hodgson now blows glass for the university, but mainly the chemistry department, and teaches an introductory class in glassblowing. He said his job is important because it is limited to what machines can do as far as glassblowing.

"There's very little a machine can do," Hodgson said. "They can make some beakers and test tubes, but it's hard for them to make anything more complicated than that.

"In fact, I'm certain that most of my students in my class could make better beakers and test tubes than most machines."

Hodgson said he has done a little bit of artistic work as well.

"I did some artistic work for the Wrap it Up sale at the Manhattan Arts Center last year," Hodgson said. "I made some Victorian-style, or antique-looking, ornaments that I sold."

Maatta said he thinks that Hodgson is modest and quite the artist, even though Hodgson probably won't admit it.

"He sold some 60 different Victorian-like pieces at that event," Maatta said. "And with the portion of money he made from that, he donated all of those profits to the scholarship fund in honor of Mr. Ohno. He raised $1,600 for that fund."

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Urkevich

Name: Hayley Urkevich

Title: Student Body President

How many years at K-State: Almost four years (I'll graduate in May).

Favorite leisure activity: Reading for pleasure and hanging out with friends

Three adjectives that describe you: Fun, smart and quirky

Describe an ideal night for you: Coming home from a long day on campus, then going to the Rec, fixing dinner with my girlfriends and finally heading to Aggieville.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The people — students, teachers, administrators — and of course K-State athletics!

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? Parking, and I'm still working on it.

Most embarrassing moment in college? Over winter break, I went to Israel for a seminar with 14 other student body presidents from around the country. We traveled around Israel in a big tour bus. One day, when we were in Jerusalem we were all getting off the bus and I fell head-first into the street as both of my high heels got stuck on the steps.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? Susan B. Anthony

If you could drive any car, what would it be? An old Jaguar convertible

What is something that most students don't know about you: I have a high-pitched giggly laugh that my friends describe as the "wild turkey."

Relationship drama instilled in females through soap operas

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: My girlfriend tries to turn every little argument we have into a huge ordeal. Why is she so dramatic, and how can I calm her down?

A: Warning: If you are a female, DO NOT read the following response. Besides all of the socialization issues that drive women to express their emotions in exaggerated displays, there is one specific factor that I have identified. Soap operas.

More generally, it is entertainment such as reality shows, "chick flicks" and any program that is packed full of drama. Girls watch these shows thriving on the drama and chaos.

Seeing these types of programs lets women think that this kind of drama is normal and acceptable.

They then embrace and even encourage these elaborate conflicts in their interpersonal relationships. Women see extreme emotional displays as a welcome and ordinary part of dating and life.

Now before all you women out there start calling into the Fourum to trash me, let me make two points.

One, the fact that you are reading this proves that you can't follow directions. And two, most of what I say is to make people laugh, so don't take everything so seriously.

Now that I have ensured that I will never meet another girl on campus, let me give this guy some advice. Run. Run like the wind. There's no easy way out of this one, buddy.

Q: Why is there an "Ask the 5th year" and not an "Ask the 6th or 7th year?"

A: I would love to take credit for this column, but the fact is that it was not my idea. I believe it was originally thought up by the Edge editor and her fiancé.

Now guys, I know what you're thinking, and yes, we've lost another great warrior to the dark side.

Let us all hang our heads in a moment of silence to our fallen comrade. He is off to bigger and better things. But let me answer your question as briefly as possible. Being old is funny.

I should actually say that being a 5th year senior is funny.

Being a 7th year, though, is just sad.

Q: One of my roommates has extremely foul body odor and I am having a hard time deciding how I can confront her about this. What is the best way to approach her?

A: I'm lucky enough to have roommates that are such close friends of mine that I can be brutally honest about their personal hygiene without worrying about hurting anyone's feelings.

For example, we often call one of my friends "Dypes" because his gas regularly smells like a baby's diapers.

But I do understand that not all roommates have this open of a relationship, so let me try to help you solve this problem without hurting anyone's feelings.

One way to do this is to leave your roommate an anonymous letter in your mailbox.

My personal favorite is the classic "death threat" style where you cut the letters out of magazines and newspapers. It's fun to do, but don't get caught with glue and scissors lying around your room.

Another way is to find that one person who can be severely honest with anyone without thinking twice about it. We all know at least one person like this.

This individual can be a great tool as well as entertainment. It's that one guy or girl who you can always count on to say what everyone else is thinking, but is too reserved to say out loud.

Find this person and put him/her in charge of making it perfectly clear to your roommate that she smells bad. It might hurt her feelings, but it won't be your fault.

If those ideas don't work, cut this article that you are reading out of the newspaper and leave it on her bed.

If she doesn't think that you or any of your other roommates have bad hygiene, she will realize it's her who smells.

Adam is a fifth-year senior in business. If you have a burning question, you can e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Food stamp use not about hunger

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Food stamp use is on the rise in Kansas.

The increase in the number of people using food stamps has little to do with an increase in hunger, said Wanda Esping, program administrator for Economic and Employment Services at Social and Rehabilitation Services.

"We've done a lot to reach out to people who are entitled to benefits but aren't receiving them," Esping said.

SRS, the organization that distributes food stamps, has recently put applications for food stamps online. It has also partnered with community organizations to educate the public and to help people apply.

Mindy Lesline, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said this improved accessibility is the reason for the increase.

"In the past, food stamps were hard to get. There was lots of paperwork, and they weren't as accessible. They've been proactive in making them easier to get," Lesline said.

"Riley County has been at the forefront in using new innovations," Esping said. "I was really surprised at the numbers. A lot more people use it than I expected."

The online application allows people to apply without a face-to-face interview.

"There are some folks who felt uncomfortable with the idea of receiving welfare, so coming in to apply was a deterrent," Esping said. "This allows them to be anonymous."

However, many people still apply the old-fashioned way, she said.

"There is no substitute for face-to-face contact," Esping said. "But for those who don't need other services, it may be a good alternative."

Online applications allow for more chances to cheat the system, though.

Esping said one man, who lived out of state, took advantage of the online application by applying for his elderly mother.

Another relatively new feature has made the food assistance program seem more appealing.

In 1996, Kansas started using the Vision card, which looks like a debit card.

While it may be a more attractive alternative to checks, there was a drop in food stamp users in the years following its introduction.

Esping said many people simply may not have known about it.

Lesline said the card appeals to food stamp users.

"Food stamps are no longer the oddly-colored check that everybody sees you using. There's less of a stigma involved," she said.

The cards make the program look more attractive, Esping said.

"We want food assistance to be viewed as a positive program and eliminate negative connotations," she said.

SRS also recently teamed up with Dillons and Kansas State Bank in a campaign to educate the public. Their promotion, which started in June, is called "Filling the Plate."

"We put out fliers and educational material and had food stamp applications in stores," said Su-Ella McKinzie, director of advertising and public relations for Dillons.

Though the intent of the event was partly to bring about awareness of hunger, the increase in the use of food stamps is mainly due to new education, McKinzie said.

"In the past, people have not understood what is out there," she said.

Sharolyn Jackson, Riley County extension agent in nutrition, health and safety, said the general public should be more sensitive to those receiving government benefits.

"It's an area that everyone, regardless of income, should be mindful of," she said. "We need to create awareness."

The extension office provides support by helping people apply for food stamps and helping them to make the best choices when shopping, Jackson said.

"We are there to help people make the best decisions for their lives," she said.

SRS can help people to find jobs if they need them, but Esping said even those with jobs need a little help.

"A lot of people are working very hard just to make ends meet, and sometimes they just can't feed their family.

"We're there when they need us," she said.

Hale Library's special collections feature historical, research works

Library expanding military history, prairie ecology sections

The Morse Department of Special Collections in Hale contains rare books, archives and manuscripts from years ago.

Anthony Crawford, director of the department and university archivist, said it would be impossible to put a dollar value on the items in the collection.

"The historical significance and the fact that some pieces are irreplaceable makes the collections priceless," he said.

The special collections were built largely through donations by alumni and friends of the university, Crawford said.

Books that are not donated are purchased with money that is budgeted from the library and an endowment that the department has.

Some of the many manuscripts that have been donated to the department include letters from former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, pictures from Gordon Parks, the world renowned photographer, and collections of papers and records from Pulitzer Prize winner Gail Kubik.

Hours: 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. Monday-Friday.

In addition to the manuscripts, there are also rare books that the department has collected through the years.

The most notable collection is the cookbook collection, the largest single collection of cookbooks anywhere, with 12,000 books in the archive.

The archives consist of many exclusive pieces not even in the Library of Congress or the British Library. Such a piece is the rare 1747 first edition, Art of Cookery, Made Plain and Easy by Hannah Glasse.

The 12,000 volumes of cookbooks housed in the rare books archive feature Irma von Starkloff Rombauer's The Joy of Cooking, which was published in 1931 and is the single most popular cookbook in the United States. The Joy of Cooking and the oldest book in the cookery collection, a Latin cookbook printed in 1541, headline the collection.

Other collections include the historic costume and textile collection, formed to support the university's programs in the history of clothing, apparel design and theatrical costume construction.

The Department of Special Collections is working to improve four areas of special interest to the university – military history, prairie ecology, milling and grain science and bio-safety and security.

"We want to get more of these books in to help researchers. It's obvious why we want these areas here at Kansas State.

"Prairie ecology because of the Konza Prairie and security because of the new facility coming to the University," he said.

Crawford said the archives are available for serious study by students, faculty, staff and the general public.

"We get around a thousand researchers a year and twice as many requests by e-mail and phone. There are undergraduates to scholars that come in from all over," he said.

MEMORIAL | Friends will remember K-State senior's courage

Matt Lewis, K-State graduate and Dixie Spence's fiance, looks at a ring before the memorial service. Lewis and Spence were engaged to be married in June.

first date to a fraternity party with her future fiance, Lewis, K-State graduate.

"Her life was lived to the fullest everyday," Ryan Kurlbaum, fifth-year in architecture, said. "We must take the memories she gave us and take them with us everyday."

Dixie, who loved fashion, spent her fiance and father's money frequently on new clothes.

"She had her dad wrapped around her fingers, but I wouldn't have it any other way," Lee Spence said.

Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said while students are overwhelmed with the loss of a good friend, they can find peace in God's unconditional love.

"The promise of God is not to take away our hurt, but the promise of God is to go with us," he said. "A life like Dixie's calls us to courage to love again."

The pain, though, will lessen in time and Dixie's memories will be carried on with those she loved.

"Little by little," Lee Spence said, "we will begin to remember not only that Dixie died, but that she lived and enjoyed it."

SKUJYTE | Athlete wins silver

collegiate indoor record-holder in the pentathlon, scoring 4,439 points at the 2002 Big 12 Championships.

Skujyte said she eventually grew to understand the magnitude of her accomplishments.

"I didn't exactly understand the importance of those meets," she said. "I knew I was expected to go and do well because that is the reason they gave me a scholarship, but now I understand it a little more."

Skujyte said she has fond memories of her time as a K-State student-athlete.

"It was great," she said. "I love to compete. I love that I was important for the team."

In the 2004 Olympic Games, Skujyte's expectations increased, and she rose to the challenge.

Her winning shot-put throw contributed to her silver medal performance for Lithuania in the heptathlon with a score of 6,345 points.

"It was something that I was dreaming about, but I couldn't believe that it happened," she said.

Skujyte obtained a bachelor's degree in kinesiology from K-State, and was soon hired as an assistant track coach.

The 25-year-old is in her third season as a K-State assistant coach and continues to train under Rovelto.

She said her final goal is to win the gold medal in the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing, China.

Rovelto said Skujyte is as good a person as she is an athlete.

"If anyone was around her, you would never know she was as good and successful an athlete as she is," Rovelto said.

"When you would find out she is an Olympic silver medalist, you probably would be shocked, because your perception of most athletes who experience that kind of success is probably quite different than what you would experience with her," he said.

"There isn't a dislikable bone in her body, and that is unique."

INTRAMURAL | Sports teams offer stress relief, social atmosphere

wouldn't normally see," Mahurin said. "With everyone's busy schedules, intramurals more or less kills two birds with one stone – exercising and socializing."

Socially speaking, the intramural program is an outlet for different organizations around campus to get together. Teams are organized from fraternities, sororities, residence halls and faculty/staff groups and are offered for both men and women.

Another perk to the intramural program is the scheduling.

Spring intramurals continue throughout the semester, with sports such as badminton, tennis and horseshoes starting later in the spring.

Junior Amber Burdolski, an avid tennis player, said she was concerned tennis intramurals would not fit into her busy schedule, but was relieved to find out tennis starts March 30, when she is anticipating more free time.

"I think K-State has a great intramural program because there is always a fun, unique sport starting at a different time," Burdolski said.

Senior Joe Brown, last spring's badminton doubles champion (with former K-State student Peter Carter), said it is hard to find a league that offers badminton.

Brown, who admits to being competitive, said he enjoys badminton because, while it is competitive, it is difficult to take badminton too seriously.

"I used to play badminton in the backyard with my family, and it was a lot of fun," Brown said.

"I played sports in high school, and I like keeping the competitive spirit going, but it's easy to keep your sense of humor in badminton."

While Brown may keep his sense of humor during badminton, he is still looking to defend his title with his new partner, junior Matt Hall, this spring.

"I am definitely looking to advance as far as possible," Brown said.

FAULT | Precautions taken in area

fault is not very likely, but ultimately possible since it is an active fault. Gao gave it a 3 percent chance in a 100-year period.

"It has happened before and there's nothing to say it can't happen again," Knapp said.

If an earthquake did occur here, the extent of the damage would depend on how big the earthquake.

"The less frequent the earthquake, the more hazardous they can be," she said.

Knapp said this is because people in Kansas don't take enough earthquake precautions.

"Stuff that is done routinely in more earthquake prone areas simply aren't considered," Knapp said.

Precautions are being taken in the area in case the fault ever does cause an earthquake.

Most houses in Manhattan are strong and only one or two stories high so the damage to them would be less severe than the damage to the dam, he said.

Tylie McFarlane, sophomore in speech pathology, said she had never heard about the fault line along the dam.

"I never thought about earthquakes here," McFarlane said.

Knapp said the most important thing to do in an earthquake is to not panic.

"You should remain calm, which is one of the hardest things to do," she said.

STAMPEDE | Dam project will cause little interference with event

not moved, and it will still remain in the Manhattan area," Nicol said.

Scott Allegrucci, director of Travel and Tourism, said the purpose of the Attraction Development Grant is to help events attract tourists to Kansas.

"The main goal is strategic investment to attract out-of-state destination travelers for Kansas," Allegrucci said.

Money for the grants comes from the state's lottery proceeds. A total of $296,952 was awarded through grants to 10 different events this year. A committee comprised of two individuals from the tourism community and a non-tourism staff member from the Department of Commerce reviewed the grant applications.

Rouse said most people misunderstood how the dam project would affect the Stampede.

"I think when people heard the scope of the project, they visualized it will have a direct effect on (Country Stampede)," Rouse said, adding that the project will provide minimal inconvenience for Stampede attendees.

Rouse said the project will add a new campground, a new showerhouse and more access roads to the site, which will allow for a new entrance to Stampede.

Rouse said that having the grant will allow out-of-state Country Stampede fans to have no doubt as to where Stampede will be this year.

"We just want to reinforce that no, we're not moving," Rouse said. "We're going to be here."

BASKETBALL | Rebounds key

jumping out to an early 9-0 lead, and led by as much as 18 points in the first half.

Senior forward Kendra Wecker scored 12 of her game-high 26 points in the first half, for her 43rd career double-double.

"We were taking what they were giving us," Wecker said.

"We knocked a few down early, we jumped on them that way, but in the second half we established our post game."

Led by Wecker's 15 rebounds and Megan Mahoney's 10, the Wildcats finished with 60 rebounds.

"When our team rebounds as well as it did tonight, it makes us difficult to beat," senior guard Laurie Koehn said.

CITY COMMISSION | Primary set for March 1

City Commission is normal.

She said over the past 15 years eight candidates is about the average.

County Clerk Rich Vargo said the spring elections always have lower turnouts than the fall elections.

"For the primary election, it will be significantly less," he said. "They're generally smaller turnouts."

Vargo said the addition of some questions on the ballot affects voter turnout.

This year there will be a sales tax initiative to help fund the Manhattan-Ogden school district, and there could be a question banning same-sex marriage for Kansas. Both will bring out more voters, he said.

Wecker reaches historical 2,000-point mark in win

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Randy Wecker didn't know it had happened until he pulled open Sunday's sports page.

The fact that his daughter, K-State All-America senior forward Kendra Wecker, had become just the fifth woman in Big 12 history to score 2,000 career points wasn't something he or Kendra paid much attention to.

"I've never spoken with Kendra about numbers or anything like that," he said. "It's not something we sit down and talk about."

With her 19-point performance against Texas Tech last Saturday, Kendra Wecker broke the 2,000 point plateau for her career, and is on pace to break the Big 12 record of 2,241 points, set last year by former Wildcat teammate Nicole Ohlde.

But Kendra Wecker insists that she has not been alone in her accomplishments.

"I didn't get 2,000 points on my own," she said. "Every game, I've had people set me up in positions to score the ball and get me the ball where I needed it."

With senior teammates Laurie Koehn and Megan Mahoney, Kendra Wecker has been a crucial part of K-State's "Big Three" since her freshman season in 2000-01.

Koehn, who recently broke into the NCAA's top-five in all-time 3-pointers made, said she understands the entire team's role in Kendra Wecker's accomplishments, but said Kendra Wecker should be recognized for what she has accomplished herself.

"I know Kendra would be the first to say it – and anyone who has ever reached an individual milestone – our team would be the first to say that it is more a tribute to the team than anything," Koehn said. "But at the same time, Kendra is unbelievable.

"I think the credit goes all to her."

She was named Miss Kansas Basketball in 2000-01, and was named the USA Today, Gatorade and Kansas Sports Hall of Fame Kansas High School Player of the Year her senior year at Marysville High School.

When K-State came calling in high school, Randy Wecker said he was thrilled when Kendra Wecker decided to stay in Kansas to play the collegiate game.

Winning without Ohlde

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Megan Mahoney drives to the basket during the second half against Missouri on Jan. 11.

It was the big win they did not have last year.

The biggest win in the last three years without its biggest player – departed graduate Nicole Ohlde.

It was a 55-53 last-second win on the road over No. 10 Texas Tech – a win that K-State leading scorer Kendra Wecker said would not have happened last year, even with Ohlde on the floor.

"At this point last year, I don't know if this team would have won on the road at Tech," Wecker said. "I don't know if we had the toughness – the mental toughness – to get the job done down there."

Even with the loss of Ohlde, who led the Wildcats in scoring last year and is K-State's all-time points leader, the Wildcats have made up for her point production as a whole. With the exception of senior Laurie Koehn, every Wildcat has increased her scoring output this year.

"Obviously losing Ohlde – who was a huge asset to our team – was tough," senior point guard Chelsea Domenico said. "But staying true to who we are and knowing who we have this year and working with that, we have all the confidence in the world with whoever steps out on the court."

Another reason K-State is still on track without Ohlde is the emergence of sophomore guard Claire Coggins and freshman forward/center Shana Wheeler.

Coggins has doubled her scoring average from last year, nearly scoring in double figures every game. Wheeler averages almost five points a game, but the most impressive statistic is K-State 9-0 record through 17 games when she starts.

"I think Shana Wheeler has come in and done a great job for us," Wecker said. "She's continuing to get better with every game in the Big 12 and we've had other players step up and score from the guard spot."

Although a defensive-minded player first, Wheeler said that when she gets the chance to score, she has the ability to do it.

"When I do get a chance to score on the block, Coach wants me to make a move and put the ball in the hole and I feel like I'm capable of doing it," Wheeler said.

WECKER | Coach says Marysville native not done

"It has just been a dream come true – for her and for us," Randy Wecker said. "Being so close to Kansas State, where the people she grew up with that followed her when she was in high school, to be able to come down and watch her play at K-State, words can't even describe how it feels. I know Kendra feels the same way.

"She's honored that K-State was willing to give her a scholarship where she could play close to home."

After three seasons as a Wildcat, Wecker came into this season as a candidate for the Naismith and Wooden Player of the Year awards, among others.

She leads the Big 12 Conference in scoring at 20.4 points per game, in addition to being third in rebounding, fourth in steals and third in three-point percentage.

Senior guard Chelsea Domenico said having a player on the floor with Wecker's talent has made the game easier.

"She is incredible," Domenico said. "Knowing that you have a player on the court that can do that and someone that can step up and hit those shots and makes the plays – that's huge. It's great to know you have that and know that option is out there."

With the season past its halfway point and the Wildcats in a heated race for the conference championship, each game is a special moment for Randy Wecker.

"Bittersweet is a good word for that feeling. It's been wonderful and we've enjoyed every single moment of it," he said. "It's going to be a sad day when it's over."

Just days after Wecker reached 2,000 points, Coach Deb Patterson said Wecker's accomplishments aren't finished, and each will be remembered after Wecker's time as a Wildcat ends.

"She will forever be an icon in Kansas State women's basketball history," Patterson said. "It's just so appropriate to see her reach the 2,000 point plateau. The most exciting news is thinking of how many more she's going to score beyond that."

Wildcats hope to regain intensity against Iowa State

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For Jeremiah Massey, the reason K-State fell 65-51 last Saturday at Texas A&M is simple.

The senior forward said the Wildcats were out-worked.

"We got discombobulated," Massey said.

Massey scored a team-high 20 points against the Aggies.

"They just played harder than us. They beat us to the loose balls and the rebounds in the second half, and that was pretty much the whole story of the game."

Going into tonight's contest against Iowa State (8-7, 0-4) at 7 in Bramlage Coliseum, Massey said he and the rest of the Wildcats are determined not to allow another letdown.

"It's something we've got to fix," Massey said. "We've got to out-rebound these guys, out-hustle them and do all the small things to win the game."

The Cats will need an increase in intensity on both sides of the floor, as they (11-4, 1-3) will face one of the most highly regarded backcourts in the Big 12 Conference.

Sophomore guard Curtis Stinson leads the Cyclones in scoring (17.5 ppg), assists (4.7 apg) and steals (2.3 spg) and is among the Big 12's top five in all three categories. Fellow sophomore and backcourt mate Will Blalock adds 13.5 points, 4.1 assists and 1.6 steals per game.

The Bronx, N.Y., native scored 24 points on 11-of-13 shooting and added four assists in Iowa State's 14-point win over K-State in the first round of the 2004 Big 12 Tournament.

"It's basically all Curtis Stinson. We found that out last year when they beat us over at their place and the Big 12 Tournament," Massey said. "We've just got to slow him down. If we do that, we'll be fine."

Coach Jim Wooldridge said he is impressed with Iowa State despite its winless conference record.

"I think they're an outstanding team," Wooldridge said. "Their guard play is prolific, and Jared Homan is a threat.

Not only will the Wildcats have to step up their play defensively against the Cyclones, but also offensively, after a Texas A&M game in which Massey was the lone Wildcat in double-figures.

Peete, who was 1-of-11 against the Aggies, said the game still lingers in his mind, but he wants to bounce back against the Cyclones.

"I'm kind of thinking about it, but the game's in the past, so we've just got to get ready for the Iowa State game," Peete said.

K-State could have a decided mental advantage tonight.

Iowa State has not only fallen in its first four conference games, the Cyclones also have lost 27 straight Big 12 road games. Their last conference win away from Hilton Coliseum came against the Wildcats in February 2001.

Regardless of Iowa State's struggles, Wooldridge said he sees both teams in a similar situation a quarter of the way through the Big 12 season.

"There's moments in the season for a lot of teams when backs are up against the wall and you've got to come out fighting," Wooldridge said. "I'm not sure we won't have two teams in Bramlage in the same situation."

Splitting time at the post

Hayden, Hughes, Williams looking to improve

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Throughout the Big 12 Conference season, one thing has been consistent for the K-State Wildcats – the center position is up in the air.

Since opening league play, the Wildcats (11-4, 1-3) have used a rotation of junior Marques Hayden, sophomore Tyler Hughes and senior Justin Williams in the paint.

"It's an ongoing process," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "We are working hard to get it nailed down and evaluating it as we speak."

In four conference games, the trio is averaging 12 points per game on 42 percent shooting and pulling in 8.25 rebounds per game.

Despite their average numbers being comparable to other centers around the league, individually, the three have yet to pull in more than six rebounds in a game and have scored more than 10 points in a game only twice.

Hayden has been the most consistent, averaging 5.5 points and 3.5 rebounds per game, and playing the bulk of the minutes for the Wildcats. Hughes and Williams have come off the bench and both have provided sparks for the team at times.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey said the rotation of post players has not affected the team as some might think.

"Hughes has played some huge minutes for us this year," Massey said. "He can be a guy who can come in and make a big presence on the inside and Justin is another guy who can really score on the inside. Those guys really help us in the post."

Hughes said the rotation has elevated his level of play.

"I think it is pushing me to play harder," Hughes said. "I just want to get out on the court and do the best that I can do."

The trio's best game came in the double-overtime loss to Nebraska on Jan. 8.

Hayden, Williams and Hughes combined for 18 points, hit 60 percent from the free-throw line and grabbed eight rebounds.

Iowa State coach Wayne Morgan said the Wildcats' number of centers will cause some problems for the Cyclones when they visit Manhattan tonight.

"K-State has a lot of good centers," Morgan said. "We have to recognize who is in there and then defend accordingly."

However, against Texas A&M Saturday, the Wildcats' three centers were ineffective against the Aggies' physical defense.

Aggie freshman center Joseph Jones controlled the paint, out-scoring the three by eight points and grabbing eight rebounds to the trio's seven.

Hayden, Williams and Hughes next have to deal with a more experienced post-player in the Cyclones' senior center Jared Homan.

"We will continue to play three guys," Wooldridge said. "Eventually, someone is going to have to step up."

U.S. troops experience deadliest day in Iraq

By Jason Keyser
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A U.S. helicopter crashed in a desert sandstorm in the early morning darkness Wednesday, killing the 30 Marines and one Navy sailor aboard. Six other troops died in insurgent ambushes in the deadliest day for Americans since the Iraq war began nearly two years ago.

Only days before Iraq's crucial elections Sunday, militants set off at least eight car bombings that killed 13 people and injured 40 others, including 11 Americans. The guerrillas also carried out a string of attacks nationwide against schools that will serve as polling centers.

In Washington, President Bush called on Iraqis to defy terrorism and go to the polls despite relentless insurgent attacks. He said it was a "very discouraging" day when the U.S. death toll for the war rose above 1,400.

The CH-53E Super Stallion was carrying personnel from the 1st Marine Division on a security mission in support of the election when it went down about 1:20 a.m. near the town

Machine guns found in Geary County

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two separate discoveries of firearms in pastures have left officials bewildered.

During the holiday break, military arms were discovered at Milford Lake. Two weeks later, two smoke grenade launchers were found in the same area. The Army discovered no link between the incidents.

Five machine guns were found at Milford Lake between Dec. 29 and 30. Area residents found the weapons, an M-240, a 5.56 mm, and three Browning .50-caliber guns, in unusable condition.

The smoke launchers were found on Jan. 13 by the Geary County Sheriff's Department. The investigation is still under way, with no leads yet.

Army officials have determined no link between the two incidents, despite the weapons being found at the same location.

In a news release from Fort Riley Public Affairs, the post has no knowledge of how the weapons got there. The release did say, however, that units conduct training near the area.

The arms were not stolen from Fort Riley, and they hadn't been reported missing.

All of the weapons were turned over to the Fort Riley Criminal Investigation Division.

No charges have been filed, and Fort Riley Public Affairs Officer Jeff Coverdale declined to comment of suspects further because of the on-going investigation.

If citizens find any weapons, they are urged to turn them in to local law enforcement.

Coverdale said the training that occurs near the area "has nothing to do with the weapons found."

Veterinarian group assists local zoos with animal physicals, prosthetics

Herman the turtle may live up to, or even beyond, his 80-year life expectancy, thanks to James Carpenter.

Herman, a box turtle and local pet, was brought to the College of Veterinary Medicine a few weeks ago with a broken beak that Carpenter repaired using a special lacquer.

This is all in a day's work for vets working in the K-State Zoological Medicine Service, a service of the College of Veterinary Medicine. In a given week, the vets may be called upon to treat anything from an aardvark to a 10-gram gecko.

Carpenter, head of the Medicine Service, is accompanied by five other doctors of veterinary medicine, making the program one of the largest in the country. The vets who make up the team are dedicated to treating more than just everyday house pets, Carpenter said.

"There are 42,000 vertebrates out there we can work on, and most vets only work on dogs and cats," he said.

Carpenter has been at K-State for 15 years. He was the first faculty member of the Medicine Service, which began in 1990. With his guidance, it has developed into one of the largest in the country.

According to the College of Veterinary Medicine's Web site, more interns and residents have been trained at the Medicine Service than any other zoological program in the country.

Carpenter said exotic animal medicine is one of the most rapidly growing fields in veterinary medicine.

"It's also the most exciting and interesting," he said.

The doctors with the Medicine Service provide their knowledge and enthusiasm throughout the community. Not only can owners of exotic pets consult them for advice, but the veterinarians with the program also treat wildlife and serve the Topeka and Rolling Hills zoos and Sunset Zoological Park.

Scott Shoemaker, director of Sunset Zoo, said the services provided to the zoos are priceless.

Not only do the zoos receive the services of some of the best veterinarians in the field of zoological medicine, but they also have access to all the professionals in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

For the Topeka and Rolling Hills zoos, members of the K-State staff are always on hand, while Sunset Zoo receives three to four visits a week or more. In addition to dealing with emergency medical concerns, the vets with the program also give each animal in the zoos annual physicals.

One of the team's most recent patients was a tiger brought in from the Rolling Hills Zoo three weeks ago for an ovarian hysterectomy. The veterinarians with the program were assisted by Bonnie

New origin center teaches evolutionary theories to future science teachers

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Interested students now have more opportunities to study evolution and creation sciences than ever before. New proactive approaches to teaching the often touchy subject of evolution are now in effect.

K-State's new Center for the Understanding of Origins promotes evolutionary studies in the classroom.

The interdisciplinary center's faculty from the biology, English, entomology, history, psychology, philosophy and physics departments are currently working to develop courses that incorporate the origins of life into the curriculum.

The center was granted $150,000 to use over three years, and after that period the center will have to begin funding itself.

The center is good news for professors who believe in the importance of evolutionary theory, because it will further expand instruction on the subject.

Larry Scharmann, chair of secondary education, instructs future science teachers how to handle the subject of evolution in their classes. He said he believes that evolution and its components, such as natural selection, are powerful and useful tools for helping individuals make appropriate life decisions.

Scharmann said he supports the funding that K-State has provided for the center because it will hopefully clear up common misconceptions.

"They are trying to make sure that people will understand a little more about how science works and that there is more than one way of exploring how knowledge is produced," Scharmann said.

However, some still have problems supporting evolutionary studies because of its controversiality, and Kansas is already known for its heated debates on evolution.

The center hopes to alleviate

Interviews set for superintendent

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 has scheduled three interviews for the superintendent.

The district began looking for a new superintendent after Sharol Little's July 1 retirement.

Walt Pesaresi, president of the school board, said the candidates will be announced the morning of their interviews.

Twelve of the 18 applicants have experience as superintendents, and the others have experience in other administrative positions, Pesaresi said. Names cannot be released now for confidentiality reasons.

"It was nice to have applicants with superintendent experience," Pesaresi said.

Max Heim, field specialist for the Kansas Association of School Boards, said it was difficult to choose the candidates, but he was pleased with the results.

"We're just real happy with the slate of candidates we presented to the board," he said.

Helen Petrik, clerk for the board, said there could be more interviews scheduled.

"We're not sure if there will be more interviews," she said. "At this point, we're making arrangements to contact candidates."

"We're hopefully choosing a superintendent for several years down the road," he said. "Education is very important to the community."

Hale Library receives bookshelf boost

Expansion nears completion

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A $480,000 upgrade of Hale Library is nearly completed.

The project, intended to increase the capacity of the library, is nearing its final stages and should be completed early next month.

The $480,000 was spent to increase the shelving capacity of Hale by adding moveable shelving on the fourth floor. The project was started last fall, said Laurel Littrell, interim assistant dean of libraries.

The new additions are part of a plan implemented in 1997 when Hale was remodeled. Since then, budget cuts have affected the library, and the building was not as equipped as it should have been. This expansion is an attempt to add more shelving as Hale approaches its capacity for books.

The upgrade includes the installation of six new bays of movable shelving, which cost $80,000 each. This price includes the shelves, labor and additional materials.

Even though minor construction continues on the fourth floor, library administrators have received few, if any, complaints. Because the noise could not be prevented, it was made clear to students that the fourth floor would not be a good place to study. Special steps were taken to reduce noise during finals week of last semester to prevent any further stress on students.

Brent Sinclair, senior in environmental engineering, said he spends time almost every day on the fourth floor of Hale and hasn't been bothered by the noise.

"It's not that noisy," Sinclair said. "Progress is a little slow, but I see progress. Maybe that's why it's not so noisy."

Besides the noise, students may also encounter missing materials while books are being transferred to the new shelves.

Most of the books being moved are temporarily housed in the Great Room on the third floor. The books should be clearly labeled, but if students can't find what they are looking for, they should just ask a librarian, Jean Darbyshire, director of administrative services, said.

"We know we need to be accessible all the time," she said.

Along with the work on the fourth floor, the second floor of Hale is receiving a new look. The media shelving is being expanded, and additional tables and chairs are being added for students. These renovations started last December and will be finished in the coming weeks.

Pete Willett, installation manager for Automated Business Systems, secures a quad wire for the new shelving system on the fourth floor in Hale Library Wednesday afternoon. The fourth floor shelving renovations will be complete by February.

Students train to help solve Kansas dental shortage

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The problem of national shortages of dental care hits close to home for Kansas residents and students.

According to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, 17 counties in Kansas currently have fewer than one full-time dentist, and 10 of those have no practicing dentist at all. While rural counties have the greatest shortages, more densely settled counties still have access problems for the uninsured.

Many residents have problems finding an appointment with an available dentist, and students out of college struggle to find jobs in the dentistry field. Much of the problem may be attributed to the lack of a dental school in Kansas.

The closest dental school is the University of Missouri-Kansas City, and the school accepts only 20 students from Kansas each year. Ninety-six students are currently enrolled in the pre-dentistry program at K-State.

"It's a very competitive field, and it's really nerve-wracking," McGivern said. "There are so many students, even from K-State, that apply to UMKC and don't get in. It's unfair, but it's how things are."

Susan Watt, health professions adviser, said it is possible for K-State students to receive in-state tuition from UMKC through the Kansas Dentistry Assistance scholarship program, but Kansas taxpayers pay for the difference in tuition that it takes for Kansas students to attend school in Missouri.

John Killip, assistant dean of student programs at UMKC, said he doesn't see the need for another nearby dentistry school.

"Dental education is a very extensive education to provide a student, and it takes years to develop a school, support and faculty for it. Kansas City happens to be one of the finest schools in the nation," Killip said.

UMKC is trying to accommodate the needs of the growing number of applicants. Patrick Puntenney, publications editor for UMKC, said the class size was expanded recently to enable more dental students to graduate. The college has increased the average graduating class from 85 to 100 students.

In Kansas, no actions are being taken to fund a new college, so K-State encourages students to study hard to get into out-of-state dental schools.

Students interested in dentistry have many options to prepare them for the future, such as joining the Pre-Dental Club. This organization has been on campus since 1999 and, with 35 members, continues to grow.

Danielle Ternes, club president and senior in biology, said the organization provides many benefits for students, including support groups and tutors.

"A big part of getting into dental school is observation hours, and we help with that," Ternes said. "We also spend a lot of time with professionals, open houses and field trips, so that students can get their names out to schools."

As far as the future goes, career opportunities will present themselves regardless of where a student goes to school.

Puntenney said one reason for the shortages is aging of many dentists.

"There's going to be a lot of people retiring soon," he said.

Ternes also remains optimistic about the future of dentistry.

"More opportunities will arise, and soon there will be a great need for more dentists," she said.

TO THE POINT

Origin program provides needed information

With debates about evolution in the news and in political rhetoric, it is especially important that people are informed about the different theories of human existence.

Citizens should take an interest in their government, because it ultimately decides what can be taught about human origins in public schools.

The state of Kansas has debated endlessly about the theories of human existence and whether those theories should be taught in public schools.

In the midst of this controversy, people have expressed their strong religious and political viewpoints as well as their opinions about scientific theories.

K-State has taken strides to alleviate the debates by forming a Center for the Understanding of Origins. This department will inform and educate individuals on the different theories of evolution, so they may decide for themselves what they believe.

It is imperative that people take advantage of the opportunity to educate themselves on all different religions, especially with Kansas in such a state of debate.

With the resources available to explore different theories right at people's fingertips, the new Center for the Understanding of Origins at K-State should not be wasted.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Don't drink the Kool-Aid

Americans need to question other beliefs in order to prevent tragedy

In 1978, 900 Americans committed mass suicide in the remote nation of Guyana. The individuals involved were all members of a group called the People's Temple. The leader of the group was a man named Jim Jones, and the tragedy that ensued in Guyana came to be known as Jonestown.

AARON DUNCAN

Jim Jones had a strong hold on his followers, so when he commanded them to take their own lives, there was very little dissent. The members of the People's Temple killed themselves by drinking poisoned Kool-Aid.

What is strange about Jonestown is that the people involved in it did not start to join a cult or be part of a fringe religion. When it started, the People's Temple was one the most progressive religious organizations in the United States.

In the 1960s, Jim Jones was just an ordinary preacher, but he had problems finding a church where he felt comfortable. Jones believed strongly in desegregation and in allowing people of different races to worship side by side, an idea that many religions frowned upon at the time.

Jones was also an egalitarianist, believing that all people were equal in the eyes of God. He and his followers worked in the community to help the poor and the drug-addicted change their lives.

However, as time went on, Jones slowly demanded more from his followers and began adopting more radical views. This ended with the paranoid belief that the U.S. government was coming to murder them and that suicide was the only was out.

While it is comforting to think that Jonestown and similar tragedies are isolated events, I believe that Americans are slowly beginning to sip the poisoned Kool-Aid. By that I mean that we have begun to adopt more rigid viewpoints and have become less critical of our ideas. Look at the past election. Many swing or undecided voters were criticized for not having chosen a candidate early in the campaign.

Illustrations by Amanda Dinkel | COLLEGIAN

In reality, I believe these individuals are worthy of praise. Certainly, those who delayed making a decision because they felt the candidates weren't clear on their stances didn't deserve the mocking they received.

However, I think most undecided or swing voters had trouble deciding because they viewed both candidates critically and realized that each had strengths and weaknesses.

If someone liked Kerry's economic policies but favored Bush's foreign policies, then they had a tough decision to make.

To think Bush is always wrong or that the Democratic party has never had a valid idea is to begin to drink the Kool-Aid.

To vote for state representatives or county commissioners by casting a ballot solely on the basis of whether the candidates had Rs or Ds beside their names is to swallow the Kool-Aid.

Crimelibrary.com.com reported in 2004 that Jones "...increased his demands on the members only in small increments. At each new level of commitment, any reservations the person may have had could be easily rationalized and justified.

By the time Jones's demands had become oppressive, the individual members were so heavily committed that to not fulfill any new demands would require a complete denial of the correctness of all past decisions and behavior."

Put down the Kool-Aid, America. Grab a glass of water, rinse and spit, and start questioning some beliefs.

Diversity. An intellectually vacuous concept, mere window-dressing for an ideology with startling implications. Diversity-mania is spreading like cancer throughout colleges nationwide, surrounded by a fog of high-minded rhetoric. We must penetrate this fog and ask candidly, "What, really, is diversity?"

GRANT REICHERT

First, a disclaimer. Being against the concept of "diversity" as it is now applied on campus is not the same as being against minorities in the classroom or tolerance of other cultures, in much the same way as being against the "Patriot" Act doesn't make one unpatriotic. Diversity is not synonymous with racial or social justice, and it may in fact be inimical to them.

Taken literally, diversity simply means "difference." As individuals, we are all inherently diverse. By definition, to be an individual is to be different from all other individuals.

So what does it mean when diversophiles say a group needs more "diversity?" Since groups are composed of individuals, and all individuals are by definition completely unique, then aren't all groups already as diverse as possible?

Or, to channel Orwell, are all individuals diverse, but some individuals more diverse than others? Although this is like saying "Some individuals are more individual than others," diversophiles would say yes.

In order to reconcile this seeming absurdity, diversophiles redefine what it means to be an individual by giving primacy to race, ethnicity and gender over other features of individuality. When diversophiles say a group needs more diversity, they aren't saying it needs more Metallica fans. They focus primarily on race and sex as the definitive characteristics of individuals.

Realizing this is dangerously close to, if not actually, racism and sexism, diversophiles anchor these arbitrary characteristics of race and sex to other, non-arbitrary characteristics.

Therefore, while in its operation, "diversity" usually works like affirmative action or quotas, it's nonetheless done under the pretense of promoting a "viewpoint."

For example, diversophiles often say that a group lacking African-Americans must recruit some, because that group needs an African-American "viewpoint."

Using race or gender as a proxy for certain viewpoints in this way requires the existence of unique "black" or "female" viewpoints. Believing in such "viewpoints" is akin to saying that all African-Americans, or all females, think the same way – obviously vile characterizations.

Believing that people possess a monolithic racial "viewpoint" also demeans their individuality and belittles their achievements. Diversophiles indicate that minorities are needed, not because they are valued as individuals, but because they are the right color or sex.

This leads to the ultimate irony: the culmination of diversity, as it is now conceived, is really the subversion of the individual and therefore the destruction of true difference.

The "diversity" agenda has a further pernicious effect, embodied in the command to "celebrate diversity." Instead of just tolerating others, I must "celebrate" them. This prevents me from making negative judgments about other "viewpoints" and actually forces me to make positive ones.

The capacity and practice of forming value judgments is certainly part of what makes us human; denying us this is paternalistic and dehumanizing.

The foundation of a liberal education will decay if the diversophiles have their way. Impolitic but immensely relevant questions, such as whether Islam has inherent flaws that encourage terrorism or whether urban African-American society devalues education leading to lower black success rates, will not be asked, to the detriment of all.

Free inquiry will give way to bland "celebration" of all differences, no matter how flawed. Witness the hubbub surrounding the Harvard president's mere suggestion that biological factors might affect how each gender thinks. Is that the future?

In "The God That Failed," Arthur Koestler contemplated his experience as a communist. From this, he learned "that man is a reality, mankind an abstraction; that men cannot be treated as units in operations of political arithmetic because they behave like the symbols for zero and the infinite, which dislocates all mathematical operations [...]"

Through the sweet doublespeak of "diversity," diversophiles would have you subvert your individuality for the expedient "political arithmetic" of group identity. But remember: you are an individual, not an abstraction.

Tomato prices decline

Consumers see end of weather-related inflation

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

High tomato prices are finally coming to an end.

Fresh, field-grown tomatoes reached a record high price last month, averaging $2.47 per pound, according to the Economic Research Service for the United States Department of Agriculture. People around the United States were paying $2.99 to $3.99 per pound.

Shipping costs also rose from around $6 to more than $30 per 25-pound box, depending on quality and size.

Prices at Dillons and Wal-Mart have decreased to less than $2 for most tomato brands.

Andy Jerardo, economist for the Economic Research Service, said the high prices were due to bad weather. Severe storms hit California last October and damaged the field-grown crops. Then hurricanes hit Florida and delayed fall plantings of tomatoes.

"It all depends on the weather, and that determines how high the seasonal prices will be for tomatoes," Jerardo said. "Also, how many acres are planted and harvested will determine how well production goes."

Su-EllaMcKinzie, spokesperson for Dillons, said she attributes the high prices to bad weather.

"Seasonality is so much when you are dealing with produce," she said.

McKinzie also said tomatoes were not the only produce experiencing high costs. Oranges, zucchini, yellow squash, peppers and grapefruit all were increasing in price.

High prices do not necessarily damage the grocery market, because competing stores have the same prices, McKinzie said.

"If prices are high, then it will not do too much damage, because we are all in it together," McKinzie said. "But we have started to see a decline as of last week."

She said the fast-food market was most likely hurt by high prices, because it is based on profit and loss. Restaurants were hit hard by the shortage and steep prices.

Lorranda O'Farrell, Subway employee, said prices were extremely high.

"There was a point when we had to put a sign up that said we couldn't carry tomatoes," O'Farrell, junior in secondary education, said. "They were just too expensive."

She said although Subway does not have a specific list of vegetables they must supply, failing to supply an item on the menu can damage business.

Commuter trains crash in L.A.; 10 killed, more than 180 injured

By Tim Molloy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A suicidal man parked his SUV on the railroad tracks and set off a crash of two commuter trains Wednesday that hurled passengers down the aisles and turned rail cars into smoking, twisted heaps of steel, authorities said. At least 10 people were killed and more than 180 injured.

The collision took place just before daybreak on the outskirts of Los Angeles. Employees at a Costco store rushed to the scene and pulled riders from the tipped-over double-deck cars before the flames reached them. Dazed passengers staggered from the wreckage, some limping. One elderly man on the train was covered in blood and soot, his legs and arms apparently broken.

"I heard a noise. It got louder and louder," said passenger Diane Brady, 56. "And next thing I knew the train tilted, everyone was screaming and I held onto a pole for dear life. I held on for what seemed like a week and a half it seemed. It was a complete nightmare."

Dozens of the injured were in critical condition, and more than 120 people were sent to hospitals.

The wreck set in motion a huge rescue operation involving more than 300 firefighters, some of whom climbed ladders to reach the windows of the battered train cars. A triage center was set up in a parking lot, where the injured lay sprawled on color-coded mats – red for those with severe injuries, green for those less seriously hurt.

It was the nation's deadliest train accident in nearly six years.

Authorities said Juan Manuel Alvarez, 25, of Compton, parked his sport utility vehicle on the tracks and got out before a Metrolink train smashed into it. The train then derailed and collided with another train going in the opposite direction. That train also jumped the tracks.

Alvarez was arrested and will face homicide charges, Police Chief Randy Adams said. Alvarez had also slashed his wrists and stabbed himself, but the injuries were not believed to be life-threatening, authorities said. Adams said Alvarez had a criminal record that involved drugs.

"This whole incident was started by a deranged individual that was suicidal," Adams said. "I think his intent at that time was to take his own life but changed his mind prior to the train actually striking this vehicle."

Alvarez's sister-in-law, Maricela Amaya, told Telemundo TV that he had separated from his wife, Carmelita, three months ago. She said the wife got a court order to keep him away, but he had tried to see his wife and son.

"He was having problems with drugs and all that and was violent and because of that he separated from her," Amaya said in Spanish. "A few other times he went around as if he wanted to kill himself. I said if you're going to kill yourself, go kill yourself far away. Don't come by here telling that to my sister."

She said he had also threatened suicide in front of his son.

The crash occurred at about 6 a.m. in an industrial area of Glendale, a suburb north of Los Angeles. One train was headed for Los Angeles' Union Station from Moorpark, a western suburb. The other train was outbound from Union Station to the San Fernando Valley.

It was the worst U.S. rail tragedy since March 15, 1999, when an Amtrak train hit a truck and derailed near Bourbonnais, Ill., killing 11 people and injuring more than 100.

Hugo Moran, one of Costco employees who rushed to the wreck, could not fathom the suicide attempt.

"There's a lot of ways to do it without hurting someone else," Moran said. "Was he mad at himself or mad at the world? I don't understand it."

Kansas seatbelt use less than national average; young adults most at risk

By Annie Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Passengers and drivers who fail to wear seatbelts are more likely to die in the event of a car accident, according to a study performed by K-State civil engineering professor Sunanda Dissanayake.

The study also found that 75 percent of fatalities occur in rural areas. Dissanayake said that is something she did not expect.

"Police can't stop us for not wearing a seatbelt," she said. "There are 21 states with primary seatbelt laws, but Kansas is not one them."

According to a 2003 survey, 64 percent of front-seat passengers and drivers in Kansas wear seatbelts, compared to 79 percent nationwide.

Assistant Bureau Chief Chris Bortz said that almost every year the move to make seatbelt usage a primary law is introduced in the Kansas Senate, but it faces opposition every time.

"It is still deemed as a personal choice," he said. "We work hard to still try to educate the public about the need to wear their seatbelts."

The Highway Patrol, Kansas Department of Transportation and individual police departments collaborate every year to educate the public about the need to wear seatbelts.

They educate the public with the "Click It or Ticket" campaign and corridor enforcements where they take a segment of highway and watch specifically for seatbelts.

"If enforcement of seatbelt usage is not a primary law, then education of it is very important," Dissanayake said.

K-State police are also working to encourage drivers to buckle up, Patrol Commander Captain Richard Herrman said.

"We always encourage the officers to thank the drivers for wearing their seatbelts," he said.

Dissanayake said seatbelt usage is the main cause of fatalities in accidents, but other factors contribute.

"Not driving at a reasonable speed has led to higher fatalities," she said.

Herrman said the age group of 16- to 24-year-olds is the group that most neglects seatbelt usage, and people in that age group tend to take higher risks when driving.

"It's always been that way," he said. "It is a volatile age group; they use alcohol more and use seatbelts less."

Vanier Complex to undergo renovations

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though the football season ended almost two months ago, activity levels are still high at the Vanier Football Complex.

While much of the focus this off-season will be about improving the Wildcats on the playing field, a project is in the works to improve the building that houses the football program.

The final three phases of ongoing renovations to the football complex, which started in fall 2003, are slated to begin sometime this coming December, according to Sheahon Zenger, associate athletic director of development at K-State.

Zenger said fund raising is still taking place, but he is confident the project will start on time.

"When you have a fund-raising goal of $6 million and you've already raised $4-5 million, you feel pretty good about the direction everything is going," he said. "We could start the renovations now, but that would mean when the next football season comes around, you are going to be looking at an open, unfinished building in that end zone, and nobody wants to see that."

Three of the six phases were completed within the last year.

Fast Facts

Vanier Football Complex renovations

Phase 1: Relocation and expansion of the weight room: completed
Phase 2: Relocation and expansion of the sports medicine center: completed
Phase 3: Relocation and expansion of equipment room: completed
Phase 4: Renovation of the coaches' and players' locker rooms: to be completed
Phase 5: Two-story addition to south Vanier Football Complex, addition of hydrotherapy center, expansion of coaches' and staff offices: to be completed
Phase 6: Addition of more permanent north end zone seating: to be completed

KSU Athletic Department

Still slated to be completed are renovations to the coaches' and players' locker rooms, the addition of a state-of-the-art hydrotherapy center and seating changes to the north end zone of stadium.

With the addition of the hydrotherapy center, athletes will have access to the latest advancements in sports therapy.

"This is the cutting edge of sports medicine," Zenger said. "This is how athletes across the country are healing.

NFL | Brady sues General Motors Corp for $2 million

LOS ANGELES — New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady is suing General Motors Corp. for allegedly using his likeness in an ad after his contract with the automobile giant had expired.

Brady

Brady filed the $2 million lawsuit Monday in Los Angeles Superior Court. He also is seeking punitive damages.

According to the suit, Brady signed a contract with GM in July 2003, agreeing to autograph merchandise, make personal appearances on behalf of the company and do ads for a number of Cadillac dealerships in the Boston area.

That contract expired Jan. 1, 2004. Brady alleges that on Jan. 30, 2004, GM asked to use a print ad featuring his name and photograph in connection with that year's Super Bowl.

NFL | Heisman winner Crouch signs with Chiefs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Eric Crouch signed with the Kansas City Chiefs in another attempt to make the NFL as a defensive back.

Crouch

The Chiefs will look at Crouch as a safety and plan to send him to NFL Europe this spring. Crouch, who won the Heisman in 2001 at Nebraska, is committed to defense, Chiefs coach Dick Vermeil said.

In 2002, Crouch was a third-round draft choice of the St. Louis Rams, who wanted to use him as a receiver, but he left the team in training camp when he wasn't given a chance at quarterback. He later had a couple of trials with the Green Bay Packers, once as a quarterback and then as a safety, but he was released before training camp last season.

MLB | Mientkiewicz on the verge of signing with Mets

Mientkiewicz

The Mets were awaiting medical records Wednesday and hoped to finalize a trade to acquire the former Gold Glove first baseman from the Boston Red Sox for a minor leaguer who played Class-A ball last year.

New York made the decision to obtain Mientkiewicz after Carlos Delgado accepted the Florida Marlins' $52 million, four-year offer Tuesday, spurning a $52 million proposal from New York.

NBA | Nuggets talk to Karl about vacant coaching spot

DENVER — George Karl met with Denver general manager Kiki Vandeweghe about the Nuggets' vacant coaching position, but the job has not been offered to the former NBA coach.

Vandeweghe said he spoke with Karl, who works as an analyst for ESPN, in Chicago on Monday, a day before Denver's game against the Chicago Bulls.

Karl has been considered one of the leading candidates to replace Jeff Bzdelik, who was fired Dec. 28, after the Nuggets opened the season 13-15. Karl, who last coached in the NBA in 2002-03 at Milwaukee, has personal and professional ties with Nuggets owner Stan Kroenke and has said Denver is one of the top three places he'd like to coach.

NHL | No new proposal from hockey league this week

NEW YORK — Here's what will be missing from the next round of hockey negotiations: commissioner Gary Bettman, union chief Bob Goodenow and a new proposal from the NHL.

Just like last week, when talks were held for two days, discussions will continue in three-man groups and without Bettman and Goodenow. Both sides believe an open dialogue will help generate ideas better than working on a formal proposal.

NHL losing fan base to lockout

NATHAN RYERSON

The National Hockey League is trying to help its financial situation, but in the end, they are going to end up hurting their reputation.

The NHL is engaged in a lockout with the NHL Player's Association over salary cap issues and a loss of revenue for team owners.

As it stands, the strike has wasted most of the season, and experts are now saying that the lockout may continue well into next season.

If that stands, the NHL will become the first North American sports league to lose an entire season due to lockout.

The problems they are trying to solve are only worsening because of the lockout.

Most fans of sports teams are finicky. If you give them nothing to cheer about for a long time, they move on to another team or sport.

Hockey fans are not any different. There are die-hard fans that won't leave, but the average fans are moving on.

I predict the fan base of the NHL to be half what it was last season, which would result in a loss of revenue that no lockout would be worth.

Bennitz's obituary in the Ottawa Citizen accused the commissioner and union leader of being "skunks for denying him the pleasure of watching the NHL on TV this year."

David Bennitz, Archie's son, told the Associated Press that his father grew angry during the last year of his life.

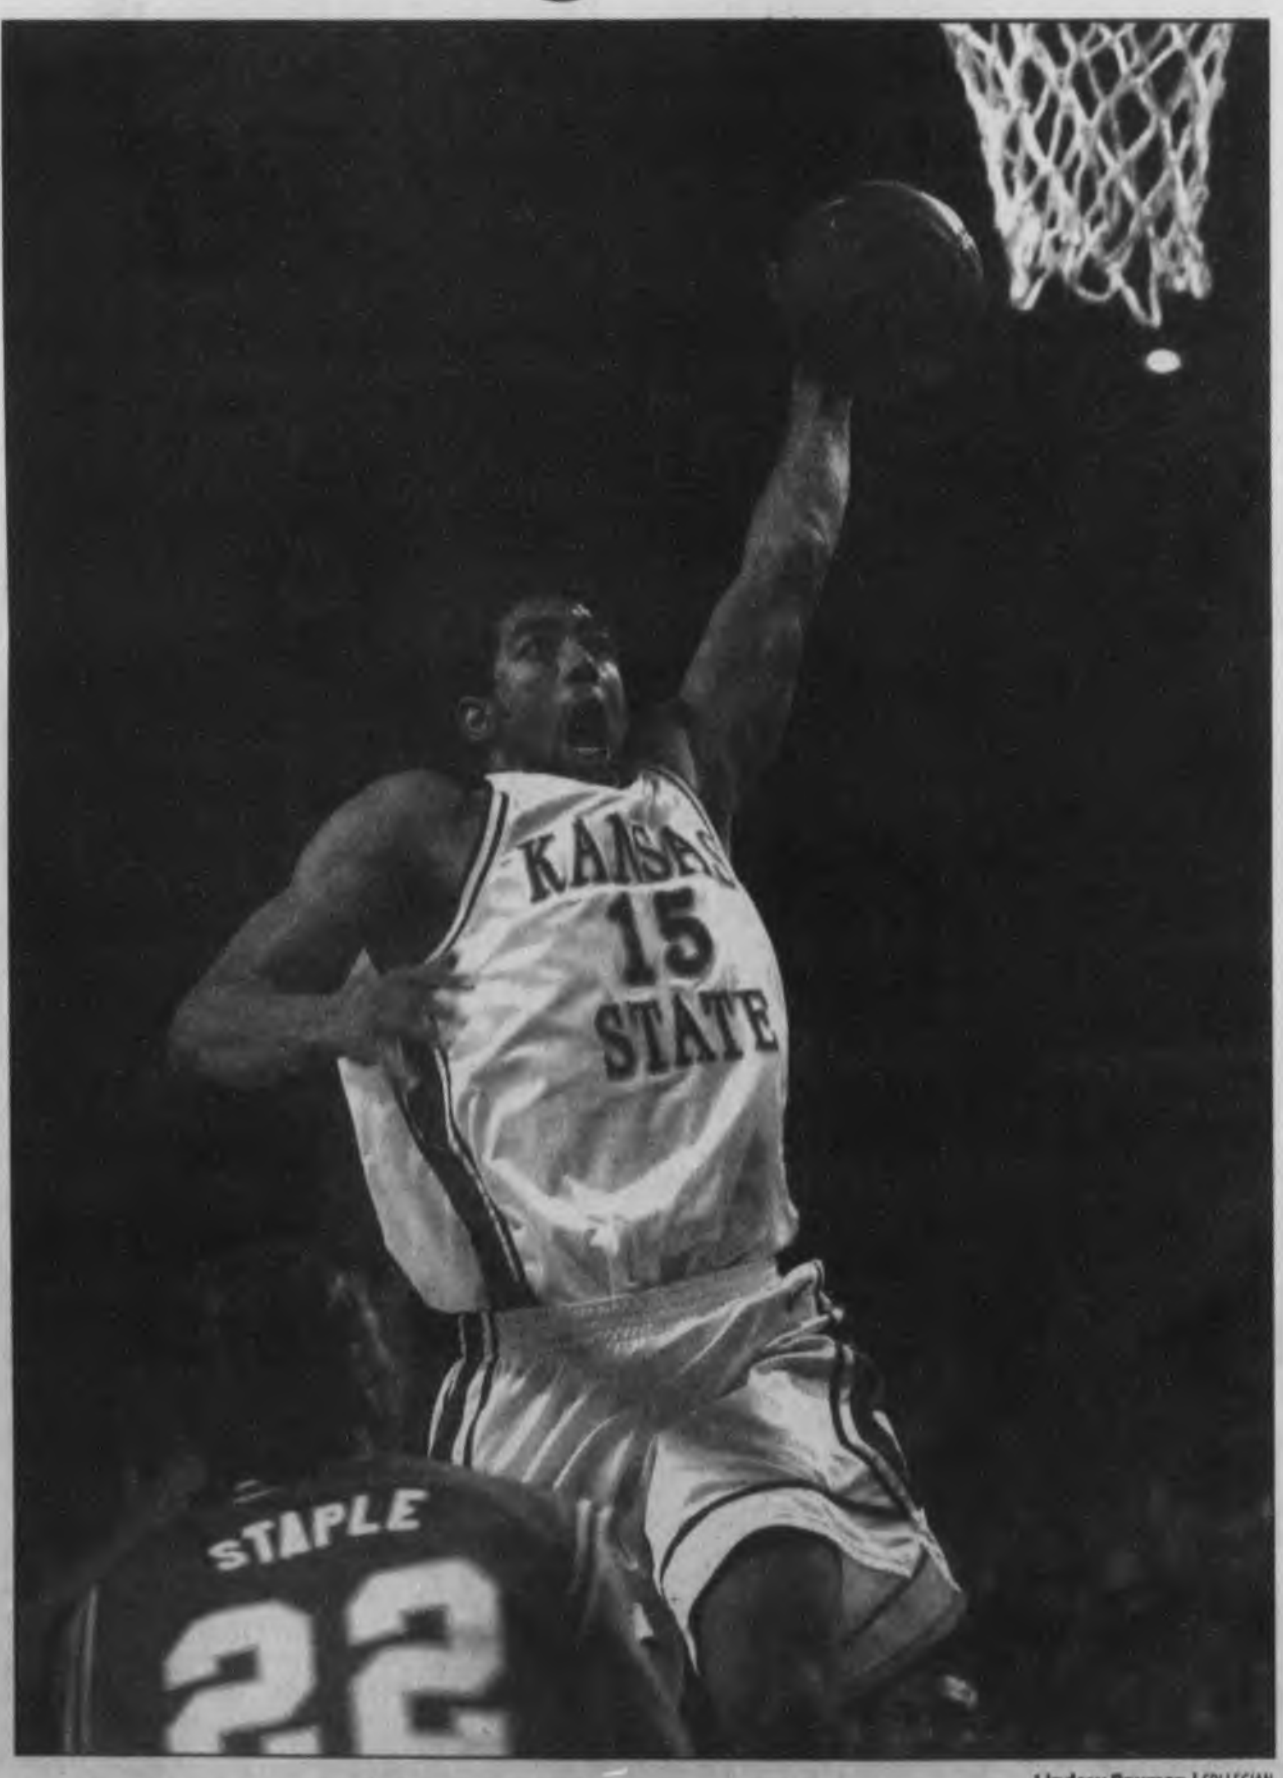
I was never a real NHL fan until the previous two seasons, when I became intrigued during the playoffs. I never sided for a team, but I watched and became amazed by the aggressiveness of play.

ESPN is currently replacing the NHL for the time being – but permanently, in my opinion – with the World Series of Poker.

I am a poker fan deep down in my soul, but I view it to be a fad just like any other fad, and it has filled the NHL time slot, and filled it well.

Every time I flip through the channels and see the WSOP, I stop and watch. I am addicted, as are many other people in this country.



I predict the poker fad will come and go, but I don't see the NHL getting its time slot back soon.

If the players and the league don't reach an agreement, I don't think the NHL will ever survive.

I think the NHL will return, only to find the loss of revenue greater than it ever was before and the loss of fans that will have moved on – to the WSOP or some other sport – and may never return.

Massey leads K-State men in win over Cyclones

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It took a while, but K-State eventually found Jeremiah Massey.

The senior forward scored 19 of his game-high 23 points in the second half, as the Wildcats (12-4, 2-3) beat Iowa State 63-51 Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

"He played the entire second half, and we were able to get him the ball in some key moments," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "I know he felt fatigue, but I thought he played well on both ends. He gave us the offense we needed down the stretch to win the game."

Massey also grabbed a game-high 10 rebounds for his third double-double of the season.

The Wildcats had as many turnovers as field goals (11) in a sluggish first half for both teams, but it was the play of Cartier Martin that pushed K-State to a 32-25 halftime advantage.

While the Wildcats had a hard time getting the ball to Massey down low, Martin had 15 first-half points, including four 3-pointers.

The sophomore forward finished with 17 points.

"I just needed to knock down some shots at the beginning of the game to get us going," Martin said.

Despite only taking four shots before halftime, Massey, the team's leading scorer on the season, said he was not discouraged.

"I wasn't frustrated," Massey said. "(The Cyclones) were sending double teams, and they were swarming."

But Massey could not be contained for long. He was 6-of-8 from the floor and 7-of-9 from the free-throw line in the second half.

"The defense started moving," Massey said. "We

Aggieville shopping district offers variety of products, services

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Looking for something less mundane than the everyday products offered at Wal-Mart? If so, take a trip to Aggieville, where there's a little bit of something for everyone.

Aggieville stores offer a variety of products, including futons, novels, postcards, shoes, pet food, hemp twine, customized T-shirts and organic specialty food.

Aggieville has it all, and here's a few to get you started.

MERCADO GOURMET GROCERY

It creates a true cuisine ambiance. While you peruse the deli and cheese case, the wide assortment of coffees and teas, and the many imported specialty foods, the Food Network is playing in the background for inspiration.

Jeff Pfannenstiel, co-owner and operator, said that his store has "products you wouldn't find in a regular grocery store."

BALLARD SPORTING GOODS

It offers a diverse selection of athletic apparel and equipment for all ages. It also does custom T-shirt printing. Ballard has been in business for 52 years and has been in Aggieville since the 1980s.

SCALEY DAVE'S HERP SHACK

It specializes in reptiles but has a huge assortment of pets and pet supplies.

The store has recently been rearranged and expanded, said Allison Karnowski, a co-owner of the shop.

THE DUSTY BOOKSHELF

This bookstore has quite a collection of used books. Customers have the option of selling or trading books. Watch out, though – while you explore the store, two very friendly felines frolic about.

ZOTCIS ATTIRE

It has been in business for three years this March, has a variety of trendy clothing and accessories for men and women.

"We have a pretty wide range," Chris Dalida, Zotcis employee, said. "Anything from foxy/classic to edgy/funky."

Another Zotcis Attire is located in Wichita under the same ownership.

THE FUTON STORE

It has been in Aggieville for almost a decade, sells more than just futons.

They have laundry hampers, bedroom sets and foof chairs, which appear to be huge bean bags but are actually full of chopped up foam.

They also sell futon covers and can do special orders as well. Employee Jay Banks described the futons as "versatile but inexpensive."

ON THE WILDSIDE

It has been in business since 1990 and draws a crowd from towns all around Manhattan.

Since there aren't any other shops like it in the area, customers flock here for incense, tapestries, door beads, posters and band paraphernalia (especially that of Bob Marley, the Grateful Dead and Phish).

Also, custom hemp necklaces and bracelets can be ordered and made in the store.

For those who want to make their own jewelry, hemp twine and beads are available.

Steve Short of Manhattan tries on a coat while shopping at Ballard Sporting Goods in Aggieville. Ballard offers a variety of items including baseball gloves, K-State apparel and screen printing.

LACEY STORER

From the end of my freshman year until the summer before junior year, I was in a serious relationship. The relationship was a really good one, for the most part, but there came a point when something not so good happened. I began to have doubts.

Where was the relationship going? Did I want to get so serious at my age? Was he the one I wanted to get serious with? All these questions were constantly swimming around in my head.

Eventually, I made my doubts known to my boyfriend. I told him I needed some time to think and to figure out things by myself, and I wanted to take a break.

"Take a break" is one of the scariest and dumbest phrases in the dating language. It's one of the scariest because it means things are not as happy as they should be. It means one or both parties is dissatisfied with the relationship. It means the potential "the end" of your relationship.

It's one of the dumbest phrases, because, more often than not, "taking a break" is just another way of saying "one or both of us wants to break up, but we're too scared to say so right now. Let's wait awhile and see who caves first."

I know it can be scary to think about ending a relationship. You think about being alone and feeling lonely and sorry for yourself.

So you tell yourself, "If we take some time off, maybe things will get better, and I won't have to be single again." Not likely.

To me, it seems that taking a break from one another is just putting off the inevitable and wasting time in the process.

If you break up and decide to get back together, then your breakup was just a break anyway. If you break up and stay broken up, then the right decision was made.

But if you take a break, and then break up anyway, what good was all that time spent on your break?

Instead of spending what could have been post-breakup time accepting what happened and moving on, you wonder what you want and worry about what – or who – your partner is doing with the break time.

You are in relationship limbo. You're not completely apart, but you are still emotionally invested. You may be confused as to what exactly your break entails, which could lead to sticky situations. You don't want to end up like Ross on "Friends," screaming, "We were on a break!"

I'm sure there are those people out there who have taken breaks very successfully (and I want to know your secret). But for most of us, it's just a way to soften the blow.

The best solution is just to buck up and say, "I'm sorry, but it's over."

Rice receives confirmation

Senate votes after heated debate on war, terror

By Anne Gearan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Condoleezza Rice won confirmation as secretary of state Wednesday despite blistering criticism from Senate Democrats who accused her of misleading statements and said she must share the blame for mistakes and war deaths in Iraq.

The tally, though one-sided at 85-13, was still the largest "no" vote against any secretary of state nominee since 1825.

Separately, a Senate committee narrowly voted to send Alberto Gonzales' attorney general nomination to the full Senate. Jim Nicholson and Michael Leavitt won confirmation as the new secretaries of veterans affairs and health and human services respectively as President Bush's second-term Cabinet began to fill out.

Rice, Bush's national security adviser for four years and perhaps his closest adviser on the war and terrorism issues that dominated his first term, becomes the first black woman to be America's top diplomat.

Although Rice's nomination was never in doubt, Democrats mounted a lengthy and biting protest that showed she will not immediately match Powell's collegial relationship with Capitol Hill.

Democratic senators denounced Rice's job performance and truthfulness. Most criticism focused on Rice's role planning for war and explaining the threat posed by Saddam Hussein.

Some accused her of avoiding accountability for the absence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. Others said she seemed unwilling to acknowledge errors in planning or judgment.

"In the end, I could not excuse Dr. Rice's repeated misstatements," Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., said of his vote against Rice.

Durbin said Powell had been "a voice of moderation," and he expressed "hope that the responsibility of leadership will inspire Condoleezza Rice to follow his example."

Independent Sen. James M. Jeffords of Vermont also voted no.

Thirty-two Democrats voted to confirm Rice, although several said they did so with reservations. Rice won support from all 53 Republicans who voted. Two Republican senators did not cast votes.

Through history, no nominee for secretary of state has been defeated in the Senate. Many have had little or no opposition and were confirmed without recorded votes.

More recently, Henry Kissinger was approved 78-7, Dean Acheson 83-6 and Alexander Haig 93-6.

As White House national security adviser, Rice was not directly answerable to Congress. That changes now that she is a member of Bush's Cabinet who must testify before Congress and brief legislators in private. She will also have to ask Congress for the money to run the State Department.

"My own view is she is a forthright person," Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said after the vote. Lugar chairs the Foreign Relations Committee that questioned Rice over two days of contentious confirmation hearings last week. He said that trust will come with time.

Israelis, Palestinians progress in peace talks; consider deploying troops to Gaza

By Steven Gutkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM – Israeli and Palestinian negotiators achieved significant progress Wednesday toward ending violence and resuming peace talks, completing a plan for deploying Palestinian forces in the southern Gaza Strip and aiming for a summit within two weeks between the Israeli and Palestinian leaders.

And there were signals that Condoleezza Rice, the Bush administration's newly confirmed secretary of State, would be joining the peace process soon.

"She is planning to go to the region," Israeli Foreign Minister Silvan Shalom said after a meeting with Rice on Wednesday.

"I think it will be in a short time," the Israeli official said in an interview with CNN's Wolf Blitzer. "It will be a positive step."

New violence, however, underscored the fragility of the new momentum for peace.

A Palestinian preschooler in southern Gaza was killed by Israeli gunfire after militants fired a rocket at Israel. Israeli troops shot a Palestinian militant to death and wounded two others in a West Bank arrest raid.

About 100 Jewish settlers disrupted a meeting between Israeli and Palestinian commanders in southern Gaza, throwing stones and slashing tires of participants' vehicles.

None of this appeared to spoil a new flurry of peace moves offering the prospect of an end to four years of Israeli-Palestinian bloodshed, following the Nov. 11 death of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

A senior aide to Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and a Palestinian Cabinet minister sat down together to discuss the summit idea and an emerging truce deal _ the first high-level diplomatic contact between the two sides in months.

Palestinians said they expect to take control of five West Bank cities within 10 days, and Israel indicated it would refrain from targeted killings of militants.

After cutting off ties with Palestinians two weeks ago in response to a militant attack in Gaza that killed six Israelis, Israel resumed diplomatic contacts on Wednesday.

Topeka to decide on gay discrimination ban's repeal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Voters in the state capital will decide March 1 whether to repeal a ban on discrimination based on sexual orientation in municipal employment and whether to prevent the city from extending other protections to gays and lesbians.

The city council, faced with a mandate to either adopt those policies or put them on the ballot, voted unanimously for an election.

In November, the council voted 5-4 for an ordinance prohibiting the city from discriminating against gays and lesbians in hiring and employment decisions.

The decision caused members of Topeka's Westboro Baptist Church, known for its picketing against homosexuality, to draft a counterproposal and lead a petition drive.

Their counterproposal would prevent the city from recognizing gays and lesbians as a protected class in its anti-discrimination policies, repealing the November ordinance.

Earlier this month, election officials confirmed Westboro Baptist and other supporters of the proposal had collected the 3,700 signatures from voters necessary to force its consideration.

City Attorney Brenden Long said Kansas law required an election or council adoption.

The council considered only a public vote, which will coincide with the city primary.

Long also said if voters approve the proposition, the council won't be able to repeal it for 10 years.

CARPENTER | Vet makes prosthetics for animals

Catterson, a local gynecologist, who helped perform the surgery.

Instead of the traditional, highly intrusive and exhausting surgery, Catterson was able to use methods usually reserved for humans. In a procedure still in its infancy, Catterson has been able to modify and improve it.

Not all the patients Carpenter and his peers treat come from zoos. Frequently, wildlife from the surrounding region is brought in for emergency treatment.

Last November, Carpenter made a prosthetic leg for a whooping crane shot in western Kansas.

Earlier this month, an injured trumpeter swan was treated at the facility after being shot. The endangered bird was transported from Missouri for care.

After spending five days in a modified horse stall, recovering from the surgery that both removed one of the bird's wings and saved its life, the swan was sent to a breeding center to live, Carpenter said.

Though zoological medicine is not a major in the college, many students have opportunities to work with the animals.

Every three weeks, she helps prepare four new veterinarians-in-training for what they may experience in their profession – everything from a two-toed sloth to a hedgehog. She said the students get a wide range of experience.

"It usually gives you a very broad aspect as to what species you will work on," she said.

EVOLUTION | Center teaches different theories such viewpoints through education.

According to the Center for the Understanding of Origins Web site, one of their goals is to help transform discussions of evolution from hostile bantering between 'experts' to informed debate among ordinary citizens.

Tim Bolton, director of the center and professor of physics, said that other main objectives of the center are to improve scholarship and research, education, and outreach of the origins. However, some of the major scientific origins like natural selection and intelligent design often can't be presented without controversy arising.

Bolton said such controversies influence the center's actions, but not necessarily in a negative way.

"Controversy is good. We'd still like students to learn more about biological and physical evolution," he said.

The center hopes to help introduce theories of origins into the mainstream.

"We're taking on a subject that is of great interest to the public, and I hope that it will stimulate healthier discussions," Bolton said.

To help with this reintroduction, a new class called "Origins: Humanity Life and the Universe" will be available to students in fall 2006 that will discuss evolution and the origins of life, Earth, and intelligence. The class will be taught by faculty from seven different departments.

Soon evolutionary theory will even be taught in-depth in philosophy classes.

Bruce Glymour, co-director of the center and associate professor of philosophy, said that an upper-level philosophy of biology class has just been approved. It too will include evolutionary theory, but it won't be implemented until next year.

Along with new courses, the center also offers lectures open to the public. On March 17, Robert Pennock, philosopher and professor at Michigan State University, will lecture over evolutionary debate and other related topics.

In April, biologists Sue Wessler and Spencer Barrett will be featured speakers to discuss science and creation.

The center also is sponsoring a novel outreach project that includes a roundtable and panel. The discussion "Science and Creation: Views From People of Faith" will concern what religious people think about evolution in regard to their faith.

The panel will be moderated by former university provost James Coffman. It will be taped and then later aired on Channel 8.

Bolton said the center should be good for K-State, offering new experiences and ways of thought.

"We hope that more students outside of science majors get exposed to important ideas about modern scientific theory and the origins of the earth," Bolton said.

By allowing humanists to work together with scientists, the center will inevitably achieve one of its goals of stimulating more interest in evolution.

The center ultimately hopes to transfer such knowledge to students of K-State and the public.

of Rutbah, about 220 miles west of Baghdad, the military said.

The crash occurred during severe weather, but its cause was still under investigation, said Army Gen. John Abizaid, chief of U.S. Central Command. An Accuweather map showed sandstorms Wednesday in the western region of Iraq near the Jordanian border where the crash took place.

A search and rescue team was at the site. The victims were 30 Marines and one sailor, said Lt. Gen. John Sattler, the top Marine commander in Iraq – the most American service members to die in a single incident since the March 2003 invasion of Iraq.

The deadliest previous incident for U.S. troops was also a helicopter crash: a November 2004 collision of two Black Hawk helicopters that killed 17. Before Wednesday's bloodshed, the most Americans killed in one day came on the invasion's third day – March 23, 2003 – when 28 troops were killed during the U.S. military's drive to take Baghdad and topple Saddam Hussein.

The U.S. military has not seen such a high loss of life in one day in 15 years – since an explosion ripped through a gun turret on the USS Iowa during a training exercise in the Caribbean in April 1989, killing 47 sailors.

Iraqi security forces and civilians have borne the brunt of violence in Iraq, with bombings often killing scores of people at a time. More than 180 people were killed on March 2, 2004, during a string of suicide attacks at Shiite shrines in Karbala and Baghdad.

Violence has only increased ahead of Sunday's election, which will create a 275-member National Assembly and regional legislatures. Sunni Muslim extremists have threatened to sabotage the election, and many Sunni clerics have called for a boycott because of the presence of U.S. and other foreign troops.

The day's deaths brought to at least 1,409 the number of members of the U.S. military who have died in Iraq, according to an Associated Press count.

VANIER | Expansion to increase players' lounge

What we are seeing is better and quicker recovery times. Anytime that you can do what is best for the program, that is what you want to do."

An added feature to the player locker rooms will be the expansion of a 1,770 square-foot players' lounge, which will include lounge chairs, study tables, TVs and a pool table.

Ernie Barrett, director of development at K-State, said the inclusion of a players' lounge will benefit both current and prospective Wildcat athletes.

"(The lounge) will be a very relaxing place for our athletes to go in between classes and meetings," Barrett said. "It will make a big impression on new recruits, too. It will be a comfortable area where our athletes can hang out with their friends and teammates."

Barrett said the current lounge is far too small for the number of student athletes at K-State.

To complete the project, more permanent seating will be added to the north end zone along with several exterior designs for the building itself.

Zenger said they are still considering several designs, but the final design will be the one that best fits K-State's needs.

"Right now, the stadium is about the perfect size for Kansas State," he said. "If we go in and build a bunch of permanent seats, and then we don't sell those seats, it looks really bad.

"We are looking at a number of ideas that we would like to see in that end zone, one of which I call an amphitheater look, because it gives us a nice look to the stadium, even on days when a game doesn't take place, or on games where we don't sell those seats."

BASKETBALL | Massey brings crowd to its feet were swinging the ball, and I was getting wide-open looks."

Iowa State cut into the Wildcat lead several times in the second half, only to be pushed back by Massey and the Wildcats.

After the Cyclones narrowed the K-State lead to three, senior forward Justin Williams hit Massey with a pass as he was streaking down the lane with 4:57 remaining.

The result: a monstrous dunk that got almost all of the 6,713 in attendance on their feet.

Martin said the slam was good enough for ESPN.

"That was amazing," Martin said. "That should be on Sports-Center right there - the top 10."

Several possessions later, after Iowa State freshman guard Tasheed Carr hit a 3-pointer to cut the Wildcat lead to 55-51, Massey stepped up again, nailing a short jumper with 1:08 to play.

Along with the play of Massey and Martin, the play of sophomore guard Fred Peete was another bright spot for the Wildcats.

Peete had 15 points, following up a two-point, 1-of-11 shooting performance Saturday in the loss to Texas A&M.

There were few good points for the Cyclones (8-8, 0-5), as the highly-touted sophomore backcourt of Curtis Stinson and Will Blalock was held to a combined 15 points on 6-of-23 shooting.

Martin said he was pleased by the overall defensive effort.

"Only 51 points – that's a good job on our half," Martin. "We moved the ball, played defense and got the win."

Though it was far from pretty, Wooldridge said his team did what was necessary to get the victory.

"It was a hard-fought win for our guys, and it was a good win," Wooldridge said. "The phrase is, 'They found a way to win.'"

Up next for the Wildcats is a rematch with the Missouri Tigers Saturday in Columbia, Mo. The game will come just two weeks after K-State defeated the Tigers by 20 points at home.

Iraqis question whether country is ready for elections

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the birth of the United States, Patrick Henry mobilized our nation with his call of "Give me liberty or give me death." Now, 230 years later, Iraqi citizens are rallying behind the same call.

On Sunday, Iraq will have open elections for the first time in more than half a century. Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, said he doesn't think there have ever been free elections in Iraq.

As the opportunity for Iraqi citizens abroad to register to vote comes to an end, and election day looms on the horizon, Iraq is far from stable. Many have questioned whether the vote should even take place.

For Asma Al-Rawi, a junior in physics who grew up in Iraq, the elections in Iraq can be summarized in a single phrase, "I don't think the people are ready."

It is not a question of whether the people want a democracy – virtually every Iraqi does, Al-Rawi said. However, there is the question of priorities.

"The people are not looking for democracy, they are looking to survive," she said.

As the decades of tyrannical rule under Saddam Hussein come to a close, Iraq is a country in turmoil. Al-Rawi describes a desperate situation.

"It's like you are in a well and you want to get out – you want to survive. You don't think 'There is a movie in a cinema I want to see.' You want to get out."

Many citizens do not have access to the most basic of services like electricity, clean water and adequate food supplies. Al-Rawi said these should come first.

"Before I think about an election, I should think about electricity and food and water," she said.

The current lack of means in Iraq is just the beginning of the problems. Iraqi people have to deal with their new-found cultural diversity.

For decades, the Baath party, who were primarily Sunni, controlled the country while many in the Shiite and Kurdish communities suffered. Now, both Kurds and Shiites demand their opinions be heard in their juvenile government.

At the onset of this fledgling nation's first taste of freedom, the interim government will have to enforce quotas restricting how many representatives each sect may possess, hopefully assuring that no group will be over represented.

Kansas schools honor birthday with memorable productions

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas history is alive in local schools.

Stories and historical facts are being discussed on a number of levels of the educational system because Kansas Day is Saturday. However, most schools have specific curriculums and traditions that are addressed with Kansas history each year.

Woodrow Wilson elementary school first grade teacher, Kay Hoffman, said the first grade students at the school always perform a Kansas play around Kansas Day.

She said Kansas history is a part of the required curriculum for their first graders, and has become a tradition at the school.

"There were two first grade teachers at Northview (elementary school) who wrote this play," Hoffman said. "It's a chance for the children to learn about Kansas. In it there are two grandparents giving children information about Kansas when they ask questions. Kansas history is a main part of the month of January social studies curriculum."

Hoffman said she taught at Northview for seven years and when she began teaching at Woodrow Wilson, she brought the play and has had her first graders perform it for the past 22 years.

Hoffman said the play is a fun way to teach children the required history of Kansas curriculum. She said the tradition has created many memories for children.

"I've found it's one thing that students always remember," Hoffman said. "I'll get former students who still stop by and say: 'Oh, do you still do the play? I still know my part.' So it's something that will stay with them for a long time."

Woodrow Wilson Elementary School principal Katha Hurt said the serious curriculum of Kansas history is taught in the fourth grade at Wilson Elementary School.

She said one way in which the teachers keep students interested in Kansas history is that they don't have textbooks in which the children must read, the teachers create their own curriculum.

"The kids always seem interested in the history of Kansas by the way our teachers teach it," Hurt said. "They're always intrigued about the fighting over slavery and the consequences of it."

"Our teachers teach most of the personalities, like John Brown, before

Scholarship applications due Tuesday

By Dane Lickteig
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although more than $6 million worth of scholarships is available to K-State students, about half of K-State students don't apply.

Larry Moeder, director of admissions and student financial assistance, said many students don't apply because they don't think they have a chance.

"They should always just apply and let someone else decide whether or not they are qualified," he said.

As easy as it may sound, many situations arise where there is just not enough time to find and apply for scholarships, Scholarship Adviser Jim Hohenbary said.

"Many students don't try to get scholarships because of other time commitments, such as homework and campus activities. It is just too much time to devote to something without a certain outcome," he said.

Not having a guaranteed outcome has prevented students from doing their part. Even some who applied before college have drifted away from the scholarship scene.

Jenni John, sophomore in secondary education, said she is one of those students.

"I applied to many scholarships coming into school, but since I've been here, the only ones I bother with are the general university scholarship application and those in my department," she said. "I don't feel the need to give all the effort in vain."

Along with the obstacle of other time commitments, there are also myths holding students back from applying. One of those myths is that all scholarships require a high grade point average. Although many do require a certain GPA, some just require involvement in the student's major or organizations. Some just require a little effort, Moeder said.

"Students should never turn down a scholarship with an essay," he said. "Most of those scholarships with essays have low turnout, so the competition isn't as intense and your chances are higher then those without an essay."

Another myth commonly believed is the idea that if there is not enough applicants, or strong enough applicants, that the scholarship is not awarded. If the scholarship exists, then that scholarship will be awarded regardless of who applies, Moeder said.

Senate abolishes Fine Arts Council, takes over funding control

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate disbanded the Fine Arts Council Thursday.

The council was originally created to allocate fine arts privilege fees to fine arts organizations and departments, but that responsibility was taken away in fall 2002 and was given to the Student Governing Association Allocations Committee.

Since then, the council's sole responsibility has been to make recommendations to the Allocations Committee.

Senate decided to have representation on the committee from the 10 groups represented by the council. This motion passed 48-0.

Michael Burns, chair of the Privilege Fees Committee, said that representation will give the Allocations Committee a better idea of where funding is needed.

Because representation will be allowed, Senate also voted to get rid of the council, so the positions will not be voted on in the SGA general elections this semester. The motion also passed 48-0.

David McCandless, elections commissioner, said there is no reason to have the council with the representation in the committee.

"It would make no sense to vote on a council that doesn't do anything," he said.

In other business, Senate gave $696.50 to the Chinese Student and Scholar Association to help fund its annual Chinese Spring Festival, which will be Feb. 6.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Man faces charges
The man who authorities say caused the train derailment that killed at least 11 was to face criminal charges Thursday for driving his SUV onto a railroad track in an apparent attempt to commit suicide. Juan Manuel Alvarez, 25, got out of his green Jeep Cherokee before the two commuter trains crashed Wednesday morning.

BTK clue found
Investigators have tracked down a missing communication that may have come from the BTK serial killer, leading police to again appeal to the public for help in solving the case. KAKE, a Wichita television station, received a postcard Tuesday that led police to a suspicious package in a rural area northwest of the city.

Palestine issues
The Palestinian leadership banned civilians on Thursday from carrying weapons, its latest step aimed at reining in militant violence, as the Palestinian leader said he was awaiting Israel's response on a proposal for a mutual cease-fire declaration.

1 | HONOR THY STATE

Celebrate the 144th birthday of Kansas on Saturday by studying Kansas history, calling relatives from another state and gloating, dancing on the Konza Prairie, hugging (or kissing) a Kansan or watching (and cursing) the "Wizard of Oz." Basically do anything in Kansas and be happy.

2 | RIDE 'EM

Watch the 30 bull riders who will ride bulls in honor of the late Brett Chushenbery, a former K-State student and member of the KSU rodeo team at 7 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena. There will also be a bullfighting event and commentary from funny man Doug Munsell. Admission is $5 for adults, $4 for students with a valid ID, $3 for kids 6-12 years old and kids under 6 are free.

3 | BATTLE OF THE BRAINS

Watch eight teams compete for three top cash prizes at the UPC sponsored College Bowl. Teams of four will test their trivia knowledge 8:30 a.m. Saturday, on the 2nd Floor Concourse in the K-State Student Union.

4 | GIVE A CAN

Manhattan has declared Sunday Homeless Memorial Day. Help out those less fortunate by volunteering time at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, 831 Leavenworth St., or donating household supplies, canned and snack foods as well as other supplies. Call the shelter at 537-3113 for more details.

5 | HANDEL'S MESSIAH

Members of the community will rehearse pieces of music from 2-4:30 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center, with the performance at 7:30 p.m. The performance will be conducted by K-State music professor Reginald Pittman. Admission is a donation or a can of food at the door for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

K-State site of national tourney

Weekend's profit will be donated to speech department

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students representing more than 25 colleges and universities will be on K-State's campus this weekend for the annual Power Cat Preview, a forensics swing tournament.

K-State has a swing tournament each spring.

This year, the tournament also will prepare students for nationals.

The swing tournament allows students to compete in two tournaments in one weekend. Saturday's tournament will take place at K-State followed by a tournament on Sunday at the University of Nebraska.

K-State will be the site of the National Forensics Tournament April 2-4.

Craig Brown, director of forensics, said the tournament will allow other universities to get acquainted with the campus.

"The Power Cat Preview is an opportunity for students who will be competing in nationals to come and get a feel for our campus," he said.

Eighty classrooms have been reserved for the competitions, which include 11 different events, Brown said. Each event has a $10 entry fee.

Informative, persuasive, impromptu, prose, poetry and duo interpretation are a few events students can enter.

Brown said this swing setup allows colleges with limited budget to travel and compete at both tournaments.

"You usually don't compete in the tournament you host," Brown said.

A bid must be placed two years prior to having a national tournament at a college, Brown said. The last national tournament at K-State was in 1984.

K-State began preparing for this weekend six months ago, said Bobby Imbody, assistant director of individual events.

Imbody said an event this size brings concerns.

"I'm worried that it may be too big, that the weather may be bad or that we won't have enough judges," Imbody said.

He said this would be a successful weekend if the other schools are happy about K-State having nationals, which is expected to bring 400 students.

Students enrolled in conference planning are helping with the tournament.

Erika Imbody, instructor of speech communications, said students would apply what they learn in class to the situation.

"They will be taking the theories and concepts they've studied and seeing how they work in the real world – outside the classroom," she said.

By helping out with the Power Cat Preview, these students will gain a better understanding of what's required to host the national tournament, Erika Imbody said.

The forensic team received funding from Student Government Association and the College of Arts and Sciences. Dell donated two computers, and alumni also provided funding.

"We also saved money since we are not traveling," Brown said.

Any money gained from the tournament will go to the speech department, he said.

Brown said he's excited about having the tournaments at K-State and that this weekend will be a run through for nationals.

"It's a lot of work, but it's an honor," Brown said.

Memorial bull ride, fight to honor former K-State rodeo team member

By Dane Lickteig
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local and professional bull riders will demonstrate their skills at the second annual Brett Cushenbery Memorial Bull Ride Saturday.

The bull riding will include 30 riders who are a blend of K-State students, local and professional riders. The top 10 scores will advance to ride one more time in the short round.

"The riders that will be there are riding to honor Cushenbery, but there is also a good purse that comes along with winning," said Lucas Maddy, second vice president of the Rodeo Club.

The bulls will not disappoint, event coordinator A.J. Griffin said, since there will be plenty of bucking action.

"There's going to be plenty of skilled riders in Weber on Saturday," Griffin said. "They're going to need that skill, too, because we have some really nice bulls coming in for them."

Along with the headlining bull riding, there will be another event that is uncommon to most rodeos – bullfighting.

The bullfights will match a bull against a fighter for a certain amount of time.

After the fight, the fighter will be judged on his or her performance.

The entertainment doesn't stop with the bulls and cowboys. Funny man Doug Munsell, from Ulysses, Kan., will keep the crowd amused in between rides and fights.

"We would love to see a bigger crowd then what made it out last year," Maddy said.

"And hopefully this event will be a new, fun experience for those newcomers."

The event is in honor of the late Brett Cushenbery, a former student at K-State and member of the KSU rodeo team for three years.

Cushenbery was trampled by a bull on Oct. 12, 2003, in Hutchinson, Kan. He died two days later.

The money raised from the first event helped Cushenbery's parents pay for hospital bills and also helped to fund the event on Saturday.

Now the money will fund future rodeos in remembrance of Cushenbery, Griffin said.

TO THE POINT

Iraqis' courage, response should be commended

By the time most Americans wake up on Sunday, the news of the Iraqi election will cover the headlines across the world. Despite not having the election results for nearly 10 days after the election, the level of violence will speak to the world in volumes.

Good or bad, political pundits, talk show hosts and experts will be busy telling Americans what had happened and what that means.

But before the media blitz begins, it is important that we take notice of the number of Iraqis who have to date, exemplified patriotism and courage.

According to the Jan. 24 New York Times, more than 14 million Iraqis eligible to vote have registered. The feat of registering is one that alone takes courage in face of a constant and growing danger of death.

The number of registered Iraqi civilians is not only a sign of their patriotism, but also one of bravery. Americans often speak of being patriotic for voting in our elections, but we don't have to fear a hail of bullets or improvised explosives.

Rarely, if ever, in our history has voting been such an act of bravery as it will be for Iraqi citizens.

But beyond patriotism and bravery, Americans should also note that the response in the Iraqi people is a good sign for things to come for our American troops. The desire of the Iraqi people is a sign that they desire a functioning government which makes the United States one step closer to bringing their troops home.

False modesty

Banning nakedness on TV has forced viewers to embrace pornography

Bow wow, chicka bow wow. Stupid song.

Sadly, it has been in my head for four days now. Ever since I opened the blessed pages of this wonderful newspaper and saw that "Inside Deep Throat," a documentary about the most famous porn movie of all time, will be in limited release in the U.S. starting Feb. 11.

ABBY HILES

And just in time for Valentine's Day too. Aww.

Talk about a present she'll remember, fellas. Nothing says "I love you" like classic, throw-back porn. Complete with cheesy music, shoddy camera work and horrible acting.

But I'm not judging.

Personally, I have never seen the movie that started this whole phenomenon that spawned a generation of porn lovers and the alias of the world's most famous government informant (see Nixon/Watergate).

My dad told me that he saw it once. Which, yes, I know sounds a little weird that I would be talking about pornography with my father. But he was just explaining to me that he saw it in our very own Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

In the 1970s, when my dad was at K-State (our basketball team nationally ranked and our football team defeated), Forum Hall was used exactly for its intended purpose: a place to have forums and discussions. Apparently the ACLU showed "Deep Throat" to whomever wanted to see it, and then held a discussion on pornography and its stigma in the United States after the show.

And although my dad said that half of the auditorium left after the movie, he remembers the discussion having a profound effect on him.

In a society such as ours, where the media throws the gamut of the world's problems on us on a nightly basis, why is it that sex and the naked human form cause such controversy?

Surely it's not false modesty. After all, there is no room for it in today's media. Moguls of the advertising world throw phallic imagery at us when we turn every page of a magazine.

Movies and TV push the limit of the censors by showing just a smidge less of a certain female body part and a few inches above a certain male one.

And all this is okay.

Advertising, movies, TV sitcoms and even certain cartoons test the boundaries of the sexual innuendo. So why is this acceptable and not pornography?

Our society has become an interesting dichotomy.

Sex will sell unbelievably well as long as it's done tastefully. We can hint at nakedness by showing cleavage or hint at intercourse by showing a couple smoking a cigarette, but we don't want to see the whole deal.

Oh no, that would be wrong. Indecent even.

False modesty and the taboo surrounding sex have become the parents of pornography. People feel they need to be ashamed of sex and of nakedness and so they have to go "underground" basically to enjoy it. If sex hadn't become so forbidden in our society, then pornography wouldn't be a big deal.

According to the Internet Movie Database, "Deep Throat" was banned in 23 states. With circulation like that, low sales are to be expected. But it was made for a mere $25,000, and to date it has grossed over $600 million.

Sex might be taboo, my friends, but it still sells.

Especially since "Deep Throat" has survived over 30 years and a documentary chronicling its conception is soon to hit the big screen.

Perhaps it's time for Forum Hall to host another screening.

Violence against pro-choice advocates only worsens situation

A very close friend of mine faced a troubling decision. She was alone, scared and pregnant. As a K-State junior, she was already pinching pennies to feed herself and knew she could not care for a baby.

ANNIE LEWIS

Friends pressured her to do away with the problem and go on with her life. Like many women who have faced this same gut-wrenching decision, she dealt with fear, guilt and anxiety.

Finally, she decided to keep the child and face a period of financial turmoil. Twenty years later, I couldn't be happier, because I owe my mother my life.

According to Monday's London Times, nearly 50 million Americans have been less fortunate than I.

Civil rights are the most important and defended values we possess; however, abortion is not what we should be defending. Unless the pregnancy endangers a woman's life, abortion should not happen.

According to the Alan Guttmacher Institute in 2003, 56 percent of women who had an abortion were between the ages of 20 and 30. Financial stress is one of the main deciding factors for women. Low-income women are three times more likely to have abortions than those who are better off.

There is a problem, however, when 75 percent of abortion seekers said a child would interfere with responsibilities such as work and school.

Whatever the bottom line is, abortion is claiming more lives each year than both world wars combined. This isn't only because some woman cannot afford to have a child. It's also because some women choose to have a higher standard of living. Is a human life worth that?

Fifty million is a huge number. Could you imagine 50 million pennies? If you can, try imagining 50 million babies. Sadly, among those babies could have been one of the wisest presidents ever to rule our country or a scientist that found the cure for AIDS.

The unborn babies don't have a voice, so pro-life supporters speak for them, but some of the words and actions send the wrong message.

Violence carried out against pro-choice advocates or abortion clinics is immoral, wrong and should be punished to the fullest extent of the law.

Illustrations by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

Even in simplest terminology, violence exists. For instance, calling abortion murder carries the image of the woman as a villain with a diabolical smile, ecstatic to be rid of the horrid inconvenience a baby would be.

Choosing abortion is one of the hardest decisions a woman ever has to make, and the consequences often last a lifetime. The last thing we need is to make it worse.

Of course, pro-life and pro-choice advocates both think they know how to solve the dilemma; however, neither side is anywhere close to accepting a compromise.

Instead, the first and most important step to reducing the 50 million deaths is to make sure we don't have to choose between life and death.

Take responsibility for your actions. Know that sex causes pregnancies. Women and men alike are presented with a series of choices. Such as, should I have sex? If so, when and with whom?

Almost everyone has heard since high school to wear condoms or take birth control. Even though these are not 100 percent effective, they are preventative measures if you absolutely cannot control yourself.

Personally, I've known enough birth-control-babies to stick to my belief in abstinence. My belief rests on the fact that if you don't have sex, you won't conceive.

Talk about good fans. We have the greatest fans ever at Bramlage. We cheer louder for a friggin'T-shirt than we do for a basketball game.

Betas, we painted it.

Betas, we tarred it, you painted it, and now we are going to blow it up.

I started a new business. Pay me $25, and I will find the person you hate, put on a pink thong and do jumping jacks in front of their door.

Think of it as the insulting version of a strip-o-gram.

That cool mom from Denver was on CNN, I think she was already exposed.

Pro-choice equals pro-murder.

Why was there no newspapers at the basketball game?

My professor licked the chalk today to find out what it tasted like. I'm scared.

Rock Chalk, chicken hawk. Screw KU.

Massey, you're going to kick the crap out of KU.

You can say that again.

Led Zeppelin's rocking legacy

Illustration by Mark Sibilla | COLLEGIAN

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are bands that have rocked harder and faster, but none can measure up to the gods of rock and roll: Led Zeppelin. Jimmy Page's classically trained guitar playing, Robert Plant's vocal and lyrical skills, John Paul Jones's bass and John Bonham's drums have been influential to countless bands throughout the years.

They single-handedly brought about the formation of heavy metal through their own mix of hard rock, blues, world music and British folk combined with lyrics that often contained elements of mythology and fantasy.

Led Zeppelin formed in England in 1968.

Page met Plant in August 1968 and asked him to join the band; Plant then recommended Bonham as drummer.

The band released its debut album, "Led Zeppelin," in 1969 and immediately began touring in America and England.

The album and tour were wildly popular among audiences even though many critics of the era despised the band. While on tour, the band recorded its second album, "Led Zeppelin II."

By the third album, Led Zeppelin began deepening its sound by bringing in an element of folk to its music.

The band's most popular album, "Led Zeppelin IV," was its most musically diverse of time and includes many infamous songs such as "Rock and Roll" and "Stairway to Heaven."

After the release of its fifth album, "Houses of the Holy," which added reggae and funk to the mix, Led Zeppelin broke touring records in America previously set by the Beatles.

In 1975, Led Zeppelin released the double album, "Physical Graffiti," a musically diverse album that was the last great album put out by the band.

A combination of unfortunate events including Plant's nearly fatal car crash and the death of Page's son, Karac, left many to question the band's future.

Led Zeppelin picked up and continued to tour through the rest of the 1970s and released two more albums, "Presence" and "In Through the Out Door."

Led Zeppelin was forced to disband after Bonham's death in 1980 due to an all day drinking binge.

Led Zeppelin has left behind a legacy and an unquestionable impact on music, influencing artists from Nirvana to Dr. Dre, who took many of his beats from Bonham's drumming.

Led Zeppelin does not require many words in description, it let its music speak for itself.

Essential albums

■ "Led Zeppelin": The world is introduced to Led Zeppelin through Jimmy Page's mix of hard rock and blues and Robert Plant's howl. This is the template for Led Zeppelin's evolution with hard rock, bluesy balladry and guitar folk blues.

■ "Led Zeppelin II": The group attains its own identity and their sound becomes more unified. The album makes sure that you don't stop rocking. Robert Plant's vocal talents begin to shine, especially with the heavy and sexy "Whole Lotta Love."

■ "Led Zeppelin III": The album opens with a bang ("Immigrant Song") and then goes into a mostly acoustic set showcasing Page's brilliance with a guitar and showing that the band can handle a wide variety of styles and dynamics.

■ "Led Zeppelin IV": The towering masterpiece. The album goes from rollicking rockers ("Black Dog", "Rock and Roll"), epic ballads ("Stairway to Heaven"), to mandolin driven folk ("Battle of Evermore"). Where Zeppelin solidifies its position in the Pantheon.

■ "Houses of the Holy": Led Zeppelin adds a groove to its sound. It brings funk inspired by James Brown ("The Crunge") and reggae via Bob Marley ("D'yer Mak'er"). This album's subsequent tour broke box-office records originally held by The Beatles.

■ "Physical Graffiti": The epic double album is both self-indulgent and brilliant. The album, one of the heaviest of all time, brings "Kashmir," one of Led Zeppelin's greatest achievements.

■ "How the West Was Won": A three-disc live tour set released in 2003, it showcases Led Zeppelin in some of its most powerful live performances. This album will single-handedly prove why Led Zeppelin is THE only band that matters.

Crichton's new novel creates sense of mystery, danger

"State of Fear"
Book review by Brigette Burandt

Action. Drama. Mystery. Michael Crichton's newest book, "State of Fear," has all of these in spades and even a touch of romance.

The novel gets off to a quick start when a graduate student dies in Paris after performing an experiment for a beautiful woman. Then a mysterious buyer purchases lethal cavitation equipment in the jungles of Malaysia. In London, half a million feet of missile guide wire changes hands. And in Vancouver a mysterious man leases a small research submarine for use off the coast of New Guinea.

How do all these things fit together? You will soon begin to discover the answer as a small group of people travels the world searching for the purpose of these events.

"State of Fear" is a great tale of adventure and mystery, mixing in astonishingly little-known scientific studies with our long-held assumptions about the world in which we live.

But the science doesn't hamper the reading. Instead, it enhances it, stimulating the mind with fascinating details. But it's not just that facts that are fascinating.

For the most part, the characters are very life-like. You can easily identify with them, at least to some degree. Crichton has included many different types of people as his characters, adding diversity and interest.

These characters are anything but dull. They're very easy to picture as real people, and you're guaranteed to end up loving some and hating others as the story engages you.

Crichton does an excellent job of drawing you in from the first page by creating a sense of mystery and danger. The only great downfall of his method is that the story jumps around a lot at the beginning, with several different locations and events that seemingly have nothing to do with each other.

But it is precisely the confusion noted here that makes you want to read on, and after a while you're well-rewarded when the plot settles, and the story becomes much easier to follow.

Just about anything a reader could want, from action to drama, is found in Michael Crichton's "State of Fear." This is one of the best books I've read in a while. It's absolutely wonderful, engaging reading, and I would recommend this book to anyone.

MOVIES

■ Times for today through Thursday.

■ All times are p.m. unless otherwise noted.

"Coach Carter" (rated PG-13)
4, 7, 10
Inspired by the true-life story of controversial high-school basketball coach Ken Carter (Samuel L. Jackson), who received both high praise and staunch criticism when he made national news in 1999 for benching his entire undefeated basketball team for poor academic performance.

Jackson

7:15, 9:35
Following the events of Daredevil, Elektra Natchios (Jennifer Garner), sai enthusiast and assassin for hire, is revived by the Order of the Hand, a group of assassins who helped train her. Assigned by the Hand's current leader, Kirigi, to kill a man, Mark Miller (Goran Visnjic), and his 13-year-old daughter, Abby, Elektra soon befriends them and decides to stand up to her ninja peers.

Garner

"Hide and Seek" (rated R)
4:15, 7:10, 9:30
Hide and Seek revolves around a widower (Robert DeNiro) and his daughter (Dakota Fanning). They move to upstate and Emily (Fanning) soon creates an imaginary friend named Charlie, but this act takes an unexpected and terrifying turn, where her father and doctor (Famke Janssen) start to worry about Emily's gruesome habits.

"In Good Company" (rated PG-13)
4:10, 7:20, 9:55
Dan Foreman (Dennis Quaid) is headed for a shakeup. He is demoted from head of ad sales for a magazine when the company he works for is acquired in a corporate takeover. His new boss, Carter Duryea (Topher Grace), is half his age. While Dan develops clients through handshake deals and relationships, Carter cross-promotes the magazine with the cell phone division and "Krispity Krunch," an indeterminate snack food. Dan and Carter's friendship is thrown into jeopardy when Carter falls for, and Dan's daughter.

Quaid

"Meet the Fockers" (rated PG-13)
4:25, 7:05, 9:40
Having given permission to male nurse Greg Focker (Ben Stiller) to wed his daughter (Teri Polo), ex-CIA man Jack Byrnes (Robert De Niro) and his wife (Blythe Danner) travel to Detroit to "meet the parents," who this time around are Mr. and Mrs. Focker (Dennis Hoffman and Barbra Streisand), and the two are as different as can be.

Stiller

"Racing Stripes" (rated PG)
4:40
An abandoned zebra (voiced by Frankie Muniz) grows up believing he is a racehorse, and, with the help of his barnyard friends and a teenage girl (Hayden Panettiere), sets out to achieve his dream of racing with thoroughbreds.

K-State tries for 1st win in Columbia since '85

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats will try to break two long-standing streaks when they travel to Columbia, Mo., Saturday.

The Wildcats (12-4, 2-3) have not beaten the Missouri Tigers (10-9, 2-4) twice in one season since the 1983-84 season and are winless in their last 20 tries in Columbia.

K-State put itself in position for a possible season sweep with a 74-54 win over Missouri on Jan. 15.

Sophomore guard Cartier Martin, who registered his first career double-double against the Tigers, said the Wildcats have to play the same game they did two weeks ago.

"It's going to be tough, but we are going to have to go in there and keep the same mind frame that we had when we played them the first time," Martin said.

The Mizzou Sports Arena will be a welcome sight for the Tigers, who dropped their sixth straight game away from their new home to the Colorado Buffaloes on Wednesday.

Senior forward Jason Conley led all scorers with 16 points, with sophomore forward Linas Kleiza adding 14 points in the loss.

In their first meeting, the Wildcats held the Tigers to their second-lowest scoring total of the season with 54 points, created 17 turnovers and held the Tigers to 19 percent from beyond the three-point arc.

"I thought our team defense was good, our ball movement was good, shot selection was good and we played a balanced game," Coach Jim Wooldridge said about the Wildcats' win over the Tigers.

With K-State's 63-51 win over the Cyclones Wednesday night, the Wildcats moved ahead of Missouri in the conference standings, and sophomore guard Fred Peete said K-State will need to get off to a quick start to keep it that way.

"We are going to need to move up in the Big 12 standings, so it is going to be very important for us to get out to a great start in the Missouri game," Peete said.

1-MINUTE DRILL

Staff Reports

Tennis | K-State to face No. 25 BYU today at Ahearn

K-State will face its first test of the spring season today at 4 p.m. as the Wildcats face-off against No. 25 BYU at Ahearn Field House.

The Cougars hold a 2-11 edge over the Wildcats in the all-time series, but the Wildcats have won the last two straight matches. The last time the two programs met, K-State won 4-3 in Manhattan.

The Wildcats, led by senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia, enter the matchup coming off a 7-0 sweep over Drake last weekend.

The Cougars are 2-1 this season and are led by junior Olga Boulytcheva and sophomore Lauren Jones , as each have posted 2-1 records this spring.

The meet is the first of the season for K-State in Ahearn Field House, and admission to the match is free.

WNBA | Ohlde, Minnesota Lynx to play in Kansas City

Former K-State standout and two-time All-American Nicole Ohlde will make a trip to Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday, May 7 for the first-ever Kansas City Southern Shootout at Municipal Auditorium.

Ohlde

Ohlde, from Clay Center, Kan., and her current team, the Minnesota Lynx, will face the 2003 WNBA champions, the Detroit Shock in an exhibition game at 7 p.m. that night.

Tickets are available through Ticketmaster, with prices ranging from $12 for general admission to $100 VIP packages.

Tennis | Safin ends Federer's 26-match winning streak

MELBOURNE, Australia — Marat Safin ended top-ranked Roger Federer's 26-match winning streak in a classic Australian Open semifinal, outlasting the defending champion 5-7, 6-4, 5-7, 7-6 (6), 9-7 in a dazzling 4 1/2-hour match.

Safin

Safin, seeded fourth and trying to regain the No. 1 ranking he held briefly after winning the U.S. Open in 2000, saved one match point in overcoming an unusually jittery Federer, who hadn't dropped a set in five previous matches here, including a quarterfinal domination of Andre Agassi.

Safin, reaching the final at Melbourne Park for the third time in four years, next meets the winner of Friday night's semifinal between second-ranked Andy Roddick and No. 3 Lleyton Hewitt.

NFL | Romanowski faces questions about steriod use

Bill Romanowski might be forced to address his suspected steroid use in court proceedings in the coming months.

The linebacker, who played 16 years in the league, faces questions about steroid use in connection with a $3.8 million lawsuit brought against him for attacking a former Oakland Raiders teammate and leaving him with an apparent career-ending injury, the San Francisco Chronicle reported in Thursday's editions.

Romanowski

Marcus Williams, a former Raiders tight end, claims he suffered a brain-related injury after being hit by Romanowski when the two were in training camp together in August 2003.

NBA | Karl officially named Nuggets' head coach

DENVER — George Karl was hired as head coach of the Denver Nuggets on Thursday, returning to the NBA after nearly two years to take over a team that has failed to live up to lofty expectations.

The deal was finalized Thursday morning and announced in Milwaukee, where the Nuggets play the Bucks on Friday night.

Karl is expected to be on the bench for that game, making his debut with the Nuggets against the team that fired him in 2003.

Track team hits road for 1st time this season

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Head track coach Cliff Rovelto is not overly excited about traveling to Iowa this weekend.

"There is nothing magical about going on the road, that's for sure," Rovelto said.

"It's travel, and for us, that means buses. It's a long trip."

"I'm sure there are some kids that are excited about going some place else to compete, but I'm sure there are many (athletes) that would just as soon not have to travel," Rovelto said.

Wildcat track members will compete somewhere other than Ahearn Field House for the first time this season as they head to the UNI Invitational Saturday in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

K-State is one of three Big 12 teams competing in the six-team meet, along with Missouri and Nebraska.

Coach Rovelto said Nebraska is arguably the best team in the conference, and his team will know more about the conference after this weekend.

The Wildcats had their first look at conference competition last Saturday at Ahearn, as K-State beat Kansas and Missouri for the seventh straight year in the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular.

Eveland and Lancaster won Big 12 Track and Field Athlete of the Week honors for their performances. All three athletes lead the nation in their respective events.

"We are pleased that we performed well, but that's over and done," Rovelto said of last weekend's meet.

"If there is a question whether we will have a let down this week after last week, the answer is no."

Even though Rovelto said he expects his athletes to perform at a high level Saturday, he will only field about two-thirds of his team, because he is preparing his team for future meets.

"We are not entering the meet (this weekend) with the idea that we are trying to win the meet," Rovelto said.

"Given that our focus is the conference and NCAA championships, we've got to train people to be at their best at that time."

Eveland, Hill and Lancaster are among those who will compete Saturday, along with senior Darius Draudvila (multi-event) and sophomore Lisi Maurer (hurdles).

Maurer, a native of Salzburg, Austria, set a meet record last weekend in the 60-meter hurdles with a time of 8.59 seconds.

Maurer said she wants to improve her time at the UNI Invitational.

"My race last week was ok, but it was not a perfect race," Maurer said.

"I need to find my rhythm at the race (this weekend) and put everything together, like speed and technique. I just want to improve a little bit."

Maurer said she is excited for the meet this weekend.

"I think we will have fun, and it's exciting to get out of town, finally," she said.

"I like Ahearn, but a different surrounding is sometimes good. We sometimes just need a change."

K-State center faces younger sister on Saturday at Colorado

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State junior center Jessica McFarland will see an all-too familiar face when she steps onto the court Saturday against Colorado.

"Ever since she committed to Colorado, it's something that we both have been looking forward to," Jessica said.

Jackie McFarland has won Big 12 Rookie of the Week twice this season, and she currently is averaging 9.8 points and 6.3 rebounds per game.

No. 16 K-State at Colorado
When: 1 p.m. Saturday
Where: Coors Events Center
TV: Fox Sports Net (Ch. 34)
Radio: Mid America Sports Network (KROK, FM 101.5)

Even though Colorado (8-9, 1-5) sits near the bottom of the Big 12 Conference and No. 16 K-State (15-3, 6-1) is in a tie for first, McFarland said that hasn't stopped the friendly rivalry.

"We talk about playing each other, and we say things like 'you better look out, we're going to come into your house' and we trash talk a little bit," she said.

K-State's half of the McFarland duo will look to help the Wildcats secure a win in Boulder.

K-State has won two straight games in the Coors Events Center, but has an 8-14 overall record in Boulder.

"They're very, very good in Boulder, they've proven that every year," senior guard Laurie Koehn said.

"We've always had a tough battle up there. We've got to come ready to go, regardless of their record."

Colorado has struggled this season. The Buffalo roster has only two seniors, and its starting lineup has one freshman, two sophomores, one junior and one senior.

Wildcat coach Deb Patterson said despite its youth and inexperience, Colorado is a dangerous team looking to strike.

"They are playing so many young players, but as always with Big 12 opponents, any minute is break-out time," Patterson said.

"(Colorado) is a basketball team that you just feel like is on the edge of getting over into the victory column. We've got to be more than prepared."

Rushing the floor becoming norm, not rarity

MATTHEW GIRARD

Until the last 10 months, I only vaguely remember witnessing fans rushing the court or field – once or twice since having an interest in sports.

Sure, I caught the occasional clip on 'SportsCenter' of students celebrating a huge win with a giant mosh pit on the center of the court or piling people onto a goal post, but it was a rare occurrence.

My first personal experience came March 6, 2004 when the K-State men's basketball team defeated then-No. 10 Texas Longhorns 58-48 and the Wildcat faithful blitzed the court in celebration.

Then, a mere seven months later, I watched Kansas fans rush the field like lemmings jumping off of a cliff, as the Jayhawks beat the Wildcat football team 31-28.

At the time, I thought I was pretty lucky to witness two such events in the span of less than a year, but as it turns out, rushing the floor in celebration has become somewhat of a normal thing.

Last week I watched two games in the span of four days on ESPN and witnessed two more floor rushings. Florida State fans partied on center court after knocking off then No. 3 Wake Forest in overtime and Villanova fans got in on the action after beating then No. 2 Kansas 83-62.

As I watched the Villanova celebration with a friend, who happens to be a KU fan (we'll call him Sunrise to protect his identity), I mentioned how cool it was to see two such celebrations in one week.

He responded by saying, "I hate it when fans rush the floor."

I curiously asked him why.

"Because it makes you look like a loser and that you never win," he said.

Sunrise makes a very valid point.

Like I said before, I was a fan of people charging the floor, but it seems to be getting out of hand. Fans should save their court-storming energy and celebrations for something really big, like say, beating your rival for the first time in 20-some years.

KANSAS | Students explore identity, history of Kansans in classroom

they get into studying the history of what happened. That way they don't have to digest who these people were along with the facts of what happened," said Hurt.

Policy Specialist for the Kansas Association of School Boards, Paul Getto, said there are specific requirements for Kansas history to be taught in school.

Getto said that according to Kansas Administration Regulations, schools are required to teach 30 hours of Kansas history.

Kansas history is taught in college as well.

Professor Jim Sherow, who instructs a history of Kansas class, said the class focuses on people and cultural developments.

"Most people in the class are Kansas residents," Sherow said. "What I hope they get from my class is that they get a sense of place. What is special about Kansas? I find that most students don't know about their own place."

Sherow said Texans have a sense of identity, as well as Californians and New Yorkers. In the class, they explore the identity that Kansans have and what's special about being from Kansas.

The class is offered each year in the fall and sometimes in the summer.

"One example to give to show the importance of history is to pretend that you wake up in the morning with no memory of anything that has happened before," Sherow said.

"You won't be able to navigate well through the day. How we navigate through life is through history. To the citizens of the state, city, nation and even world, history is the way we navigate through the world."

IRAQ ELECTIONS | Iraqi citizens risk life to vote in election Sunday

However, no significant records exists saying who is Kurdish and who is Sunni, let alone which group should hold the majority. And though many factions will battle it out in the polling booths on Sunday, some will choose a much bloodier battle in the streets.

As the end of January came into view, attacks by insurgents against coalition troops, Iraqi military, and citizens increased.

Yet on election day, thousands of Iraqis will travel in broad daylight to polling places against the wills and warnings of insurgents, exposing themselves to the enemy.

Almost every Iraqi who votes will fear for their life. Al-Rawi is afraid this will affect the vote in Iraq because certain regions of the country have been deemed too insecure for voting to take place, meaning not every Iraqi will have a voice in their new democracy.

"If the election takes place, it will not be a fair election, because not everyone will be able to participate," Al Rawi said.

The timing of the elections has been questioned many times since its announcement.

Suleiman said that from a security view point, Iraq is not ready.

However, for every Iraqi who thinks Sunday is too soon, there is one who thinks it is not soon enough.

Sinna Abdulamir, a Manhattan resident and Iraqi citizen, said it is clear that the situation in Iraq will not improve without action.

"Things are not getting better; we must do something," Abdulamir said.

As long as the elections in Iraq wait, Abdulamir said things will only get worse.

"The election is going to be bad, but some people want to make a difference, and they are willing to take the risk," Abdulamir said.

Every Iraqi knows the danger of their situation, yet millions will take the risk on Sunday. Tara Mossa, a Kurd born in Baghdad, said Iraq will have a tremendous show of patriotism on Sunday.

"It is true there are risks, but it's "give me liberty or give me death," she said.

Mossa, a graduate student and teacher of Arabic, said there is no option other than to continue with the election.

"If we wait, we will give the terrorists an opportunity to do more harm," Mossa said.

Though it may seem far from the reality of the fear in the streets of Baghdad, thousands of Iraqis living abroad have let their courage be known by registering to vote.

On Tuesday, the last out of state Iraqis traveled to their local polling places to sign up for what will surely be one of the most memorable days in this nation's history. Over 280,000 Iraqis in 14 countries are expected to vote Sunday.

Those voting at home and abroad will be choosing peers who will undoubtedly shape the future of Iraq.

Those they choose will have a long road ahead of them. It will be their responsibility to draft a constitution and establish a permanent structure of government.

"This is the first step," Abdulamir said. "This is just a stage."

SCHOLARSHIP | Only half of student body applies for financial aid

Some students take advantage of scholarship applications through both the university and private funds. K-State students also find about $3 million in private scholarships, Moeder said.

"There was a student last semester that told me she looked for scholarships for one hour each night off free sites like www.wiredscholar.com and the university's Web site," he said. "And she was very pleased with the outcome of those scholarships she found."

Even with the effort, it may not pay off. Only 17 percent of those that apply actually receive scholarship money from the university. The 17 percent may seem discouraging, but Moeder said students shouldn't be discouraged.

"As long as you apply, apply, apply, you will at least have a chance.

"And who knows, but at best you know you tried," Moeder said.

Not just applying, but also being a good fit to the scholarship that is offered can improve the chance of receiving it, Hohenbary said.

"Those giving the scholarship are looking to make an investment to that person, so make sure the scholarship fits your goals, and your resume fits what that scholarship wants to see," Hohenbary said.

International enrollment decreasing

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's international student enrollment has been decreasing since fall 2003.

Last semester, international enrollment was 1,024, which was down 60 students from fall 2002.

Jim Lewis, international recruiting coordinator, said international enrollment is down because of the increased security involved in getting visas after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, as well as the increasing competition for international students from Australia, Canada and Great Britain.

Lewis declined to comment on the exact budget for recruiting international students, but he said that to have enough money for advertisement and salary, a college should have somewhere between $70,000 and $100,000 budgeted for international recruitment.

Chakkrit Chittawisutthi, student in the English language program from Thailand, said more people would come to K-State if the international tuition rates would decrease.

"If the tuition fee for non-residents can decrease, it will be helpful for international students," Chittawisutthi said.

International students pay out-of-state tuition, and they have very few opportunities to obtain scholarships.

"As far as I understand, there isn't much out there," Lewis said. "For an in-state student, there are a lot of different opportunities, but that doesn't exist so much for international students."

Taxes can be filed using online sites, due April 1

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tax season can be a stressful time for all taxpayers, but now it may be a little easier to file taxes.

This year, the Internal Revenue Service's Web site offers a free file option that allows taxpayers to file their federal taxes online.

David Higgins, an accountant with Flint Hills Accounting, said the IRS provides tax services for the taxpayer by connecting users to other sites that will file for them.

"It's not actually the IRS doing it," he said.

Higgins said since the system is fairly new, he doesn't think many people will use it. He said it was basically the same as having taxes filed by an accountant.

Not everyone qualifies on every Web site for free filing. It varies from site to site, Higgins said. He said most students would probably qualify, though.

At www.taxactonline.com, everyone

Iraqis vote in 1st election Sunday; 44 dead

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqis defied violence and calls for a boycott to cast ballots in their first free election in a half-century Sunday. Insurgents seeking to wreck the vote struck polling stations with a string of suicide bombings and mortar volleys, killing at least 44 people, including nine attackers.

Women in black abayas whispered prayers at the sound of a nearby explosion as they waited to vote at one Baghdad polling station. But the mood for many was upbeat: civilians and policemen danced with joy at one of the five polling stations where photographers were allowed, and some streets were packed with voters walking shoulder-to-shoulder to vote. The elderly made their way, hobbling on canes or riding wheelchairs; one elderly woman was pushed along on a wooden cart, another man carried a disabled 80-year-old on his back.

"This is democracy," said Karfia Abbasi, holding up a thumb stained with purple ink to prove she had voted.

Officials said turnout among the 14 million eligible voters appeared higher than the 57 percent that had been predicted, although it would be some time before any turnout figure was confirmed. No preliminary results were expected before Monday at the earliest, and final results will not be known for seven to 10 days, the election commission said.

Polls were largely deserted all day in many cities of the Sunni Triangle north and west of the capital, particularly Fallujah, Ramadi and Beiji. In Baghdad's mainly Sunni Arab area of Azamiyah, the neighborhood's four polling centers did not open at all, residents said.

A low Sunni turnout could undermine the new government that will emerge from the vote and worsen tensions among the country's ethnic, religious and cultural groups.

In a reminder of the dangers that persist in Iraq, a British C-130 military transport plane crashed north of Baghdad about a half hour after polls closed at 5 p.m. British Prime Minister Tony Blair has confirmed that there were British deaths in the crash, but did not say how many. There was no word on the cause or how many people were on board, but variations of the C-130 in the British Air Force can carry up to 128 infantrymen.

President Bush declared the vote a success. "The world is hearing the voice of freedom from the center of the Middle East," he said, praising Iraqis for rejecting "the anti-democratic ideology of the terrorists. They have refused to be intimidated by thugs."

Casting his vote, interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi called it "the first time the Iraqis will determine their destiny."

With Arabs across the Middle East watching the vote, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak telephoned Allawi to congratulate him on the election, saying he hoped it would "open the way for the restoration of calm and stability." The president of the United Arab Emirates also phoned his good wishes.

Prominent Iraqi Sunni politician Adnan Pachachi, who in recent months had called for the vote to be postponed because of violence, told CNN he was "relieved" and "encouraged" by a turnout he said was better than expected, even in Fallujah and Mosul.

These advertisements convince consumers that being sick for more than a few days is a thing of the past.

But, getting a quick fix for an illness may not always be the best choice.

Even at K-State, Jay Reppert, Medical Director of Lafene Health Center, said patients now request certain medications to cure their sickness based on advertisements they have seen.

Patients often request medications instead of following doctors' recommendations, he said.

"Some patients insist they want an antibiotic for illnesses that won't be helped by an antibiotic," Reppert said.

"I think a lot of times a patient, when they go to see a doctor, they expect to get a prescription when they leave," he said.

Advertisements give consumers a sense of dependency on medications, Reppert said.

"I think advertisements tend to make people think they need medicine to get over illnesses," he said.

However, Beck said the advertisements have both positive and negative consequences.

"I think it's good in the fact that people are more informed than ever about the medicine that they take, but I think it's bad that the doctor loses some autonomy in their practice," he said. "They are already being pigeon-holed into that therapy, and they want to keep a good relationship with their clients."

Beck said he has noticed an increase in the amount of prescriptions in the past few years.

"A big part of it is direct-to-consumer marketing done by the drug companies," he said. "With so much access to information on the Internet, patients are more informed when they go to the doctor, so a lot of times they will request the prescriptions, and the doctor will oblige them."

Reppert said patients are now wanting a quick fix.

"I think we are also a society that is very busy and don't want to take the time to be sick," he said.

Doctors should consider the patients' wishes but also look at side effects, he said.

"I think all physicians should try to look at the potential good versus the potential harm and balance it and see which way the scale weighs," Reppert said.

Patients sometimes select their physicians based on their willingness to prescribe medication, Reppert said.

"They can find a prescriber that is more conservative or less conservative, depending on what they want," he said.

Reppert said after patients receive medicine, many expect to feel better within a day or two. But, that may be an unrealistic expectation.

"Patients need to know a realistic time to get better," he said.

"That's an important part of a physician's job, to know the natural course of a disease and tell patients when they can expect to get well."

Reppert said the more a patient takes a medication, the more dependent they become.

"It has been shown with headache medications if you take them on a regular daily basis, you get more headaches," he said.

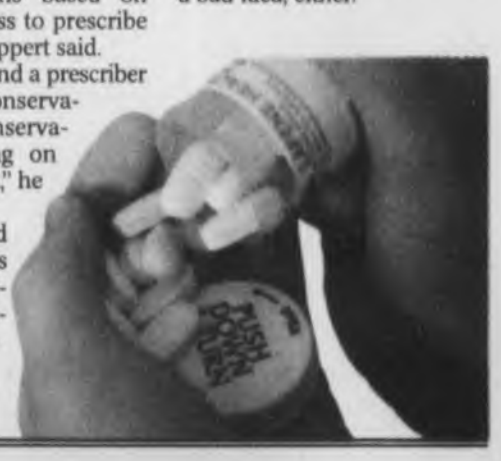
While many people think they need medication to get better, Reppert said the body can sometimes take care of itself.

"People should learn that their bodies are capable of taking care of most minor illnesses on their own," he said.

However, Reppert said people are less tolerant of pain than in the past.



Carol Kennedy, Lafene director of health education and promotion at Lafene, agreed.

"People think if they have a problem, they need to fix it," she said.

If a patient feels symptoms of a sickness, they should not ignore it, Reppert said.

"There are some good home health books available," he said. "Your pharmacist is a good person to talk to. Your physician, too.

"Calling your mother isn't a bad idea, either."

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Iraqis celebrate democracy

Richard Lee | DETROIT FREE PRESS

Iraqi voters and polling station workers celebrate at the voting facility in Southgate, Michigan, on Sunday.

Thousands of Iraqis practiced their democratic rights Sunday, voting for the first time in almost 50 years. Despite military efforts by U.S. and Iraqi soldiers, explosions erupted around the capital and surrounding cities, leaving 17 dead by early afternoon.

Iraqi election officials said that as of late Sunday morning, most of the country's 5,500 polling stations remained open.

IS RONALD MCDONALD IN SHAPE?

Ronald McDonald added one more job to his fast food resumé: fitness ambassador. Instead of selling Big Macs and French fries, the popular red-headed mascot for the fast food chain is now going into elementary schools, pushing the importance of fitness.

McDonald's Chief Creative Officer Marlena Peleo-Lazar announced Wednesday that Ronald has been named the "ambassador for an active, balanced lifestyle" to assist with the company's new push to fight childhood obesity.

FAREWELL TO A LATE-NIGHT ICON

Heeeeeeere's to you, Johnny. Millions of Americans paid their respects to Johnny Carson this week after the late-night television icon died Jan. 23 after suffering from emphysema. Carson reigned as NBC's "The Tonight Show" host from 1962 to 1992 and was popular with the baby boomer generation and current late night television hosts Jay Leno and David Letterman.

BTK COMMUNICATES WITH WICHITA

The mysterious BTK serial killer communicated once again with Wichita police last week through a series of postcards. One postcard led investigators to a Post Toasties box found on a dirt road outside of Wichita. The FBI is now investigating the box's contents.

BTK, which stands for "bind, torture and kill," is responsible for a series of murders in the Wichita area in the late 1970s and resurfaced last March when he sent a victim's driver's license and crime scene photos to The Wichita Eagle.

MARINE HELICOPTER CRASHES

Thirty-one Americans were killed Wednesday when a Marine Corps transport helicopter crashed during a sandstorm in western Iraq. Six others died in separate attacks, making the day the single deadliest for U.S. forces since the war began two years ago.

The helicopter went down early Wednesday morning near Rutbah. Officials say the pilot may not have been able to fly through the sandstorm, but they are still investigating the cause of the accident.

SUPER (BOWL) SUB

Early last week, Jeff Thomason was enjoying his new career as an assistant project manager for a development company. Now, Thomason is enjoying his new career playing football for the Philadelphia Eagles.

The Eagles asked the 35-year-old to suit up for the Super Bowl in his one and only season appearance as the Eagles' backup tight end. Thomason replaces regular tight end Chad Lewis after he suffered from a serious foot injury during the NFC Championship game.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, KANSAS

Candidate addresses testing

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bob Shannon, superintendent of McPherson USD 418, stressed maintaining creativity as a Kansas tradition Friday at the interview for superintendent for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

Creativity is necessary with the No Child Left Behind Act, he said.

"Many aspects of No Child Left Behind require further thought," Shannon said.

Although testing is a big part of No Child Left Behind, it is not the only issue in teaching, he said. Encouragement is more important than punishing students.

"There's more to education than test scores," Shannon said. "Testing for students needs to be more meaningful and less punitive."

Shannon gave many examples from his experience as superintendent of McPherson schools to demonstrate the types of programs he would try to preserve. He has been superintendent for 16 years; before, he was a principal and a science teacher.

Dave Colburn, vice president of the board, said No Child Left Behind doesn't address diversity of the classroom or allow flexibility for different student strengths, such as math versus English.

Preserving diversity in Kansas schools was a main topic during the question-and-answer portion of the meeting.

"Supporting and nurturing diversity is always a need, and we have a long ways to go," said Shannon.

There is a diversity committee in the district, and Shannon said he would work closely with it.

"Diversity is about preserving individual rights," said David Griffin Sr., associate professor in secondary education and governance board member for American ethnic studies, who attended the event.

While the board emphasized the superintendent's role of being a leader for the district, Shannon said it is important to listen to everyone from principals to students.

Budget cuts also were discussed at the interview.

Shannon used McPherson school districts $4 million budget cuts in the last three years as an example of his problem-solving abilities. He said despite obvious repercussions, it brought the district together.

Shannon also said most of the teachers he had spoken with had said they were capable of dealing with the current decreases in funding to an already dwindling budget for Kansas public schools.

"Shrinking morale in Manhattan's school districts should not be an issue with all of the positive things that I've seen during my visit here," Shannon said. "I'm not afraid to ask for funding."

Applicant says teachers know kids best

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rod Allen emphasized working as a team in his interview for superintendent Saturday.

He was the second candidate to interview for the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 superintendent position. The spot is open because Sharol Little announced her retirement effective July 1.

Allen has been the superintendent at Coffeyville, Kan., USD 445 since 1999.

He was the superintendent at Sabetha, Kan., USD 441 from 1996 to 1999. Before that he served as a principal, assistant principal and math teacher.

Allen said public schools need to be able not just to teach, but also to give students the skills they need to succeed.

"We're about more than education," Allen said. "We prepare students for life."

With No Child Left Behind, testing is important, he said, but teachers should look beyond that.

"There's more essential standards than those that are tested," Allen said.

During his time at Coffeyville, he had to close five schools and dismiss 40 staff members.

To make decisions, Allen said he prefers to work with a group.

"I do a lot through shared decision making," he said.

Allen said learning is the central force behind schools, so teaching needs to be effective.

"That has to be the center of what we're doing," he said.

"We need to not only teach the "what" but also the how they are supposed to express it."

When deciding what needs to be taught and how, Allen said he will refer to teachers.

"You're the professional. You're the doctor," he said. "You know the kids the best."

Throughout Allen's time in administration, he has been in communities such as Dodge City, Kan., and Wichita.

To promote multiculturalism, he said the districts bussed students to different schools to make them more equal.

"I push less of multicultural than I push equity: meaning we are all equal," Allen said.

Michele Jones, communications coordinator for the district, said she was happy with the community turnout at the public meetings.

"We've have two good candidates," she said. "I've been very pleased."

Students test intellectual skills

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Garett Relph, senior in political science, reacts after missing a question in the final round of the College Bowl tournament Saturday morning.

Eight students sat poised with buzzers in their hands.

Everyone in the room sat on the edge of their seats in anticipation, waiting for a question to be posed.

No, this wasn't Jeopardy, but for some, it was better.

Eight teams met to wield their intellectual skills at the annual College Bowl in the K-State Student Union Saturday morning. The College Bowl offered a double-elimination tournament testing students' knowledge.

Mike Uphoff walked away from the championship match sighing with relief.

"We went in there with the mindset 'we will win," Uphoff said. "We carried it out, and we won."

Uphoff, freshman in history and secondary education, was captain of the winning team, College Bowl Team No. 2. While he had answered a majority of questions, Uphoff found it hard to express his feelings about finishing first.

"Overwhelmed – yes, overwhelmed," Uphoff said.

Uphoff was joined by teammates Andy Jurgensmeier, junior in life sciences, chemistry and biochemistry; Adam Gelroth, junior in math; and Keith Teeter, junior in history. All are members of K-State's novice College Bowl Club that brought three teams to the tournament.

Jurgensmeier said the tournament is a way to take school to a different level.

"College Bowl is a chance to apply what you learn in college," he said.

Jim Copeland, graduate student in math, was a member of Team Blank, which placed third in the tournament. He has been on the winning team for the last two tournaments.

"History is a good major to have," Copeland said.

While history is a subject during the tournament, questions are taken from a variety of categories including history, literature, science, multiculturalism, religion, geography, sports, art and popular culture.

Shea Larson of the Union Program Council said although numbers were up from last year, she would like more students involved.

This year's champions, College Bowl Team No. 2, will go on to represent K-State in the regional College Bowl. The regional competition will at Wichita State University Feb.18-19. K-State will compete against other schools from Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas. Winners of the regional go to the national competition.

Ben Hopper, UPC adviser, said College Bowl is a niche that allows students to hone their scholarly abilities.

"The questions are fun, and the students who do this are very intellectual – it's fun," Hopper said.

But Hopper said he also hopes for more bowl watchers.

"Football attracts 50,000 people, why can't College Bowl?" he said.

TO THE POINT

Prescription drug ads should be more specific

Prescription drug companies are using advertisements now more than ever to try to push their products on consumers.

These advertisements can be found on billboards, televisions and radios. Unfortunately for consumers, they are often unclear as to what exactly the prescription is for.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Michael Ashford
Johanna Barnes
Ryan C. Flynn
Matt Girard
James Hurla
Kristi Hurla
Sarah Rice
Joanna Rubick
Leann Sulzen
Bill Wall
Loni Woolery

It is important that prescription drug companies are clear about what product they are selling. Consumers should be able to identify what the drug does and all of its side effects.

When consumers are accurately informed about a product, they can then decide whether they truly need it.

In addition, the advertisements make consumers pay more for their prescriptions. With increased advertisements, drug companies have to find a way to pay for it, which is usually passed on to the consumer in cost.

Prescription drug companies should cut back on the amount of money they spend on advertising to help consumers save money. With health care costs on the rise, it is more important than ever that companies try to help the consumers pay as little as necessary for a product without passing on the cost of advertising.

Consumers should also be aware of what a product does and its side effects before asking a physician to prescribe it. Researching a product and learning more about it can only be beneficial in the end, especially when it comes to being healthy.

8 million Iraqis show world they aren't afraid to vote in face of violence

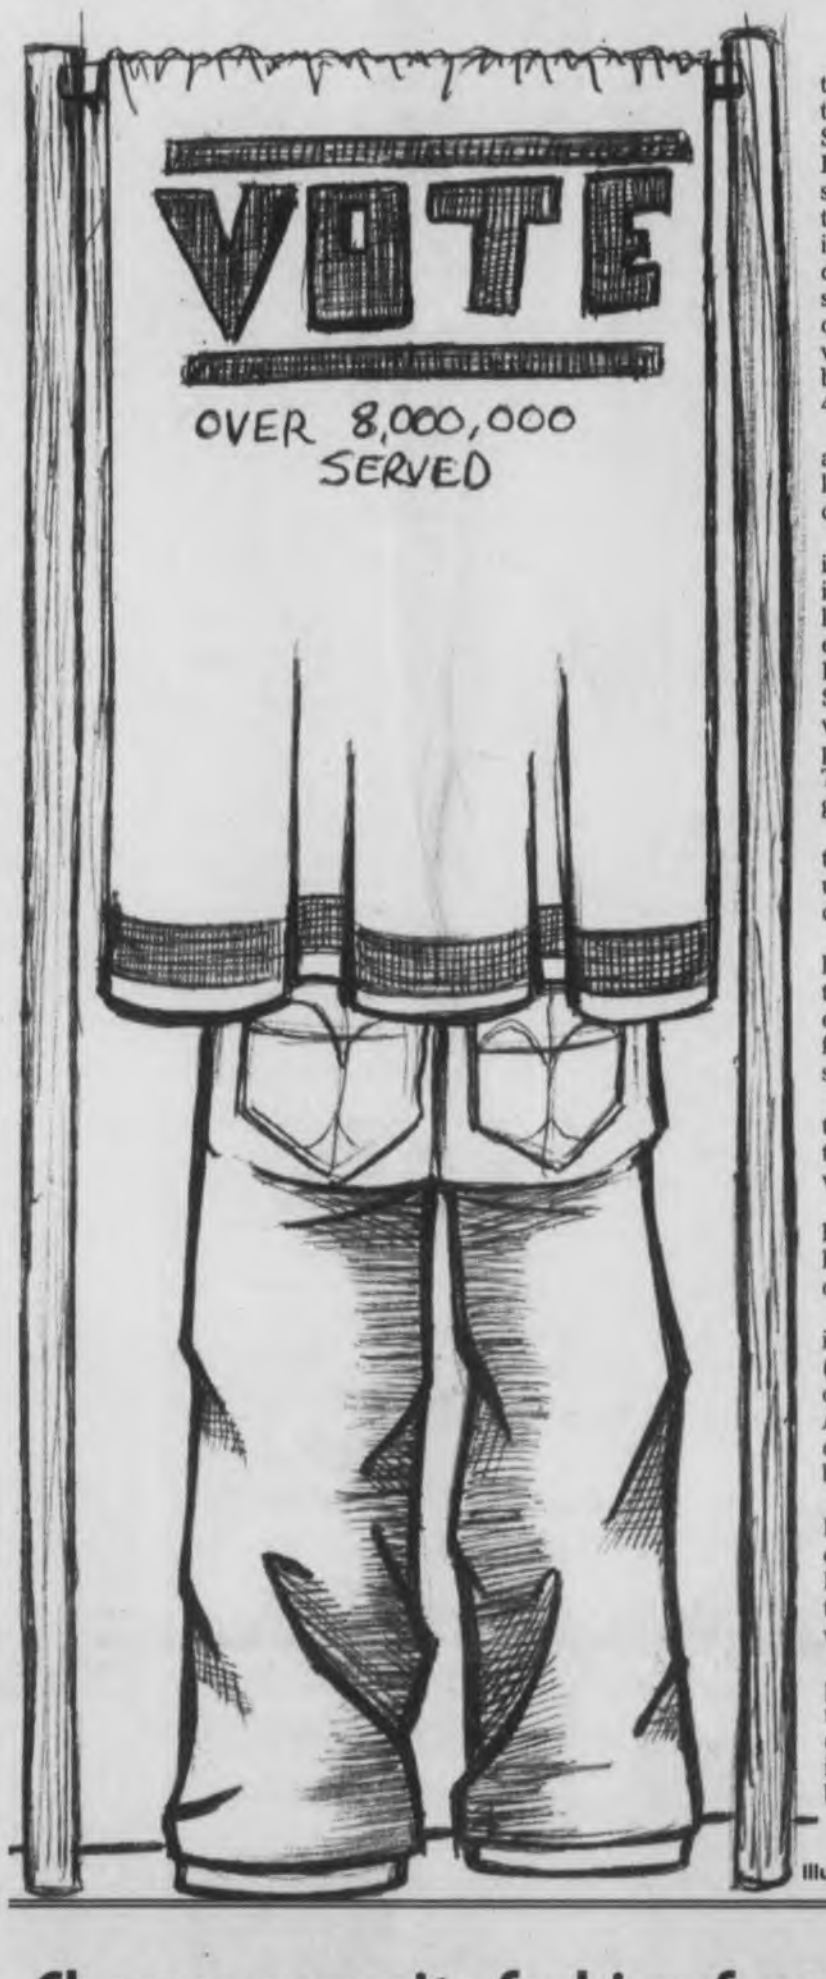

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

They threatened, they bombed, they beheaded, they murdered, they terrorized. But on Sunday, eight million Iraqis took to the streets despite the threats of the terrorists. Promising death and destruction to anyone who dared to vote, the idiot brigade succeeded in killing only 44 people.

JONAS HOGG

While eight million is only about one-third of the total population of Iraq, the momentous occasion is not lost.

Even though the fundamentalist Sunni minority, in its continuing hissy fit over losing its privileged status, chose to boycott the elections, the fact remains that Kurds, Shiites and even many Sunnis that did vote have done what they have not had the opportunity to do in many decades. They have participated in their government.

The 44 who lost their lives on the way to the polling place are undoubtedly champions of democracy.

As much as the lunatic fringe has wanted to dub the fundamentalist insurgency "freedom-fighters," the truth is that eight million freedom fighters took to the streets of Iraq on Sunday.

Eight million people who were told they would die if they went to the polls, eight million people who went anyway.

The "freedom fighters" that have tried to deny Iraq democracy have seen all their loathsome quests come crashing down.

Those who have said that Iraq is not capable of democracy (which, by the way, is their politically correct way of implying that Arabs are simply incapable of democracy) have been shown to be the dolts they truly are.

Whatever course the country of Iraq may take now is in the hands of its people. On Sunday, the Iraqis achieved the greatest relationship that a people can have with their state.

Under Saddam Hussein, the people were subjects of a despot; under the system that the "freedom fighters" would like to install, the people would have been slaves to a fundamentalist ideology.

But, the Iraqis will not be subjects, they will not be slaves – they will be citizens.

Government will not reign supreme from the palace or dictate law from the Mosque; government will begin and end with the shoemaker, the shepherd, the farmer.

The Iraq government now rests with the Iraqis. Whatever course it may take – good, bad or ugly – will be decided by the people. Democracy, all its blessings and, important not to forget, all its curses, are now bestowed upon them.

But, we must be cognizant that as liberty becomes rooted in the soil of Iraq, the "freedom fighters" are going to continue their crusade.

As they see their half-baked schemes falling apart around them, they will certainly continue their murder, destruction, amputations, executions and all the other fabulous trademarks that signal "freedom fighter" brand freedom.

Undoubtedly, the brave "freedom fighters" were disgusted by the spectacle of Kurds and Shiite Muslims voting. After all, most of the "freedom fighters" spent several decades mercilessly oppressing these two groups.

I'm sure the "freedom fighters" were even more disgusted by the massive amounts of women who let their voices be heard in the new Iraqi government.

Before the liberation of "freedom fighter" strongholds by coalition forces, the treatment of women was much akin to Taliban brutality.

Yes, I'm sure that the "freedom fighters" will bemoan the results of Sunday's election. But, the rest of the democratic world must be prepared to aid the fledgling republic as it takes its first wobbly steps in the free world.

Let every "freedom fighter," every person that said it would never happen, and every enemy of liberty everywhere around the world know that today, eight million people cried out in unison, "We will not be ruled."

Cheney commits fashion faux pas at Poland remembrance

A blustery Thursday in Poland.

Snow whirled in the wind through the somber crowd gathered at the site of one of the greatest atrocities in the history of humankind.

SCOTT SEEL

Most of them, anyway.

One attendee in particular drew all the attention to him.

I'll give you three guesses.

Scanning a panoramic shot of this downtrodden scene, something jumps out at you as if you're perusing a "Where's Waldo?" book.

Our esteemed vice president, Dick Cheney, is wearing an olive green parka with a fur-lined hood and a black ski cap bearing the words "Staff 2001."

I'm usually not a very formal kind of guy, but if I wore something like that to a funeral or something of that ilk, my grandmother would have had my hide, and rightfully so.

Robin Givhan, the fashion writer for the Washington Post, quipped in a January 28 Reuters article, "the vice president...was dressed in the kind of attire one typically wears to operate a snow blower."

Givhan went on to say Cheney looked like an "awkward boy" among the "well-dressed adults."

I think perhaps this take is a little too cynical.

Certainly someone as accomplished and thoughtful as the great Dick Cheney would never do anything like this on purpose.

In fact, what happened is this:

Because of some faulty intelligence delivered to the administration by a British intelligence agency, the vice president thought he was attending a commemorative snowball fight to honor the countless innocent lives which were brought to an untimely end at Auschwitz.

I mean, who would sit outside all day in weather that cold just for a ceremony?

Maybe I shouldn't call it an intelligence gaffe; the administration doesn't respond kindly to journalists using that word.

We'll go the Janet Jackson route and call it a "scheduling malfunction."

However, just to cover my bases, I will preempt Karl Rove and his henchmen and just come clean.

My girlfriend is a finely-tuned killing machine paid by the CIA to covertly infiltrate enemy governments and assassinate those whom we dislike.

But Cheney supporters needn't worry, a proposal banning gay people from participating in future "most tasteful dresser" pageants, so the people in Ohio will likely flock to the polls and honor Cheney with the title anyway.

Bars establish new venues for local performers

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aggieville is one of the prime places to see local music in Manhattan.

As of recently, the venues that provide local music have changed.

Dot Tucker, manager at P.J.'s Bar, said P.J.'s has played host to concerts for years. She said last year, the number of concerts has increased and the music, has diversified.

"Nowadays we have live music on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays for sure," Tucker said. "We've always done local music, but sometimes we bring in some out-of-town acts as well."

Tucker said they have acts, Latino DJ and jazz on Thursday nights with hip-hop nights including rap and freestyling on some Saturday nights.

Tucker said part of the reason music is supported so well at P.J.'s is because people associate P.J.'s with local music, so they come out to see the bands.

"We have a lot of band guys that come in and they support each other," Tucker said. "We have open mic nights which generally bring in band members and fans. The musicians bring in their equipment and try out new music on the crowds."

Andy Van Meter, sound engineer at Rusty's Other Side, said Rusty's has opened its doors to more local music in hopes of establishing itself as another music venue.

"Right now we're taking baby steps so that we can take bigger steps later," Van Meter said. "Right now, we're just trying to establish ourselves as a music venue."

Van Meter said the decision to create another venue for local music seemed to be more of a "why not?" decision than a "why?" decision. He said they'll schedule concerts as long as there is support.

"Normally, the Other Side isn't typically open Wednesdays, so having music those nights is a great use of it," Van Meter said. "They had the space, so why not do it?"

"We'll do whatever the music scene supports. The more show support, the more shows. We're hoping to get bigger acts to come in later on, but now we're just taking baby steps."

John Franco, drummer for Pins & Needles, said some local musicians show loyalty to venues that give bands a place to play. He said that even though they have loyalties, they are happy to be playing.

"Essentially, I'm from the old school, as in, I've been in several bands and there's generally been a lot of outlets for musicians," Franco said. "And it's a growing trend again. I think that what has happened is P.J.'s has become the trademark venue for local and regional bands.

"I can't speak for all bands, but I know that Pins & Needles has been loyal to P.J.'s before it was renamed P.J.'s. Before P.J.'s it was Dave's, and before that it was Tula's, and they've always supported local music, and we've noticed that."

Franco said having other places to play is good for bands because they have different audiences they can reach.

"Each bar has its regulars and fans," Franco said. "The difference between playing at P.J.'s versus playing at Rusty's versus playing at Silverado's is the diversity of each crowd you're reaching.

"Playing at different places gives you the chance to reach fans you wouldn't normally have the opportunity to reach."

Franco said each bar should support local music.

"Venues need to focus on local music as a whole, but not get up in arms about it, like, 'Oh they have local music, so we'll get it just to compete,'" Franco said.

Van Meter said Rusty's wanted to get involved in live music not for the competition, but to offer another venue for live music in general.

Tucker said their plans for this semester will be similar to that of this past semester.

"We'd like to keep it (music nights) to three nights a week," Tucker said.

"We try to divide it up, so all of the bands that play on one night have similar styles, like we have metal music on Mondays.

"We'll still bring in some outside acts, but since we have such a small place, we can't bring in too big of an act, but we might do some outside concerts, which we've talked about."

Dave Owens, bass guitar, David Oakleaf, lead singer, and Grant Alexander, lead guitar for the band Ten til Blue perform at Rusty's Last Chance. The band is originally from Manhattan.

Samuel L. Jackson carries 'Coach Carter' to cinematic success

"Coach Carter"
★★½☆☆
Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

Some movies rely heavily on the performance of one key character, and it is no surprise that the MTV Films production "Coach Carter" falls in this category.

Samuel L. Jackson delivers his typical smart, badass performance as coach Carter, the new basketball head coach at Richmond High School.

And if director Thomas Carter didn't have Jackson star in "Coach Carter," the movie would have suffered horribly.

The movie is entertaining, has a good message and is based on a true story, but Jackson carries the movie from beginning to end.

Coach Ken Carter is offered the job of head coach at his alma mater, Richmond High School, and he takes the job with the understanding that he can use whatever methods he sees fit.

He makes the team members and their parents sign a contract that they must honor in order to play basketball.

The contract includes that they must maintain a 2.3 GPA, attend all classes and sit in the front row, and wear a tie and jacket on game days.

After excessive conditioning, the team transforms from a group of losing misfits into local celebrities with an undefeated season.

However, they aren't fulfilling their end of the bargain, and Carter padlocks the gym, ending their undefeated season and making everyone angry in the process.

"Coach Carter" is an inspirational, feel-good movie that emphasizes self-improvement, which was Carter's reason behind the contracts.

The students and basketball players were typical at best.

Not that they weren't believable, but all the players were basically caricatures from any inspirational sports movie.

There was Worm (Antwon Tanner), the funny guy, Cruz (Rick Gonzalez), the troublemaker, Damien Carter (Robert Ri'chard), the talented coach's son, and Junior Battle (Nana Gbewonyo), the troubled yet talented big man.

Along with all of the elements of a good inspirational movie, MTV Films had to "MTV-ize" the movie for some reason.

Basketball scenes are either all dunks or 3-pointers, which is pretty incredible for high school students, yet sort of unbelievable.

Off the court, there are party and dance scenes with many beautiful people, which isn't bad, since all of the actors are obviously of age, but makes it weird because all of these older people are playing parts of adolescents.

The most perplexing yet funniest part of the movie is that, despite having scenes that ooze sex, the cursing in some of the songs, like Lil' Jon & the Eastside Boyz's "Get Low," is cut out. Skeet, Skeet, Skeet.

Granted, it's for a PG-13 rating, but one has to wonder what the Motion Picture Association of America's priorities are in rating movies.

With that said, "Coach Carter" is an entertaining and inspirational movie that is worth seeing if you like your typical Samuel L. Jackson performances.

Cats back in action after win

We'd seen it too many times over the past several years from the K-State men's basketball team.

JOSH WITT

You know the routine.

The Wildcats dig themselves into a hole by losing winnable games to open the conference season. Then, they come through in a must-win game at home, only to fall apart the next time out.

It looked like Saturday's game against Missouri in Columbia would be the same old story for K-State.

Not this time. Not this team.

Coming back from double-digit deficits at the beginning of the game and again in the second half, K-State showed this team is different by defeating the Tigers 64-53.

It was the first time the Wildcats had won in Columbia since 1985, and the first sweep of the season series since the 1983-1984 season.

There's no doubt that snapping two decades of futility in Columbia is huge, but in terms of this season, that's not what's important.

What's important is that the Wildcats are "back in the game" at 3-3 in the Big 12 Conference and 13-4 overall.

A loss would have been devastating to K-State. After letting games against Nebraska and Texas Tech slip away and getting dominated at Texas A&M, the Wildcats had to get one back on Saturday.

The Iowa State win on Wednesday was nice, but urgency was made even greater by this Wednesday's trip to Stillwater, Okla., to face No. 9 Oklahoma State and looming games against No. 6 Kansas, No. 13 Oklahoma and at No. 16 Texas.

Now, instead of backing into Wednesday's game, the Wildcats should be full of confidence.

Another product of Saturday was that this was a contest Jim Wooldridge teams just didn't win.

Last year, the Wildcats never capitalized on early- and mid-season conference victories. They beat Texas A&M, then they lost three straight. They beat Nebraska by 17 at home, only to lose a tight game at Colorado. They picked up a huge win at Nebraska, then proceeded to lose three in a row again.

Yeah, the Wildcats finished the 2003-04 regular season with wins at Baylor and against No. 10 Texas, but by then it was too late.

Look at seasons before that, and you'll see the same pattern.

But this season, and with the win in Columbia, that pattern seems to be breaking.

The K-State Wildcats were down but never out against the Missouri Tigers on Saturday.

Twice rallying from double-digit deficits, the Wildcats (13-4, 3-3) ended their 20-game losing streak in Columbia, Mo., with a 64-53 win over the Tigers (10-10, 2-5).

Missouri jumped out to an early 12-0 lead and looked as if it would get revenge for the 20-point loss suffered at Bramlage Coliseum on Jan. 15, but behind the three-point shooting of sophomore guards Fred Peete and Lance Harris, the Wildcats stormed back to take a 28-26 lead at the break.

The Tigers opened the second half much like the first by going on another 12-0 run and building a 40-28 lead with 15:59 left to play.

K-State would rally once again behind senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

After only scoring two points on 1-of-2 shooting in the first half, Massey scored 15 of his game-high 17 points in the second half, leading the Wildcats to their first season series sweep of the Tigers since the 1983-1984 season.

Along with Massey, Peete and Harris finished in double figures with 16 and 14 points, respectively. Peete also went 6-of-7 from the free throw line down the stretch to seal the victory for K-State.

Tennis team loses to BYU Friday in home match

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a strong start in doubles play, the K-State tennis team crumbled in singles, as the Wildcats lost 4-3 against No. 25 Brigham Young University Friday at Ahearn Field House.

The loss was the first of the spring season for the Wildcats, who encountered their first real test of the spring against BYU.

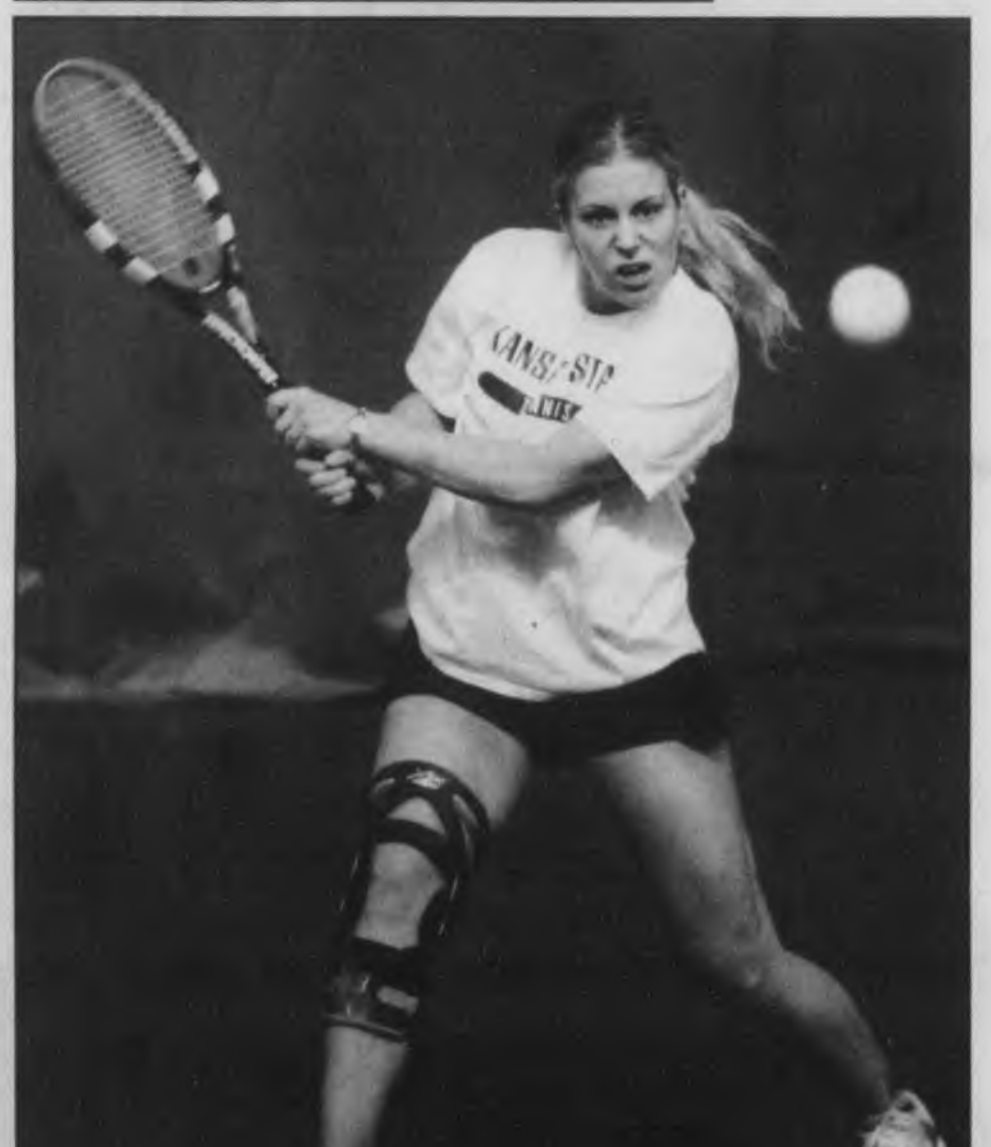
"I thought they responded awfully well," he said. "For the most part, I was pleased with the way we played in the doubles. We got a great start in the singles, but the story of the match was that BYU's depth was too much for us."

Although the team lost, senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia proved to be bright spots for K-State.



The duo won their doubles match 8-4, and they won their respective singles matches. Kvaratskhelia said she was happy to win her matches, but the team's loss dampened her spirits.

"I'm happy that I won, but I'm not completely happy," she said. "100 percent, no, I'm not happy."

Kvaratskhelia stayed undefeated this spring after beating BYU's Anastasia Sourkova in straight sets 6-2, 6-4. Both she and Rosenberg won to remain

It wasn't the normal quick start that K-State has had in its recent wins, but the result was the same.

The No. 16 K-State women's basketball team turned the ball over nine times in the first 10 minutes of the game but settled down in the second half to get an 81-70 win over Colorado in Boulder on Saturday.

It was Big 12 Conference-leading K-State's seventh straight win overall and third in a row over the Buffaloes at the Coors Events Center.

The Wildcats have won three straight games on the road in conference.

Leading at the half 37-34, K-State (16-3, 7-1) pulled away from the Buffaloes (8-10, 1-6) with nine minutes to play play.

Colorado cut the Wildcats' lead to 53-51, but K-State went on an 11-0 run, holding Colorado without a basket for over three minutes.

The run was capped off by one of three 3-pointers by senior Laurie Koehn and a transition jumper in the lane by Kendra Wecker.

K-State outscored Colorado 28-19 in the final nine minutes of the game.

Wecker recorded her 44th double-double of her career, scoring a game-high 28 points and pulling down 10 rebounds.

Colorado shot 39 percent from the field and 3-of-13 from three-point range.

The Buffaloes were led by Jasmina Ilic's 21 points and by Veronica Johns-Richardson, the only senior in the starting lineup, who had 20 points and five assists.

Track and field team wins 10 events at UNI invitational this weekend

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's track and field team won 10 events during its first road trip of the season at the UNI Invitational on Saturday.

Junior thrower Coby Cost broke both his own K-State record and the UNI Invitational record in the weight throw for his fifth straight title in the event. His throw was 69-4 1/4, breaking his old K-State record of 68-6 1/2 that he set during the KSU Open in 2003.

Cost said he was somewhat pleased with his performance, but there is always room for improvement.

"I am happy with my performance," Cost said. "I still need to improve some. I need to throw it quite a bit further to be competitive at the NCAA Championships."

K-State had other men win their events – seniors Stelios Kapsalis and Joseph Lee, and freshman Ben DeLay.

Kapsalis won the triple jump for the third time this season with a jump of 56-6. Lee won the men's 600-meter race in 1 minute 20.57 seconds and DeLay won the 3,000-meter run in 8:47.26 for his first collegiate victory.

This was the first time DeLay had run the 3,000 this season.

Thomas was the only Wildcat to win multiple events at the invitational. She won the women's 200-meter dash in 24.48 seconds, which was the sixth fastest time in K-State history in the event. She also ran the fifth fastest women's 400-meter dash time in school history with a time of 55.30 seconds.

Other K-State women to win events were freshmen Laci Heller in the weight throw, sophomores Lisi Maurer and La-Toya Banks in the women's 60-meter hurdles and the women's 60-meter dash, respectively, and junior Breanna Eveland in the women's pole vault.

Heller's throw of 63-2 1/4 was the best throw of her career, the third best throw in K-State history and the UNI Invitational record.

After the meet, the main concern on Coach Cliff Rovelto's mind was health. Multi-event competitor Darius Draudvila hurt his hamstring Saturday.

"He was on pace for a NCAA qualifying mark." Rovelto said, "(the injury) doesn't look great. It will affect the rest of his season. Hopefully we can get him back for some of the rest of the season."

Rovelto saidK-State can't afford to be held back by the injury bug.

"We have a lot of quality, but not a lot of depth this year."

ENROLLMENT | International enrollment declines

Lewis said having a scholarship is something to work on in terms of sales and marketing, but after working hard to keep international recruiting funds steady, a scholarship is not a top priority.

Although Chittawisutthi dislikes the cost of attending K-State, he said he likes the class sizes.

"In Bangkok, I usually studied in a big class with 80 students, but here I am studying in a small class with 15-40 students," Chittawisutthi said. "In my country, I studied by the professor giving a lecture, but I am learning by doing here."

Sasivimon Chittrakorn, graduate student in food science from Phitsanulok, Thailand, came to K-State because of a quickly processed application.

"I applied at about five schools in United States, and K-State processed my application really quick and was the first university that sent me the letter of acceptance," Chittrakorn said.

Lewis said getting an application letter submitted quickly is a big step in recruiting international students. He said applications are usually sent back to students within two weeks.

Micha Gamper, freshman in architecture from Switzerland, said he chose K-State instead of a school on the coast because K-State's architecture program is ranked in the top 10 and because K-State has a nationally recognized track program.

"Sure, schools in California, Florida or somewhere else where it is warm and there's a lot of things to do sounded really tempting, but education and practice were more important to me," Gamper said. "When I was searching for a school, I was looking for a Division I school with a good architecture program and a competitive track and field team. I think I made a good decision when I decided to pick K-State."

qualifies for a free file. However, the taxpayer must pay the company to file their state taxes. At www.taxsimple.com, students can only file their federal taxes for free if their adjusted gross income is more than $28,000. If it is under $28,000, the taxpayer has to pay to have his or her federal and state taxes filed.

Higgins said the free file system online is a good idea, because it's cheaper and easier.

"You can do it from home, save postage and possibly get your returns faster, but that also depends on other factors," he said.

Some students are wary of filing their taxes online because the system is so new.

"If I knew for sure what I was doing, I'd file online," Adam Glendening, senior in accounting and finance, said. "There's more room for error if you do it like that."

Error seems to be the major disadvantage of filing taxes online. Higgins said if a taxpayer is unfamiliar with the system, there can be major errors. Also, as it gets closer to the April 15 tax deadline, the system may crash if there are too many people using the system, thus making taxpayers start over from the beginning.

Even though taxpayers can file their taxes online, some students have said that they probably won't do so as they get older.

"I would file my taxes online because it's easier and quicker and I'm assuming there are safeguards in place to recognize errors," said Brett Currier, junior in biological and agricultural engineering. "But when I'm older, I'll probably have someone else file my taxes because it just makes more sense."

Even if students do not want to file their taxes online, the IRS Web site is a useful tool.

However, Rosenberg's singles win did not come so easily.

Rosenberg took on Lauren Jones, BYU's top singles player. After a relatively easy win in the first set, the second set got a little tense, as the set was tied at 4-4.

From that point, Rosenberg gathered herself and took the match.

"I got myself back together and composed myself," she said. "My game wasn't going the way I wanted it to, and I just told myself that I have to grind it out."

And grind it out she did, as she took the second set and the match with a final score of 6-3, 6-4.

The Wildcats dropped the next four matches after Rosenberg and Kvaratskhelia won, to give the win to BYU.

Looking ahead, K-State has an away match looming with Mississippi next Sunday in Oxford, Miss.

Bietau said he sees a lot of room for improvement before the Wildcats' first road match.

"Tennis is a game that switches from offense to defense quickly," he said. " And there are some places where we're not very good at that right now. That would be one thing we need to work on before (Mississippi)."

IRAQ | Iraqi citizens vote in national election Sunday

60 percent of Iraq's 26 million people, were expected to vote in large numbers, encouraged by clerics who hope their community will gain power after generations of oppression by the Sunni minority.

After a slow start, voting appeared heavy in Shiite and mixed Shiite-Sunni neighborhoods in Baghdad but low in some heavily Sunni areas.

Sunnis in mixed areas may have voted in greater numbers there because pressure to boycott was less intense and chances of retaliation were lower because they would not stand out at the polls.

There are few ways by sight to distinguish Sunni and Shiite Muslims.

Hadi Nassif Jassem was pushed by his son on a wheeled office chair to a polling station in Baghdad's Saadoun neighborhood.

"The vote today was great. It will raise high the name of the Arab nation and Iraq. We haven't lived such a democracy for 50 years," said the 54-year-old former truck driver, who said he became crippled because surgery he needed could not be done in Iraq.

The election will create a 275-member National Assembly and 18 provincial legislatures.

The assembly will draw up the country's permanent Constitution and will select a president and two deputy presidents, who in turn will name a new prime minister and Cabinet to serve for 11 months until new elections are held.

The vote is a major test of Bush's goal of promoting democracy in the Middle East.

If successful, it could hasten the day when the United States brings home its 150,000 troops.

More than 1,400 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq War in March 2003, including a Marine killed in combat Sunday in Iraq's restive Anbar province.

Guerrilla attacks began within two hours of the ballots starting Sunday morning.

All but one of the day's nine suicide attacks came in Baghdad, mostly against polling sites, using bombers on foot with explosives strapped to their bodies, since private cars were banned from the streets.

In one of the deadliest attacks of the day, a bomber got onto a minibus carrying voters to the polls near Hillah, south of Baghdad, and detonated his explosives, killing himself and at least four other people.

Deadly mortar volleys hit Baghdad's Shiite neighborhood of Sadr City and others struck voters at several sites in Baladand Kirkuk in the north and Mahawil south of the capital.

Across the country, at least 35 people and nine suicide bombers were killed.

points – and sophomore guard Fred Peete's clutch free-throw shooting down the stretch, the Wildcats showed that this team will not give in when faced with adversity on the road.

When the Tigers scored the first 14 points of the second half, many Wildcat fans probably thought, "Here we go again."

The Wildcats themselves obviously didn't.

Massey, Peete and sophomore forward Cartier Martin all hit jaw-dropping shots with defenders draped all over them in K-State's effort to get back in the game and eventually take the lead for good.

And don't forget about sophomore guard and Columbia native Lance Harris' three 3-pointers in the first half that kept K-State afloat and gave them a 28-26 halftime lead.

So here the Wildcats stand, 3-3 in the Big 12 and full of momentum.

Can they go to Stillwater on Wednesday and win? I don't know, that might be asking too much.

But based on Saturday's historic victory, the Wildcats have shown they are capable of some things we haven't seen around here in a long time.

Talk of postseason play beyond the Big 12 Tournament can be taken off life support for the time being.

This isn't the Wildcats of the recent past. This is a new team.

One that I think has much more to show us before this season is done.

Wind farm debate continues

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County citizens view wind turbines either as an industrial complex, a clean renewable energy source or a destruction to the Flint Hills prairie life.

These opposing views on wind energy turbines have caused conflict within the county.

The Riley County Board of County Commissioners passed regulations for Wind Energy Conversion Systems with a 2-1 vote on Nov. 18.

Michael Kearns, county commissioner, said he is not in favor of wind farm development in the Flint Hills, but his motion to ban wind farms died from lack of a second, and regulations for wind farm development began. Despite his opposition to wind farms, Kearns said the regulations needed to be enforced.

"If wind farms do come to Riley County we need to have a way to regulate their construction," he said. "In order to accomplish that, I'm willing to stick by the regulations we've established."

Currently, anyone who wants to build wind turbines must submit a request. The request will have to pass

Gov. Sebelius offers wind energy proposal

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius is trying to resolve debate in the Flint Hills area.

Lee Allison, Sebelius' energy adviser, said the governor wants to help increase wind energy development and production while preserving ranching and culture in the Flint Hills area.

"She has asked for electric developers not to move forward with any areas in the Flint Hills until local officials have developed regulations," Allison said.

Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said he had a lot of reservations about the development of wind farms in the area and agreed with Sebelius' decision to delay development.

"I want to make sure we aren't short-sighted and rushed into damaging one of the most beautiful places in the world," he said. "I suspect most legislators are torn just as I am about preserving the area and taking responsibility for the need of new energy sources."

So far Butler, Harper, Riley and Wabaunsee counties have developed specific policies for wind farm development.

Campus Edge plan includes more parking, new stores

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city has a vision for a bigger, better Aggieville.

The Aggieville Business Association hired RTKL, Inc., an architecture design firm, to draft a long-range plan improving the appearance and quality of Aggieville and its surrounding areas. The concept, called the Aggieville-Campus Edge District Plan, was the subject of a public interest meeting Monday.

The first part of the proposal involves the five blocks along Manhattan Avenue north of Bluemont Avenue, known as the campus edge, which would become housing.

"We want to create housing that is urban in scale and density that is also respectful to the surroundings," city planner Cam Moeller said.

Moeller said they are looking at building three- to four-story townhouses. New zoning requirements would require a certain number of shade trees and windows for a more attractive exterior, as well as screened parking in the back.

"We'd like to see some additional landscaping," Moeller said. "We want to try and coordinate the development to make all the buildings look alike."

Another part of the plan calls for a revamping of the structures lining Bluemont Avenue north of Aggieville from Manhattan Avenue to 11th Street. This area, referred to as the "Bluemont corridor" would have businesses on both sides of the street.

"We want to make the area more pedestrian-friendly," senior planner Ockert Fourie said.

Fourie said they are looking for smaller retail businesses and would like to regulate big commercial signs along the street.

"Moro is the kind of example we're looking at to try and re-create on some other streets. We don't want it to look like a highway," Fourie said.

Another way they will accommodate pedestrians is by building two parking structures at the east and west ends of Aggieville.

Parking garages might also free up parking along Moro Street, allowing two-way traffic.

The third part of the redevelopment is Aggieville itself. Planners would like to see more sidewalks and design unity in new buildings.

Jeff Levin, owner of Varney's Book Store, said that they don't expect to start taking out current structures any time soon. The project is a framework for the future and is still in the discussion stages.

"This is not going to happen overnight. We're just giving the next generation some guidelines," Levin said.

Cost of student health services vary across Big 12

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The cost of receiving health services at student health centers varies based on the university privilege fee.

At K-State the privilege fee is $45 per semester for every full-time student. However, Iowa State University has a health privilege fee of $85 per semester at its Thielen Student Health Center while the University of Oklahoma's Goddard Health Center charges its students $54 per semester.

This fee at all three universities pays for unlimited physician or nurse visits and offers students lower rates on services like X-rays, injections and lab work.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said the privilege fee money also goes to the health promotion department, which provides information to students on healthy lifestyles.

"That department will often go out and give talks to greek organizations or K-State classes concerning students maintaining a healthy lifestyle," he said.

All three universities offer a full retail pharmacy to students in which the privilege fee lowers the cost of medication but is not included with the fee.

Mark Brown-Barnett, director of the Lafene pharmacy, said the universities allow students to file a claim with their personal insurance so some or all of the prescription will be paid.

Candidate outlines legacy

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Craig Fiegel, the third candidate for the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 superintendent position, said he would like his legacy in Manhattan to be that of a man who does the right things for kids for a better future.

Monday night Fiegel talked about priorities schools must have, communication and the effect of No Child Left Behind in school systems.

"I see some real positives in NCLB," Fiegel said. "I think it has helped us as an educational community to refocus what we're doing and where we are with student learning. I think it's helped us take a look at the fact that we have a responsibility to teach all students."

Fiegel has served as superintendent in Evergreen Park, Ill., since 1999.

Before that, he served in the Lawrence Public Schools USD 497 as assistant superintendent of administrative services from 1990 to 1999.

Fiegel graduated from the University of Kansas with bachelor and master of science degrees in elementary education in 1977 and 1979, respectively. In 1989, Fiegel graduated from K-State with a Ph.D. in educational administration.

Fiegel said there are certain steps that good schools take to educate.

He said the first step is establishing relationships, but not friendships, with students. He said the next steps are management and maintaining standards in curriculum.

Fiegel said another important step is communication.

"I don't know how you operate in an organization like this and not be collaborating," he said. "You've got to talk to people, get feedback and work with people.

"For example, I don't want to be a high school principal, you've got one of those. So the responsibilities of the high school is with the high school principal.

"Now should we be talking about what's going on and how things are running and is the atmosphere in the building where it should be? Certainly."

Mo Hosni, parent and Manhattan resident, said he likes Fiegel's experience as well as his personality.

"I felt he had great credentials being a teacher, principals on different levels and I think the different locations he's worked at give him good experience," Hosni said.

"But I'm not sure he was prepared with a plan of action and what to do on specific issues with diversity and interaction, but he would be an acceptable candidate."

Tom Fryer, Manhattan resident, said he has been impressed with the quality of applicants for the superintendent position.

"I've seen all three of the candidates, and I'm very impressed in the quality of all three," he said.

"I think that his (Fiegel's) experience in Lawrence, where they have a major university, is good, because it affects a lot of things."

Fiegel said the main thing parents and educators need to think about is that change can be an important tool for schools that have problems.

"One thing people need to remember if we want to improve is that we can't keep doing the same thing and expect different results," Fiegel said.

Study abroad offers affordable experiences

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's study abroad programs offer students affordable travel and valuable experiences.

The deadline to apply for fall and summer 2005 programs is March 18, the day before spring break. This is also the due date to apply for scholarships and financial aid for studying abroad.

Jenifer Chambers, K-State's study abroad director, encourages students to apply soon because some programs are more competitive than others, especially the new opportunities that have recently developed.

A new program with Huazhong Normal University in China will allow five K-State students to teach English there for eight weeks in June and July. Chambers said that the competition to get the spots will be heavy, with an interview followed by training in teaching English. The program is for students of junior standing or above.

Also new and opening in the fall, students will now have the opportunity to study for a semester in London or Florence, Italy. Both programs are faculty-led, which means that two K-State faculty will be accompanying students to their chosen destination.

Students can take K-State courses in both countries, and may earn 12 to 18 credit hours, most of which will count as University General Education credits. In Florence, students even have the option to take six credits of Italian at no additional charge.

Chambers said that she is hoping to get around 25 students for each destination, and is now accepting applications.

Students are not limited to traveling to Europe, however. K-State students have the unique opportunity to travel anywhere, with the option of individual, group, faculty-led and exchange programs. K-State also has programs that work with every major.

Many of the colleges within K-State also offer their own programs abroad. Lara Litton, senior in interior architecture, studied in Castiglion Siorentino, Italy, in 2004 through the College o f Architecture, Planning and Design.

"I learned a lot about the culture and language, and got to get a semester worth of credits out of the way. It was a good chance to take a break but still go to school," Litton said.

Chambers said that almost all of the students who have gone abroad agree that the experience was a positive one.

She also emphasized that because the market is international now, students need to gain intercultural skills to compete professionally.

"Students come to K-State to get the best education they can get for their field, but we're living in a global society now, and to get that global component you can study abroad," Chambers said.

According to statistics from the Office of International Programs, only about 3 percent

Students now in on hiring process

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can now be involved in the hiring of faculty.

The Kansas Board of Regents made changes to the hiring policy promoting responses from students from all Kansas universities and many college administrators.

The board's changes to the existing policy states one member of the three institutional personnel required to be present during interviews with potential faculty "shall" be a student.

This is a change from the previous wording which said that one of the personnel "should" be a student, leading to a potential lack of student input in the overall hiring process.

"It's an excellent idea to bring students into the process, because they're at the front-line," Duane Nellis, provost, said.

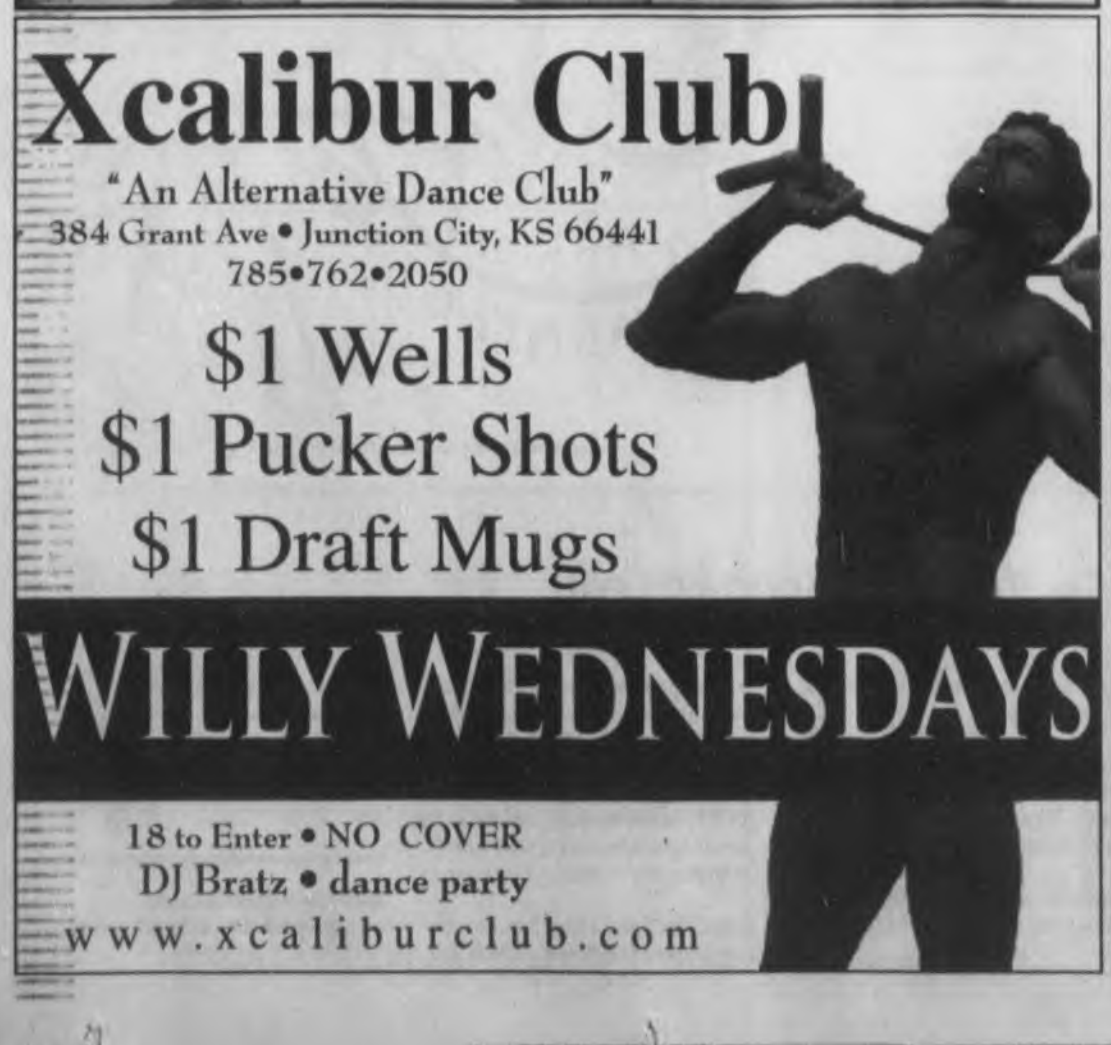
"New policy changes will work to enhance the current policy and will give students better representation," said Matt Wagner, governmental relations director for Student Governing Association.

"Student response to the policy changes was positive, all voted for the recommended changes," he said.

Dan Shulenburger, provost and executive vice chancellor at the University of Kansas, asked if the bar was being set high enough for those who take the Test of Spoken English, a requirement for all prospective graduate teaching assistants and faculty.

Current policy requires a minimum scoring of 50 or above on the TSE. Nellis said the bar is set high to promote improvement.

He said one solution to the problem of English competency is to implement a campus-wide mentoring program, already in use by the physics department.



Dave Van Domelen, director of instructional support, said this strategy is successful due to opportunities for GTAs and prospective faculty to gain one-on-one experience with students and practice speaking with students.

Nellis said the mentoring approach would allow students to gain experience with teachers and professors with a broader range of backgrounds.

Ron Downey, ex-provost and professor in psychology, said many people who have problems with spoken English are native speakers, even in such departments with high numbers of non-native speakers as math, physics, and other departments with majors in the sciences.

TO THE POINT

Study abroad program offers important opportunities

With new programs being offered by the Office of International Programs, the number of opportunities to study abroad is greater than ever before.

In spite of this, many students never take the opportunity to spend a semester studying in a foreign country.

Studying abroad is a beneficial experience, allowing students to expand their knowledge of another culture, acquaint themselves with students from around the world and improve their skills in a foreign language.

President Jon Wefald has a goal to send 10 percent of K-State students on a study abroad program during their undergraduate careers, but only about 3 percent of students study abroad.

Students who study abroad have higher acceptance rates to graduate schools and higher job placement after graduation.

Because K-State offers affordable programs for almost every major to almost anywhere in the world.

More students should take advantage of the opportunity to spend a summer or a semester in a foreign country, becoming a member of the international community.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Imminent threat

Wind farms pose danger to financial, environmental aspects of Flint Hills

JESSE MANNING

Energy developers see dollar signs, conservationists see a land to be preserved and Kansans from Manhattan to Cowley County fall on both sides of the wind energy issue that is sweeping the state.

It's a debate that is unlikely to be resolved quickly as wind energy opponents continue to hammer home their dissent.

Their concerns are valid, logical and – most of all – correct.

Calling wind energy "the greatest imminent threat to the Flint Hills of Kansas," Ron Klataske of the Audubon of Kansas adequately sums up the harsh feelings toward wind energy developers.

The Jan. 26 edition of the Kansas City Star reported that an alliance of conservationists filed a federal lawsuit to stop the Elk River Windfarm from raising 100 wind turbines in the Flint Hills.

Elk River is only one proposed windfarm. Munkers Creek is another stalled project in Wabaunsee and Morris counties. Look for the lawsuits to continue and the stalemate to go on; neither side will give up or compromise.

Wind energy has its positives. It is a clean, renewable source of power produced in the United States. Wind farms could be put on ground rented from Kansas farmers, which would put more money in the hands of Kansans. And for consumers, wind energy is one of the cheapest renewable sources available.

But those in favor of "green" energy seldom acknowledge the drawbacks to wind power.

Chief among these drawbacks is the unreliability of wind energy. The wind doesn't always blow. The winds of Kansas regularly sweep the state, but they can't speed up based on energy demands. Some of the hottest days of the summer or coldest days of the winter may have no wind at all, even though energy demand would be at a peak.

Illustration by Jesse Manning | COLLEGIAN

But the energy produced in Kansas by wind power may not even stay in the state. Because of our low population, the non-storable wind energy could be exported to more populous areas.

Also, wind energy isn't cost competitive, and often, wind power plants need to be subsidized by government funds.

The Topeka Capital-Journal from June 14, 2004 revealed that Kansas currently has a 100 percent property tax exemption for wind energy developers, and the Jan. 15 Lawrence Journal-World said energy buyers are hesitant to get involved with the controversial wind farms. To meet Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' goal of producing 1,000 megawatts of renewable energy by 2015, subsidies to prop up the wind farms would be necessary.

If windfarms were prevalent in Kansas, we'd get many of the disadvantages and few benefits. Even the farmers who lease land for turbines would be negatively affected. Access and maintenance roads to the turbines would have to be built. The towers, some approaching 400 feet in height, need anchoring in cement blocks that may never disappear, even if the turbines were removed.

Possibly the most ironic element of the supposedly pollution-free wind turbines is the pollution that they produce: sight and noise pollution. Michael Heberling, in the July 1, 2002 issue of Environmental News, summed up this irony best when he wrote, "environmental activist groups regularly fight against a lone cell phone tower on a hill, (but) wind tower 'sprawl' casts far more sight pollution upon pristine vistas."

Kansas is not ready for large-scale windfarm development. Sebelius' ambitious renewable energy goals are at odds with her wish to protect our tallgrass prairie and other scenic areas of the state.

Kansas shouldn't capitulate to wind energy developers pushing a relatively inefficient means of energy production.

Windfarms would only ensure that Kansas would shoulder the entire burden and receive few benefits of wind energy.

Americans should stop worrying about public nakedness

JEREMY PARKER

Shortly before last year's Christmas shopping season began, the notoriously anal Wal-Mart stores, Inc. announced it was refusing to sell Jon Stewart's "America (The Book): A Citizen's Guide To Democracy Inaction," because one page is, simply, way too hot.

Specifically, the picture in question depicts the nine Supreme Court justices' heads Photoshopped over pictures of naked, wrinkly octogenarians (see: "super-old people").

The adjacent page contains cut-outs of the justices' robes, with a caption reading, "restore their dignity by matching each justice with his or her respective robe."

Spokeswoman Karen Burk told the Associated Press, "We felt the majority of our customers would not be comfortable with it."

She went on, saying, "We offer what we think our customers want to buy. That just makes good business sense."

After the book promptly proved her wrong by topping nearly every best-seller list in the country, it became clear that Burk's statements were code for, "we're Wal-Mart, and we're a bunch of wieners."

I might've understood the decision if the book contained images that intended to provoke arousal, but that certainly isn't the case.

Anyone who has actually seen the picture knows that the naked justices are nowhere close to being even remotely titillating and Wal-Mart is just overreacting in its usual excessive fashion.

The weirdos who actually took that type of stuff seriously were joyless, overprotective, lunatic-fringe parents who made their kids stay inside on Halloween.

But lately, as the country shifts to the right and false morality engulfs America like it's the 1950s all over again, it's no longer just "Wal-Mart being Wal-Mart." It's more like, "pretty much everyone in the country being Wal-Mart."

Remember the "Desperate Housewives" ad that aired on ABC's Monday Night Football a few months ago? It featured a shot of Nicolette Sheridan, who was shown from behind, from the waist up – gasp – exposing her back!

Parents across the country immediately flipped their wigs and made entirely too big of a deal out of the whole thing, prompting the spineless ABC to apologize (and later admit that they, too, are "a bunch of wieners").

I sure hope no Manhattanites were watching the ad in public. They might've been ticketed and fined for involuntarily breaking a certain ordinance enacted last year by the Manhattan City Commission, who also overreacts to just about everything.

Do we really have nothing better to do than freak out about seeing a woman's bare back in a national TV commercial? Is seeing a few naked old people in Stewart's book going to steer an entire generation toward sexual addiction?

Does it seem odd that the sensationalist media spent more time harping on Janet Jackson's wardrobe malfunction than they spent covering the most catastrophic natural disaster in recorded history?

American society needs to get its priorities straight. Bottling up mildly-provocative sexuality in the public square should not be at the top of our list. So chill out, America. We're far too uptight.

Besides, as Spinal Tap guitarist Nigel Tufnel once asked, "What's wrong with being sexy?"

Diverse groups develop better, quicker ideas

Dear Editor,

After reading last Thursday's editorial-page comments about diversity, one might come to the conclusion that "diversity" is a new idea that American universities are attempting to push on the rest of society.

In fact, our universities are finally catching up to the rest of our society and to the rest of the world.

It is business and industry, and government and private agencies, that have understood for decades the importance of building project teams from ethnically and culturally diverse groups to develop new products, services, markets and publicity campaigns. Diverse teams come up with more new ideas more quickly than monocultural ones.

Hanging only with those who are culturally similar to you can in fact equip you with a distorted picture of the real world.

On the other hand, if you come into regular contact with people in positions of authority who are ethnically different from you (faculty, staff, administrators) you are going to be better prepared to interact with future human resources directors who interview you and hire you, and with CEOs, managers and directors who supervise you.

If you work and study regularly with students who come from different ethnic backgrounds than yours, you are going to be more comfortable and effective serving on teams with your own future co-workers. It has nothing to do with your ethnicity, and everything with how you relate to others.

It is not a "cancer," but a fact of life. Watch "The Apprentice." Watch how project teams are formed, and watch who gets fired and why.

City sales tax important to maintain schools

Dear Editor,

This is in response to a statement in "To the Point" in the Jan. 26 Collegian. I write as Chair of the Campaign Steering Committee, which has been meeting since Dec. 20, gathering information and planning ways of putting information in the hands of voters.

The editorial, in commenting on the quarter-cent sales tax proposal, stated, "If it is passed, consumers will pay 25 cents more in Manhattan sales tax." That would be correct if a person spends $100 on taxable items. Another example would be an extra dime in sales tax on a $40 purchase of taxable items.

Any increase in taxation must be fully justified by the taxing authority. The USD 383 Board of Education asked the city commission to place the quarter-cent sales tax on the ballot for the April 5 election. The City Commission will decide whether or not to do so at a future meeting of the commission. Students should indeed pay attention to matters which affect them. They should know that this sales tax increase is for only three years.

If the district receives additional state funding and does not need the sales tax revenue, the Board of Education and the city can agree to terminate the tax prior to the end of the three years. Students should also know that the Board of Education has cut $3.9 million from the district budget over the past four years. Those of us studying the situation have concluded that further cuts will erode the quality of education in Manhattan.

We are in favor of the small tax increase because it will allow the board to avoid cutting additional programs and staff. Quality schools are a vital part of Manhattan's appeal to new university faculty and to businesses locating here.

The community prides itself on the excellence of our public schools; we do not want to risk losing that important dimension of our heritage. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to your readers.

Elections in Iraq doesn't mean democracy; U.S. troops should withdraw immediately

Dear Editor,

Although I strongly opposed the illegal invasion – and the ongoing, disastrous occupation – of Iraq by my country, I was glad to hear that so many Iraqis turned out for the elections.

I would agree with Mr. Hogg that, clearly, Iraqis yearn for a system of participatory democracy, by which they have the power to hold leaders accountable to the best interests of all.

I must point out, however, that holding elections does not equal democracy.

Citizens of the Soviet Union, for example, were allowed to vote: their votes just didn't make any difference.

I hope that will not be the case in Iraq, but it would be foolish to believe that the situation in Iraq can be transformed overnight by a single election.

This is just a small step in the right direction. What really matters is what happens next.

While the majority of Iraqis are probably happy to be rid of Hussein Hussein, an even greater majority would like to be rid of the United States as soon as possible.

Until that point, they will not be "liberate," and the violence is very unlikely to diminish.

The true test of a free and independent democracy in Iraq may well be whether they are allowed to vote the United States out altogether.

Given that the White House is planning to build 14 permanent American military bases in Iraq, it's clear that Bush has no interest in fostering real democracy there.

The New York Times recently reported that the Bush administration is also exploring ways to shut down the Al Jazeera cable network, presumably because it gives voice to critics of the United States and calls world attention to the human costs of our "war on terror" – such as the thousands of civilian casualties that our media ignore.

Freedom of the press is, of course, supposed to be a hallmark of American democracy. For the sake of the Iraqi people, the Middle East and the world as a whole, I hope that they will eventually have a free and peaceful society.

But it's not there yet, and I don't think it will ever get there with occupation.

So I suggest we use our democratic rights as Americans to demand immediate withdrawal of our troops from Iraq and give Iraqis a chance to build the system we claim to want for them.

Iraqi citizens know better about country

Dear Editor,

The world witnessed a truly historic moment Sunday, as Iraqi citizens participated in the first free election ever held in the Middle East. This event silenced naysayers and doubters in the media, at least for one day, and hopefully enlightened them simultaneously.

As a student at KSU, I would like to see the Collegian deliver concrete information rather than print individual opinions.

Unfortunately, I was disappointed to read last week's article regarding the Iraqi elections.

I was interviewed for this article under the impression that my information would be used equally in order to contribute a solid argument for democracy.

I was surprised to see my ideas discarded to a comparison of liberty and watching a movie.

As an Iraqi and having lived my life under the rule of Hussein I am more than qualified to provide the information needed by the students of K-State to understand the importance of this event.

American troops and Iraqis work to advance living and provide the country with essentials like water and energy.

But with constant attacks from the serpent terrorists, these advancements mutate into setbacks.

Finally, I would like to add that undergraduates attending K-State cannot recall their time spent in Iraq.

The Iraqi citizens know what they want and outsiders can continue doubting. The obvious cannot be faltered and the citizens of Iraq will not be denied.

God bless America. God bless Iraq.

It's liberty or it's death.

Coggins not just a pretty face on the basketball court

Sophomore guard becomes scoring threat for K-State women, scores career-high 25 points

It's no secret K-State sophomore guard Claire Coggins has a lot of fans, and most of them are guys.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Since she came to K-State, Coggins' fan base has been predominantly male, considering that she has been blessed with striking good looks.

She has been known for her beauty ever since she committed to play for the Wildcats. K-State fans on campus and on Internet message boards began drooling over the thought of watching the girl in the blonde ponytail make her way up and down the court at Bramlage Coliseum.

But now, Coggins is getting some added attention, and it has nothing to do with how she looks.

All of a sudden, Coggins has turned into a major scoring threat for the No. 15 Wildcats, making her yet another weapon on an already ultra-talented K-State squad.

Take, for example, Saturday's game at Colorado.

The Buffaloes came out ready to play, and it looked like K-State might suffer a defeat at the hands of a team desperate for a win.

Coggins, however, had other plans.

She scored a career-high 25 points on 9-of-18 shooting, including an impressive 5-of-8 from three-point range, also a career-high.

It quite possibly was the best game of her young career.

Along with teammate Kendra Wecker's 28 points, Coggins willed K-State to a hard-fought 81-70 win to help keep the Wildcats atop the Big 12 Conference standings.

Coggins has upped her game in the past few weeks and over the course of the entire season, and it couldn't come at a better time for the Wildcats.

She is averaging 13 points per game in Big 12 Conference games, and has set or tied her career-high four times during the season.

She has always been a stellar defensive player – she has 30 steals on the season, second only to Wecker's 36 – but now she has proven she can contribute effectively on offense as well.

She has become more aggressive with the basketball, taking it to the hoop with greater assertion and drawing more fouls.

Coggins has also kept her sweet shooting touch from long-range, as she ranks second on the team in 3-pointers with 28.

All of this spells good news for the Wildcats.

With the upcoming graduation of seniors Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney and Wecker, Coggins' recent outburst of production has made it evidently clear that she is more than just a pretty face.

And to K-State fans, male or female, Coggins has never looked better.

K-State triple jumper among nation's best, possibly world

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State track standout Chaytan Hill, the leading collegiate triple jumper in the country, has a goal: to win an NCAA championship.

"I figure if I keep doing what I'm doing and do it harder, I'll be able to achieve my goal," Hill said.

Last year, Hill finished second in the NCAA Indoor Championships with a leap of 44-8 1/4.

She has automatically qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships this year with a jump of 44-8 3/4 at the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular.

Cliff Rovelto, in his 13th season as K-State's head track coach, said he believes Hill has the potential to be among the best in the world.

"She is a national-caliber kid, but I think she can be one of the very best – one that makes national teams, world championship teams, Olympic teams," Rovelto said of his senior captain. "But for her to compete at the world class level, she is going to continue to have to work hard.

"Among the American collegiate (triple jumpers), I think you could make a strong argument that she is (the best)," Rovelto said.

Hill, a four-time NCAA All-American, is chasing the K-State triple jump record of 45-1 3/4, which was set by Hill's mentor, Vanitta Kinard, at the 1997 NCAA Championships.

Hill's wind-aided triple jump of 46-10 at the 2004 Midwest Regionals would have set the NCAA record under normal conditions, but the wind was 0.04 meters per second more than the legal limit.

From a young age, Hill has excelled at athletics.

The 5-foot-10 senior was the most outstanding female athlete for Judson High School in San Antonio, Texas, where she excelled in three sports – volleyball, track and basketball, her first love.

Hill won the state triple jump title her senior year after she finished second three years in a row.

Hill nearly committed to the University of Texas track program before she visited K-State. Manhattan's small-town atmosphere and the team members' friendliness helped convince her to choose K-State.

"The first thing I noticed was the difference in atmosphere," Hill said. "The girls here were much more friendly. Coach Rovelto seemed way more sincere than the Texas coach did."

Hill's mother, Mattie Byrd, said she and her husband supported their daughter's decision to come to K-State.

"Among the American collegiate (triple jumpers), I think you could make a strong argument that she is (the best)."

Cliff Rovelto
HEAD COACH

"After she went and made her decision, we stood behind her 100 percent," Byrd said. "I am very proud that she chose K-State. She couldn't have chosen a better school. The athletes, the coaches – they have been so supportive."

38 equestrian team members recognized for academic success

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Academic success is an understatement when it comes to K-State's equestrian team.

Out of 65 members, the team had 38 members named to the Big 12 Commissioner's academic honor roll.

Currently, the team has nine members with a 4.0 grade point average and 40 others with 3.0 or above.

The team works hard and strives to succeed in competition and in the classroom.

"Everyone works very hard," Valerie Meyer said. "We all have the team, school and jobs, and we try to help each other out as much as possible."

Meyer said she believes that being on the team helps them academically.

"We get a lot of help from the tutoring available through the athletic department," Meyer said.

Personally, Meyer said she works hard to make sure everything gets done.

"I have practice during the day, so I have to buckle down at night and make sure that I get everything done," Meyer said.

The team also tries to create a support system to help each other and make sure that everyone keeps their grades up.

"We study together a lot," Meyer said. "If someone has taken a class before, we will get their old notes and they will help us study.

"We are really good at getting together and making sure that we get all our work done," she said.

Success academically starts before someone joins the team.

"It's something that most of us have done previously," Meghan Felts, junior in business administration, said. "Before, we did well for ourselves, but now we have to think about the team and how it affects them."

Felts believes that time management is key to success.

"I'm taking 18 hours this semester," Felts said. "If you can manage your time and plan ahead, it is not that hard."

The team realizes that it is a great accomplishment to be on the Big 12 Honor Roll.

"It was very positive to see," Felts said. "It is good to see that equestrian being recognized by the NCAA as a sport didn't take away from us academically.

"We came to K-State for school, so academics come first."

Many of the team's members said the coaches help a lot.

"Our coaches put as much focus on academics as they can," Felts said. "It is very important to the coaches for us to do well academically, and they stress that often."

Head coach Teresa Slough said she was proud of the team for its accomplishments.

"We do definitely put a lot of focus on academics," Slough said. "I think it is good to see the team get recognized for the time and effort they to devote to the team and the time they dedicate to school. It is a great honor for them."

MBB | Massey earns Big 12 Player of the Week honor

K-State senior forward Jeremiah Massey was named Big 12 Player of the Week for the second time this season after he averaged 20 points and 8.5 rebounds in wins over Iowa State and Missouri.

Massey

Massey's 20 points per game came on 51.9 (14-of-27) percent shooting from the field and 80 percent (12-of-15) free-throw shooting.

Massey came through for the Wildcats in the clutch, as 34 of his 40 points for the week came in the second half of the two games.

Massey twice earned conference Rookie of the Week last season.

NFL | Maurice Clarett pulls out of NFL skills event

MIAMI — Maurice Clarett stiff-armed another commitment, reinforcing doubts about his reliability and fitness with the NFL scouting combine three weeks away.

The elusive, reclusive former Ohio State running back had been scheduled to participate in the college football all-star challenge, an eight-player skills event taped Monday by Fox TV at Dolphins Stadium for broadcast Saturday.

At the combine a year ago, Clarett showed up overweight and declined to work out. He'll be eligible for the draft in April after his legal bid to enter the NFL last year was overturned by an appeals court. He hasn't played since being suspended by Ohio State following the 2002 season.

NFL | Owens looks Super in first practice with Eagles

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — T.O. is almost a go.

Terrell Owens, the Philadelphia Eagles' All-Pro receiver, practiced Monday for the first time since injuring his ankle last month, moving closer toward returning for the Super Bowl.

"He looks great. He looks great," Eagles safety Michael Lewis said.

Owens took part in less than one-third of the team's 30 plays, getting a pass each time he ran a route.

MLB | Bonds to miss most of spring training after surgery

Bonds

The seven-time NL MVP had a "minor arthritis cleanup," the San Francisco Giants said in statement. Dr. Arthur Ting also repaired a small tear in Bonds' meniscus.

Bonds, who had a similar surgery on his left knee in October, will begin six weeks of rehabilitation Tuesday, and the Giants expect him to return to full strength by opening day.

Defining style

Photos by Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Amy Brenner, junior in hotel and restaurant management, and Brie Spencer, junior in marketing, laugh as they put on makeup in the bathroom of the Delta Delta Delta sorority house Saturday evening. The girls dressed in different styles of fashion to go out for the evening.

No sense of style can be overcome by flaunting best features in flattering wear

COURTNEY LAIR

Style – a concept that is far too complex to really grasp in a single definition.

Legendary fashion editor Diana Vreeland once told the Rolling Stone, "You gotta have style. It helps you get down the stairs. It helps you get up in the morning. It's a way of life. Without it you are nobody. I'm not talking about a lot of clothes."

I must say that this admired fashionista came as close to capturing the essence of the word as anybody.

We've all seen those people walking on campus that stand out from the rest and demand a second glance. Some people simply possess a natural je ne sais quoi – a certain something, as the French would say, that is indescribable.

Although not everyone is born with this fabulousness, a not-so-swank style can be overcome.

When it comes to developing your own style the first rule is to know yourself. Think about your personality, your outlook on life, and your values and then let that show through by the way you dress.

For inspiration, look to someone whose style you particularly admire – whether that be Audrey Hepburn, Kanye West or the person who sits next to you in Spanish II.

It is perfectly acceptable to get a general idea of what look you are trying to achieve and then add your own personal touches to make the look your own.

This subject can't exactly be taught, but here are a few ideas in helping you define your own sense of style.

Know what styles and cuts flatter your body type and gravitate towards the tried-and-true. Why sacrifice falling into the new trouser jeans craze only to appear 10 pounds heavier than you really are? Honestly. Following trends is fabulous, but never to the point that they won't make you look and feel your best.

Emphasize your assets. Everyone knows what their best features are, so if you've got it, flaunt it! If you have great legs, show off by wearing skirts. If you have pretty feet, wear a delicious pair of strappy sandals.

And for those of you ladies who don't already know, high heels make legs look longer and leaner.

Expand the colors in your wardrobe by accumulating a variety of pieces of clothing and accessories in shades that complement your hair and skin tone. A little splash of color can go a long way.

You can always throw on something bright as you're dashing out the door, whether it be a shockingly bright pair of turquoise heels or a classy yellow satin clutch. Guys could try a kelly green tie or a flamboyant pair of royal blue tennis shoes.

Do a complete inventory of your wardrobe to find out what you have a lot of, and what you may be missing.

Now that you have figured out what makes up the majority of your wardrobe, you might want to invest in some versatile pieces that you can add to switch up your look.

For example, if you usually wear jeans and a tank top out, experiment with cute accessories such a fedora, a multi-strand pearl necklace or a headscarf. For guys, a belt with a larger-than-life buckle might be fun or try a unique pair of cuff links.

New trends come and go each season, but something must remain, and that is style.

The most important thing to keep in mind when defining your style is to be yourself. Your imagination and the possibilities you can dream up are limitless.

Four Olive offers fine dining, reasonable prices

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When looking for a good restaurant, several criteria that should be considered are food quality, atmosphere, location and price. So, armed with an empty stomach and a fat wallet, I made the short excursion to Four Olive Wine Bar on Saturday.

Four Olive is attempting to offer a fine dining experience and gourmet cuisine to the residents of Manhattan, and I believe they've succeeded.

The restaurant offers a rather large selection of wines that can be chosen from the large display case in the center of the dining area, and diners can select from a wide variety of cheeses to compliment the wines.

The food menu also offers a decent selection for carnivores and vegans alike. I had the pork tenderloin medallions, which were very savory and tender, over a bed of rice in a sweet cream sauce. My roommate ordered the vegetable kebobs. The Portobello mushrooms were fantastic.

The menu also offers a recommended wine to perfectly compliment each meal, so one doesn't need to be a connoisseur to choose the right wine.

Atmosphere can also make or break a restaurant. Diners don't want to be lit by Wal-Mart halogens, if you catch my drift.

Ordinarily, lime green doesn't make for a laid-back atmosphere, but the designer lampshades at Four Olive cast a soothing yellow-rose glow over the room. The colors actually complimented each other, and the effect was quite pleasing.

Proper music is also important in setting the right atmosphere, and this was my biggest complaint. The bulk of what came out of the speakers was recorded by the Rat Pack in the 40s and 50s, and it was too loud. It was rather cliché and annoying.

The wait staff was also very courteous and helpful, though I think they may have been more so had my roommate not been dressed like a vagrant.

Depending on what type of restaurant you're running, location is a key factor in operating a successful restaurant. No one wants to dine at a five-star restaurant situated in the middle of a slum.

Four Olive may have slipped a bit in this respect, at least aesthetically. In terms of money, they're in the right place on the west side of Manhattan, where most of the money in town is located. The only problem is that it's in the far corner of a strip mall, which takes its luster down a notch.

Four Olive isn't within walking distance for most college students, but if you offer to buy, like I did, I'm sure you can hitch a ride.

Price is perhaps the most important factor for most people. If you're like me, your choices are usually dictated by the numbers sitting next to each item on the menu.

The cheapest meals, which coincidentally are the vegetarian dishes, begin at $8 and increase exponentially, topping out at around $25. Even so, the food is good enough that you probably won't care (and dudes, if you're on a date, you don't have a choice anyway).

For the most part, the prices seem generally reasonable.

Bottom line is, folks, that despite my distaste for the bourgeoisie, this is a very nice restaurant. You get tasty meals, a pleasant atmosphere, a relatively decent location and prices that are decent for the cuisine you get.

DiCaprio receives award for "The Aviator"

On the heels of an Oscar nomination, "The Aviator" star Leonardo DiCaprio wrapped a high-flying week by accepting the Platinum Award from the Santa Barbara International Film Festival.

DiCaprio

The award, created to commemorate the festival's 20th anniversary, was given Sunday night in recognition of the actor's "exceptional career," festival director Roger Durling said.

DiCaprio's arrival elicited screams from hundreds of fans — a festival first, Durling said. Being greeted in such a way "is kind of like an out-of-body experience," DiCaprio, who plays Howard Hughes in the movie, told Associated Press Television News.

"It's a lifetime achievement award, which is completely and utterly surreal, given I'm only 30 years old," he continued, with a laugh. "But, you know, what has it been? Almost 17 years now. I've done quite a few films. But what's really exciting, for me, is that this is what I really love doing. It's what I want to do for the rest of my life."

Brokaw signs book deal

Tom Brokaw has signed a two-book deal with Random House, the publisher announced Monday, although what the former NBC anchor will actually write and when the books will come out remain unknown.

Brokaw

Random House publicist Tom Perry said that Brokaw, author of such best-sellers as "The Greatest Generation" and "The Greatest Generation Speaks," was considering "various projects," but declined to give further details. Financial terms, likely quite high, were not disclosed and no publication dates have been set either.

Reeves receives Star

Keanu Reeves, who traveled through time in "Bill & Ted's Excellent Adventure" and took on humanity's machine conquerors in "The Matrix" flicks, has received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Reeves, 40, was honored with the star Monday for a career that includes such films as the action thrillers "Speed" and "Point Break," the romances "Something's Gotta Give" and "A Walk in the Clouds" and the dramas "Little Buddha" and "My Own Private Idaho."

His star was placed along Hollywood Boulevard near the spot where some action scenes in "Speed" were filmed.

Reeves said he was proud "to be honored with stars from the past and present," and he acknowledged his mother, Patricia Reeves, who was at the ceremony.

Jury selection begins in Jackson case

Pop star faces charges of molesting teenage boy

By Linda Deutsch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dressed in a bright white suit and a jewel-trimmed vest and belt, Michael Jackson on Monday stood before the first group of prospective jurors who could decide his fate on charges that he molested a teenage cancer patient and plied the boy with alcohol at his Neverland Ranch.

The pop superstar, accompanied by four defense lawyers, stood and smiled as he faced prospective jurors in Santa Maria, Calif., for the start of jury selection in what could become the most sensational celebrity trial the world has ever seen.

He greeted the clerk with a handshake at the courthouse in this small coastal city in central California.

Outside, fans from around the world pressed up against a chain-link fence and shouted words of encouragement, holding up signs that read, "Dear God, Please Give Michael Justice" and "France Supports and Loves MJ."

Fans danced and sang a Jackson song attacking the district attorney and booed a woman who held a sign backing the accuser.

Santa Barbara County District Attorney Tom Sneddon, whom Jackson has derided in a song as a "cold man" with a vendetta, did not come to court. A deputy represented the prosecution.

Jackson, 46, is charged with molesting a teenage boy – then 13, now 15 – and plying him with alcohol.

On Sunday, Jackson issued a court-approved video statement on his Web site, predicting he would be acquitted. His parents also spoke out in his defense Monday, saying the young accuser was after his money.

"I know my son, and this is ridiculous," his mother, Katherine Jackson, said in an interview broadcast on CBS's "The Early Show." She said people who believe her son is guilty "don't know him."

Judge Rodney Melville told the first group of 150 prospective jurors that they might have to serve for about six months, but that it was an important duty.

"Most of us have relatives who have fought and died to protect this service," Melville said.

"Freedom is not free. Jury duty is part of the cost of freedom."

The first group was predominantly white. About a quarter appeared to be Hispanic. There were only three blacks.

Sixty-six members of the first group asked to be excused, but during questioning by the judge two changed their minds. A woman who said she was eight months pregnant was excused from the case.

Five hundred more prospective jurors were to be processed later Monday and on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Those not excused will fill out questionnaires and then will be questioned individually by the attorneys.

The judge wants 12 jurors and eight alternates.

Prospective jurors were addressed with nine-digit numbers in court.

One woman said she had to be home every night to care for her mother; the judge told her that she would be home every night.

"Don't they lock juries up, too?" the prospect asked, inquiring if the judge could guarantee she would get home.

"Oh yeah, I'm going home every night," said Melville, who intends to end each day of trial by 2:30 p.m.

One man said he couldn't serve because his employer wouldn't pay him while he was on jury duty.

"Your employer doesn't pay jury service?" asked Melville.

"He's an attorney, no sir," the man said.

Committee undecided on anti-meth legislation

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Work on anti-methamphetamine legislation stalled Monday because senators disagreed about how much the state should restrict consumer access to some common medicines to thwart the manufacture of the illegal drug.

The measure before the Senate Judiciary Committee would permit only pharmacies to sell tablets of cold, flu and allergy remedies containing ephedrine or pseudoephedrine, common meth ingredients.

Also, consumers would have to show photo identification and sign a log, and they could not buy more than 9 grams, typically three packages, within 30 days.

Some committee members objected to allowing only pharmacies to sell such medicines. Other committee members wanted to restrict sales of liquid and gel-cap medicines, too.

The bill is patterned after an Oklahoma law credited with reducing meth lab seizures there by 80 percent.

Law enforcement officials see choking off the supply of potential meth ingredients as the best way to combat manufacturing.

"The sooner we can get the Oklahoma approach in place, the sooner we can cut down on the problem and the safer Kansas law enforcement will be," KBI spokesman Kyle Smith said.

But the bill sparked concern among some drug wholesalers and retail chains, such as Walgreen Co., which argued some rural Kansans wouldn't have access to popular medicines if only pharmacies can sell them.

Sen. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, said her asthma requires her to purchase such medicines, sometimes at night, adding, "When we need it, we need it now.

"Pharmacies aren't open 24 hours a day unless you live in a heavily populated area."

Edward Whitacre, chairman and CEO of SBC Communications, announced the acquisition of At&T Corp. for $16 million Monday, creating one of the nation's largest communications companies.

SBC Communications to acquire AT&T

By Jay Jorden
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SBC Communications Inc. has agreed to buy former parent AT&T Corp. for $16 billion, creating one of the nation's largest communications companies and ending the independent run of a firm whose roots stretch back to the telephone's invention.

The decision followed late-night meetings by directors of SBC, the nation's second-biggest regional phone company, and the 120-year-old icon AT&T, which gave birth to SBC when its monopoly was broken up in 1984.

SBC spokesman Larry Solomon said documents in the acquisition were signed early Monday after AT&T's board of directors approved the deal. Board members of SBC approved the transaction on Sunday evening.

The acquisition is subject to approvals by shareholders, two federal agencies and at least 26 states, a cumbersome process which prompted the companies to project the deal's completion may take 17 months, an unusually long wait.

San Antonio-based SBC has about 50 million local telephone customers, mostly in the Midwest and South. It also is a 60 percent owner of Cingular Wireless, which serves more than 46 million wireless customers.

AT&T handled the nation's telephone calls before it was broken apart 21 years ago. The Bedminster, N.J.-based company has 24 million long-distance customers.

In their latest earnings reports for 2004, SBC reported $40.8 billion in revenue while AT&T reported $30.5 billion. The combined revenue total of $71.3 billion would slightly surpass the $71.28 billion reported for 2004 by Verizon Communications Inc., the nation's biggest phone company.

"Today's agreement is a huge step forward in our efforts to build a company that will lead an American communications revolution in the 21st century," Edward E. Whitacre Jr., SBC chairman and chief executive, said in a statement.

The companies would not say how many jobs they expect will be cut as a result of the merger, but Rick Lindner, SBC's chief financial officer, said he envisions $400 million to $500 million in cost savings by 2009 by consolidating multiple operations from the two businesses.

Shareholders of AT&T, under terms of the agreement, will receive total consideration currently valued at $19.71 per share, or about $16 billion. From SBC, AT&T shareholders will receive 0.77942 shares of the Texas company's common stock for each AT&T common share, in an exchange ratio equaling $18.41 per share based on SBC's closing stock price on Friday. That amounts to about $15 billion in stock, Solomon said.

Additionally, AT&T will pay its shareholders a special dividend of $1.30 per share at the time of closing, totaling about $1 billion. The stock consideration in the transaction was expected to be tax-free to AT&T shareholders.

regulations before the Riley County Planning Board first and then it will go before the County Commission Board.

Although no official requests have been submitted, some people have been looking into wind energy options. Riley County resident Skip Pickering was contacted by a California wind energy company named Orion Energy.

He said the company was interested in wind energy in the area and put up meteorology towers in southeast Riley County to measure the amount of wind resources. Pickering said the Flint Hills were an ideal location for wind turbines because of the wind flow and accessibility to power lines.

"Initially I wasn't really in favor of the idea," Pickering said, "but after researching the idea I believe it's a sensible, clean energy source that pays the landowner. If wind turbines come into Riley County, I have a good chance of having some turbines located on my place."

Ryan Buckley, from Orion Energy Company, said wind power is a source of energy that offers both environmental and financial benefits.

"Natural gas and coal produce a variety of harmful emissions such as carbon that contribute to global warming," he said. "Sooner or later a price will be put on the emission of carbon in some form of a carbon tax causing the cost of electricity to increase."

Buckley said because wind is free, the electricity price from a wind farm is stable.

He said profits depend on wind productivity in different areas, but can range from $2,000 to $5,000 dollars per turbine.

However, he also said the wind power isn't always reliable.

"It can't be a base load source of power," he said. "It will operate when the wind blows, but you can't turn it on and off at will. That's why the location of the wind farms is extremely important."

Jan Garton, Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society treasurer, agrees that the location is important, but for different reasons. She said that while the Riley County location may be ideal for wind flow, wind turbines may be harmful to the Flint Hills prairie life.

"Riley County is one of the last remaining tall grass prairies in the U.S. There are many species that depend on the prairie, and they cannot move somewhere else," she said. "It's critical that we protect as much of the tall grass prairie as we can."

Pickering said that the turbines don't take up as much land as some people think. He said if the turbines were located on his land he would still be able to use the same land for farming.

According to the Orion Energy Web site, typically less than 5 percent of total land area is used by a wind project's equipment and support structures, including the wind turbines, electrical lines, maintenance roads and related infrastructure.

While the wind turbines may not occupy a large amount of land, some believe the property value will decrease.

"I believe the wind farms are 40-story industrial complexes that dominate the skyline and fear that the towers could drive down the value of neighboring lands," Kearns said.

Pickering said people opposing wind farms want to keep the Flint Hills for agri-tourism scenery and recreation, but there is a more important underlying issue.

"We farmers aren't out here for the sake of tourists, we are out here for the sake of agriculture," he said. "It boils down to the fact that we are harvesting wind energy, not entertaining tourists."

Rylan Ortiz, junior in electrical engineering and president of Students for Environmental Action, said wind energy has both advantages and disadvantages.

"It's great to see Kansas being proactive and trying to put out alternate sources of energy, but I hope it doesn't harm the environment," Ortiz said.

Despite environmental factors, some still believe that the pros of wind energy outweigh the cons.

"We can't continue to rely on energy from other sources in the world because that's how the United States got in the mess we are currently in," County Commissioner Bob Newsome said. "When it's all said and done, we are going to have to rely on all types of energy. Wind is a consistent energy source without pollution."

Regardless of differing opinions, Riley County will be economically affected by the construction of windfarms. Newsome said jobs could be created for construction, local materials could be purchased, and landowners could receive revenue.

HEALTH | Campus health center offers lower-cost prescription drugs

"We have significantly expanded the number of insurance companies we accept over the past year to benefit students more," he said.

Iowa State also encourages students to take advantage of the on-campus pharmacy to save money, said Diane Smith, administrative assistant at Thielen Health Center.

"We have cheaper prescriptions than other places in town because we are supported by the health fee," she said.

Flu shots are another important aspect of students' health this time of year.

At the University of Oklahoma, flu shots are currently being provided to students, faculty, staff and dependents above the age of four.

However, the supply is limited and the vaccinations will be given until they run out.

Accessibility of the center itself is also an important to students.

Zweimiller said students are accessing the Sunset Avenue location with ease and are enjoying its perks.

"In the new location we are able to configure the space better to accommodate the students. The building is all on one floor allowing us to be more efficient in assisting students.

"Also there is much more parking available," he said.

ENERGY | Sebelius proposes to set aside conservation areas in Flint Hills

Allison said the state energy council is compiling the policies of these different counties along with other wind energy information to put into a handbook for Kansas counties. The goal is to help local governments make the best decisions possible.

"We are especially trying to assist different counties in the Flint Hills area by providing tools, resources and assessments to help them make informed decisions on the placement of wind farms," Allison said.

Sebelius is also trying to provide financial assistance. Allison said she proposed to set aside $800,000 to purchase conservation easements in areas in the Flint Hills.

Under a conservation agreement, a landowner would voluntarily sell the development rights of the property. An individual environmental organization or nature conservancy group would own the land and there would be no wind turbines developed there.

"A conservation easement is designed to preserve the ranching culture," Allison said. "We think it's a perfect program for what we are trying to do."

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said she agreed with Sebelius' proposals.

"I'm really happy with the governor's policy because the people should have a right to use the land as they choose, but restraint is needed in certain areas," Carlin said.

"The easements provide land owners with an alternative opportunity."

PROGRAM | Studying abroad gives students competitive edge

of K-State students study abroad. This means that to go abroad and gives a 97 percent advantage over others, which helps when its time to go to graduate school or get a job.

About 500 K-State students traveled abroad in the 2003–2004 school year.

Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance, said K-State students with financial aid may apply it to wherever they travel. It will cover the costs of additional tuition, travel, room and board, and extra fees.

Those without financial aid will pay in-state tuition.

Students should expect to pay variable amounts for airfare and personal spending money.

Chambers said programs at K-State are some of the best in the nation.

We'll allow students to go anywhere, and we have a substantial amount of exchanges that are less expensive," Chambers said.

HILL | K-State senior prepares for 2008 Olympic trials, games in Beijing

After Hill graduates from K-State with a degree in criminology, she said her desire is to remain in Manhattan and continue her training under Rovelto. Her long-term focus is to make the 2008 U.S. Olympic team.

At the 2004 U.S. Track and Field Trials last July, Hill finished fifth in the finals with a jump of 44-2 1/2. Only two U.S. women triple jumpers qualified for the 2004 Olympics.

"(Competing for an Olympic spot) was nerve-racking at times, but once I settled down and relaxed, it was pretty exciting," Hill said of her experience.

Byrd and Rovelto said they believe Hill will be able to compete in the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing, China.

"Absolutely – as long as she makes the commitment to pursuing that goal, she'll do it," Rovelto said. "I think it is within her to jump over 47 feet."

Byrd said her daughter's work ethic and determination will carry her to the Olympics.

"She'll be (at the Olympics) in 2008," Byrd said. "You can bet your bottom dollar on that."

Byrd said she is proud of Hill's athletic achievements, as well as her daughter's positive influence on the rest of the family.

"I'm so proud of my daughter," Byrd said. "If any young ladies need a role model, Chaytan is that person to pattern yourself after. If I had my choice of daughters, I couldn't have had a better one."

Rovelto said he wishes Hill all the best for her future, and her leadership and contribution to the program will be missed.

"I think she is a tremendous kid, and I love her to death." Rovelto said. "I just want her to be the best she's capable of being. She will be extremely hard to replace."

Social Security focus of State of the Union

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush will outline ideas about strengthening Social Security but will not spell out all the details of a plan to fix the system's financial problems when he delivers his State of the Union address tonight.

Bush's strategy to offer a partial outline rather than detailed remedy reflects a split between the two houses of Congress about the president's role in the politically-sensitive debate.

Bush
PRESIDENT

In the House, where every seat is up for election every two years, Republican leaders want the president to present a specific plan and work to sell it to the country before pressing Congress to vote. But key Senate leaders prefer that Bush work behind the scenes with Congress to develop a bipartisan consensus.

"It's time to shine a very clear light on the problems facing Social Security and then to talk about ways we can work together to strengthen it," White House press secretary Scott McClellan said Tuesday.

Social Security will be Bush's top domestic priority when he goes before Congress and a nationally televised audience at 9 p.m. EST tonight. He will devote the first half of his 40 minute speech to domestic matters and the second half to international issues.

On the international front, he will urge North Korea to return to six-nation talks about dismantling its suspected nuclear weapons program, the White House said. He will express support for European efforts to persuade Iran to abandon its nuclear program. Bush also will point to elections in Iraq and the Palestinian territories as hopeful signs for the spread of democracy around the world.

Social Security restructuring has been on Bush's agenda since before he entered the White House.

In 2000, he campaigned on the idea of letting younger workers divert some of their Social Security payroll taxes into private investment accounts, a move that might offer higher returns but also would deplete money for guaranteed benefits in the future.

Perfect weather needed for record flight

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Perfect weather is needed to fly around the world without refueling – at least in order to set a world record that is.

The Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer is making the first attempt to set the record, and K-State students are involved in this attempt.

The Flyer will be taking off from Salina, so K-State-Salina students are a major part of the preparation.

Four students were selected to work with mission control.

Seth Short, Monica Chester and Patrick Rinearson, seniors in airway science, and Nancy Milleret, junior in airway science, spend four to five hours a day checking weather conditions around the world.

Take-off dates change for the Flyer several times before it is set, and although it is set for Feb. 8 right now, it's still uncertain.

"It'll be certain the day before," Short said.

He said the weather being perfect doesn't just mean the sun is shining. The air needs to be cold and dense. It has to be have a good jet stream, but not too strong, and there has to be good tailwind.

"We check the weather daily to get an idea of what's going to happen," Short said.

Rinearson said all they can do is try to predict the weather, which is why it isn't certain. The forecast is made by people in London.

"It's more of a crystal ball aspect," he said.

The four students are working directly with Steve Fossett, the pilot. Fossett is a world-record holder in other areas including hot air balloons and boats.

"He wants our professional opinion," Short said. "I don't think it's dawned on us we're working with Steve Fossett."

Fossett calls them at home to get ask advice and get their opinion, the students said.

"It's pretty cool that he trusts us," Chester said.

The work they do is on a computer program called Jeppesen FlightStar, which is different than what they work with on campus, Short said.

"Typically we do it all by hand, which would be feasibly impossible for this," he said.

Milleret said students aren't taught how to set a world record in class, but skills that she has learned from the college have helped.

"You don't really prepare for something like this, but you get into this and realized you have prepared," she said.

The length of flight is also new for the K-State-Salina students, they said. Normally, the flights the students plan don't go outside of Kansas.

Start your engines

K-State students build car from ground up

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They started from scratch.

It all began with the chassis. Next was the engine, the drive train and the controls. Finally, the body was added and the car was complete.

No, it's not an automotive assembly line.

The K-State Formula SAE team designed a car and built it from the ground up. Development of the car began in fall 2003. It is the first car the team has built from scratch.

Each year, the team works on a car to take to the annual Formula car competition that is held in May in Detroit, Mich. About 140 teams from around the world compete in the competition.

Tom Pollock, team leader, said the team will display the car as if they are showing it to an automotive company.

"The basic premise of the competition is designing a prototype car to present to a hypothetical company," he said.

Half of the competition is based on how the car performs in a race and the other half is based on the car's design, Pollock said.

Pollock said each team is required to follow certain guidelines when building their car.

The air tank is restricted to 20 millimeters and the maximum engine size is 610 cubic centimeters or about .6 liters, Pollock said.

"That's about the size of a motorcycle engine," he said.

Teams are also required to have six different drivers.

"They do that so there is no hired gun that just drives the car," Pollock said. "We choose the drivers based on how much work they did on the car."

Pollock said the car is funded by a combination of team contribution and sponsorships.

"The team spends about $3,000 of its money to build the car," he said. "In addition, we receive about $5,000 in money and parts from our sponsors."

To come up with the money, the team does fund raisers, including working the concession stands at Chiefs and Royals games. Team members have also cleaned Bramlage Coliseum after basketball games.

Sponsors are contacted by a letter from Pollock explaining what the team is and its need for contributions.

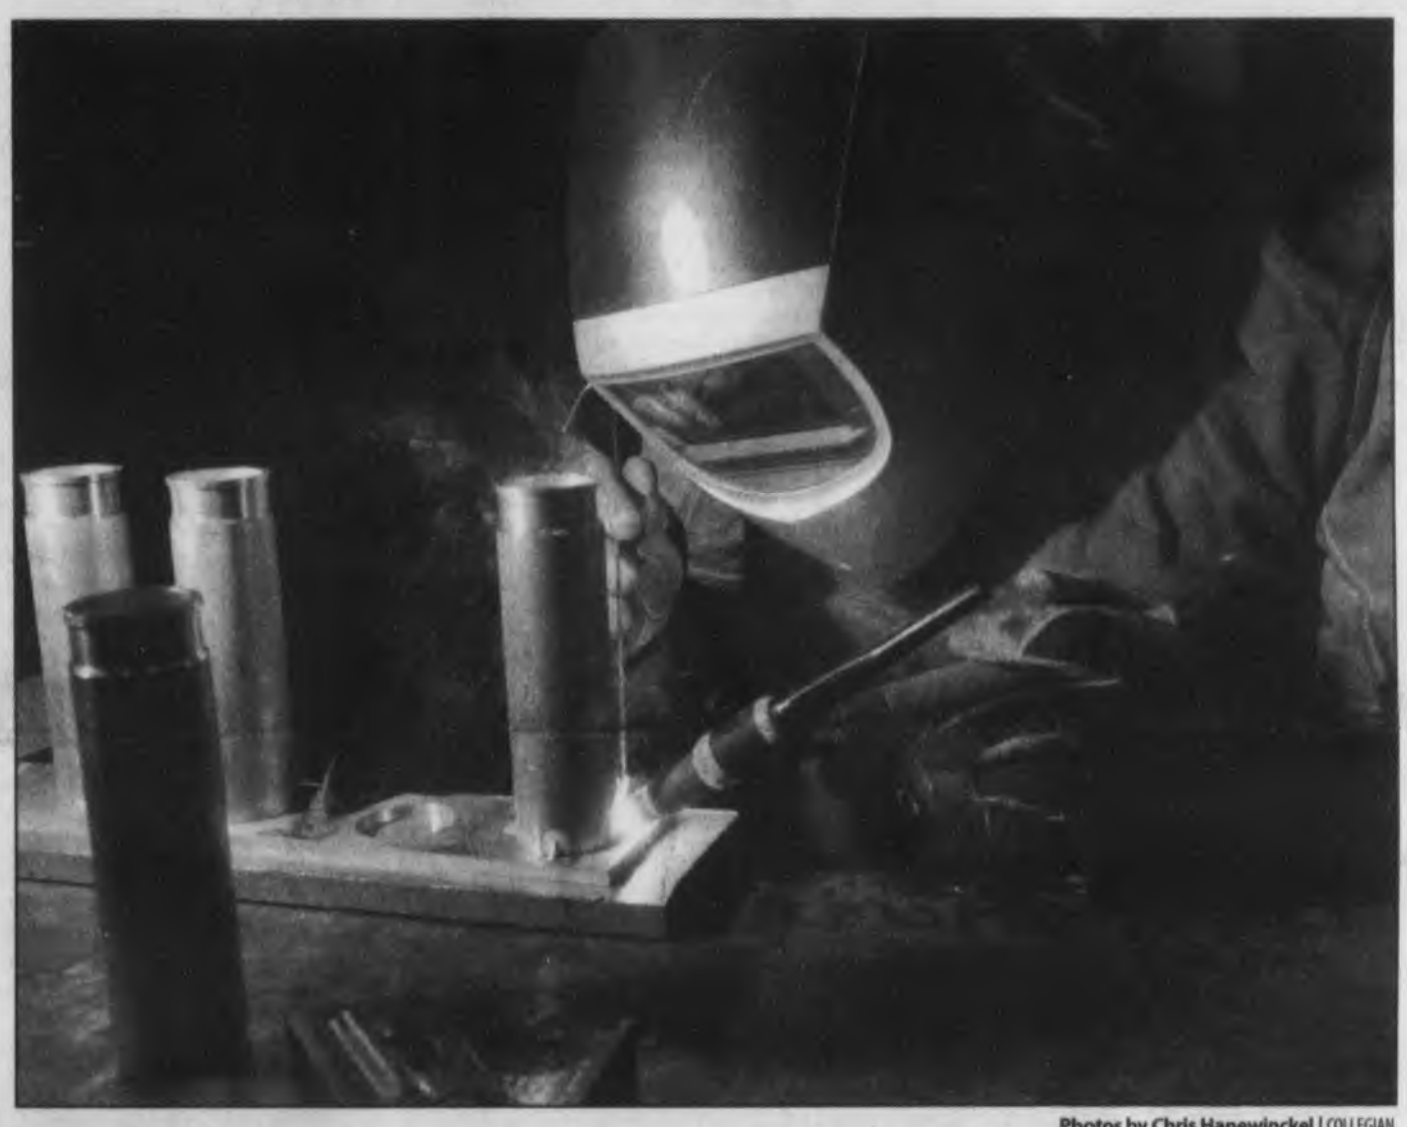
A detailed cost report is completed every year for the competition. Pollock said the car's actual retail price is about $24,000.

The team receives the funding to travel to competition from the university. Pollock said the College of Engineering gives around $1,200, the Department of Mechanical Engineering donates approximately $1,200 and the Student Governing Association gives around $1,000.

Almost completely student funded and organized, the K-State Formula SAE team is also completely extracurricular. Pollock said students are on the team because they want to be.

The University of Kansas includes the Formula car as a Senior Design Project, so students may work on it in class, Pollock said. Class is one of the biggest difficulties the K-State team faces, he said.

"That's the most frustrating part, having to balance school with the project," he said.



Team members usually spend an average of about 15 hours a week working on the Formula car. Pollock said it also puts a strain on relationships.

"We have very understanding wives and girlfriends who can stand us being gone all the time," he said.

Bethany Taylor's husband, Keith Taylor, was the team leader last year. She said he spent a lot of time working on the car, and it was difficult because they were newlyweds.

However, Taylor said she supported her husband's dedication.

Condoms fall short of expectations

EVANSTON, Ill. – Condom users can choose from a variety of models with spiraling "seashell" tips, numbing agents to delay orgasm, warming lubricants and other special features, but according to a recent study, some condoms are safer than others.

Durex Extra Sensitive Lubricated Latex is the strongest and most reliable brand, according to a Consumers Union report.

The New York-based organization tested 23 kinds of latex condoms and two types made of polyurethane, using an air-inflation machine to assess predicted real-life performance.

The seven highest-rated models could withstand at least 25 liters of air inflation before bursting, which is above the minimum industry standard.

These included Durex Performax Lubricated, Lifestyles Classic Collection, Ultra Sensitive Lubricated and TheyFit Lubricated.

The scented honeydew and assorted color varieties of Planned Parenthood condoms were rated the poorest.

The Consumers Union found that most condoms met standards for length and thickness, but some samples of Durex Extra Sensitive, Durex Performax, larger-size versions of TheyFit and Trojan Magnum slightly exceeded the maximum recommended width.

The report suggests only larger-sized men should use these models.

SITTING PRETTY

SAN MARCOS, Texas – It was an average morning for Mark Hendricks, assistant director of media relations, except for the unexpected guest waiting outside his office. Perched on the ledge beside his eighth floor window at J.C. Kellam Administration Building was one of the building's many new residents – a black vulture.

"There was only one, and he was kind of peering in at me," Hendricks said.

Hendricks needed only to tap on the window to send the bird away, but he said the sight of one so close was unusual.

"I find them to be kind of a curiosity," Hendricks said. "I've never seen this many around here before."

And he isn't alone. Nancy Nusbaum, vice president for finance and support services, said she has been at Texas State University-San Marcos since 1973 and has never seen so many vultures around the building before.

They perch outside her ninth floor office at JCK and occasionally peck at the window.

She said it might be "because I have a lot of little trinkets that are brightly colored, and I'm thinking they might see those."

"What's even more interesting is when they decide they want to sunbathe, and they're facing into the building with their wings all spread out," Nusbaum said. "I get amused whenever I see that."

The influx of dozens of vultures swooping near and over campus may be the result of migratory patterns, said Randy Simpson, assistant biology professor who has an extensive background in wildlife management.

"They aren't unusual this time of year," he said. "In fact, Hinckley, Ohio, has a festival for when vultures return in the spring."

The group of vultures perching at JCK consists of a mix of both black vulture and turkey vulture species.

Their primary roosts include the San Marcos utility tower behind the tennis courts, the trees surrounding Aquarena Springs and by Joe's Crab Shack, said Facilities Management Supervisor Joe Ellis.

Thousands unable to vote

By Sally Buzbee
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq's interim president said Tuesday that tens of thousands of people may have been unable to vote in the country's historic weekend election because some polling places – including those in Sunni Arab areas – ran out of ballots.

As clerks pounded vote-count tallies into computers to compile final results, President Ghazi al-Yawer also said chaos and a power vacuum in Iraq mean U.S. forces need to stay for now, even though a new government will be formed after the results are known.

If true, the allegation that many voters were turned away could further alienate minority Sunnis, who already are complaining they have been left out of the political process.

"Tens of thousands were unable to cast their votes because of the lack of ballots in Basra, Baghdad and Najaf," al-Yawer, himself a Sunni Arab, said at a news conference. Najaf is a mostly Shiite city but Basra and Baghdad have substantial Sunni populations.

Elections officials acknowledged that irregularities kept people away – including in the volatile northern and heavily Sunni city of Mosul – and they called the fact unfortunate. Security worries in Sunni areas were partly to blame for the fact that some polls did not open and ballots were too few, they said.

"Tens of thousands were unable to cast their ballots because of the lack of ballots in Basra, Baghdad and Najaf."

Ghazi al-Yawer
IRAQ PRESIDENT

"The elections took place under difficult conditions and this undoubtedly deprived a number of citizens in a number of areas from voting," said Abdul-Hussein al-Hindawi, who heads the Iraqi electoral commission.

At his news conference, al-Yawer was asked whether the presence of foreign troops might be fueling the country's Sunni-led insurgency by encouraging rebel attacks.

"It's only complete nonsense to ask the troops to leave in this chaos and this vacuum of power," al-Yawer said.

He said foreign troops should leave altogether only after Iraq's security forces are built up, the country's security situation has improved and some pockets of terrorists are eliminated.

"At the end of this year, we will witness the beginning of the decrease of forces and not their withdrawal," al-Yawer said. The president has been a strong critic of some aspects of the U.S. military's performance in Iraq, including the three-week Marine siege of the former Sunni rebel stronghold of Fallujah in April.

Sunday's election, which occurred without catastrophic rebel attacks, raised hopes that a new Iraqi government would be able to assume greater responsibility for security, hastening the day when the 170,000 U.S. and other foreign troops can go home.

The first visible reduction could come as soon as March, when thousands of U.S. troops whose tours were extended prior to the election are due to go home. If commanders allow the full rotation out and others are not brought in, it would shrink the overall force to about 138,000.

But the timing of cutbacks beyond that is highly uncertain. Administration officials are determined to avoid setting a specific timetable.

City Commission limits sales tax

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A city sales tax that would fund local schools was limited by city officials.

The Manhattan City Commission amended the USD 383 Manhattan-Ogden Board of Education's 0.25 percent sales tax ballot initiative by applying a $5.4 million limit to the tax revenue at its meeting Tuesday.

Dr. Robert Seymour, USD 383 associate superintendent, said the requested revenue of the tax would help improve education.

"If this tax was implemented, it would help promote and maintain quality education within the school district," he said. "With the incoming of Fort Riley students in the upcoming years, we will need additional funding especially if we have to hire more staff."

The school board initially requested the tax at the Commission meeting in December. It voted to establish a joint committee with the school board to determine how the tax funds were going to be generated and distributed.

The committee developed an ordinance that needed approval from both the school board and Commission to be placed on the April 5 ballot. The ordinance called for a 0.25 percent sales tax that would begin Oct. 1 and end Sept. 30, 2008, unless terminated early by a written agreement between both parties.

"I think the proposal is wise and will allow the school board the next couple of years to re-evaluate their budget and decide what cuts will have to be made," said Commissioner Bruce Snead.

Mark Taussig, commissioner, disagreed with Snead and with the ordinance. He said Manhattan schools received the highest funding compared to other school districts of similar size, and he said he was hesitant to accept the ordinance because the Commission does not have the full authority to terminate the tax.

"We might receive state funding, and I don't want to jump the gun by implementing a task that would put a strain on the community member's budget," he said. "The City Commission may want to terminate it, but it also requires the school board's consent, and I don't feel comfortable with that."

Ed Klimek, commissioner, said additional funding would help with much needed building maintenance, but a limit should be placed on total tax revenue.

"I don't think buildings make an education, but using the money to improve the atmosphere would certainly influence education," he said. "However, I believe it would be beneficial to place a cap on the tax."

Klimek moved to amend the motion, to include a $5.4 million tax limit and the termination of the tax at the Commission's discretion once that limit was reached. The amendment passed, and the motion was passed with a 4-1 vote.

The amended proposal will be presented to the school board at its meeting tonight.

If passed by both governing boards, it will proceed to the attorney general before appearing on the April 5 ballot for a public vote.

House approves gay marriage ban

Kansans will vote on constitutional marriage amendment April 5

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A proposal to place a ban on same-sex marriage and civil unions for gay couples in the Kansas Constitution received first-round approval Tuesday in the House, setting up another vote that would put the measure before voters on April 5.

The final House vote is scheduled for Wednesday. The measure would amend the state constitution to declare that only traditionally married couples are entitled to benefits associated with marriage.

The vote Tuesday to advance the measure was 89-28.

On Wednesday, supporters need a two-thirds majority, or 83 of 124 votes, for final adoption. The number needed normally is 84, but the 125th House seat is vacant following the death of Rep. Carol Beggs, R-Salina.

Senators adopted the proposal Jan. 13. Approval by a simple majority of voters statewide would add the ban to the state constitution.

Supporters argued during debate Tuesday the proposed amendment would protect the state's traditional definition of marriage from legal challenges.

"The government needs to support traditional families," Rep. Forrest Knox, R-Fredonia, said. "I view this as a common sense point of view."

Opponents argued the amendment was discriminatory and that history would judge lawmakers unfavorably for adopting it.

"Kansas has a great heritage of freedom and independent action," Rep. Geraldine Flaharty, D-Wichita, said. "I cannot shame that heritage."

House members voted 83-41 against narrowing the amendment so that it would only restate the traditional definition of marriage but not preclude civil unions.

Officials say death benefit too narrow

By Liz Sidoti
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Lawmakers and military officials said Tuesday that President Bush's proposal to boost government payments to families of U.S. troops killed in Iraq, Afghanistan and other war zones was a good start but too narrow.

Republicans suggested that those who die while training for combat missions also should be eligible for the increased death benefits.

Democrats argued that the benefits should extend to all military personnel who die while on active duty.

Uniformed officials with the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force told the Senate Armed Forces Committee, during a hearing on the proposal, that the Defense Department should not give an extra $250,000 in benefits to surviving spouses and children based simply on the geography of where a death occurs.

"They can't make a distinction. I don't think we should either," said Adm. John B. Nathman, vice chief of naval operations for the Navy.

Added Gen. T. Michael Moseley, the Air Force's vice chief of staff: "I believe a death is a death and I believe this should be treated that way."

Under the Pentagon proposal, a tax-free "death gratuity," now $12,420, would grow to $100,000 only in cases where the service member died in a war zone as designated by the secretary of defense.

The Pentagon also would substantially increase life insurance benefits.

The $250,000 coverage offered to all service members at a subsidized rate under the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance program would be raised to $400,000, and for troops in a combat zone the government would pay the premiums on the extra $150,000 coverage.

The increases would be retroactive to Oct. 7, 2001, the date the United States launched its invasion of Afghanistan in response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

The families of the more than 1,500 troops who have died in Iraq and Afghanistan since then would be eligible.

"We think the nation ought to make a larger one-time payment, quite apart from insurance, should you be killed in a combat area of operations," David Chu, the undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, told The Associated Press.

TO THE POINT

Gay marriage amendment not necessary

The Kansas Legislature has now passed the gay marriage amendment – legislation that was repetitive and a waste of legislators' time.

A state law already bans same-sex marriage. A constitutional amendment is too permanent.

Laws can be reversed and amended as society and Kansans' perspectives change. However, changes to the state's constitution requires much more time and tax dollars.

Society will most likely change. We outgrow our prejudices and moral convictions. Tragedies, news commentary, materialism and globalism change our perception of fairness and individual rights. If we never adapted as a society, slavery would still be in place, women would be denied the right to vote and alcohol would still be prohibited.

In 10 years, gay marriage might be something that doesn't even warrant a second look. If and when it becomes socially acceptable to marry people of the same gender, the law will have to be changed.

If an amendment is in place, legislators will have to once again take time away from education funding and budget planning to address moral issues.

A state law is enough. Amendments should ensure rights, not take them away.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Preaching in public

Creationism has no place in schools

DAVID LIANG

In fall 1999, the Kansas Board of Education raised a few eyebrows when it announced that it intended to "de-emphasize" the teaching of evolution in public schools.

This course of action understandably drew world-wide attention (read: ridicule). It seemed in a world where everyone was racing ahead, only the Afghans, Kansans and New Guinea tribesmen were at a standstill.

The board decision was ultimately reversed in 2001, but the message is clear: the creationism movement, disguised under the chic new name "intelligent design," has been gaining momentum. In some places like in Kansas, it has even achieved a high degree of legitimacy.

Its supporters' objectives have always been the same: to pass off intelligent design as valid science, while simultaneously preventing evolution from being taught in schools. The cases they present don't really make a whole lot of sense. But of course, no creationist has ever allowed logic to interfere with his reasoning.

Their first argument against evolution is that it's "just a theory." Theories are ideas that have not been proven and therefore should not be taught.

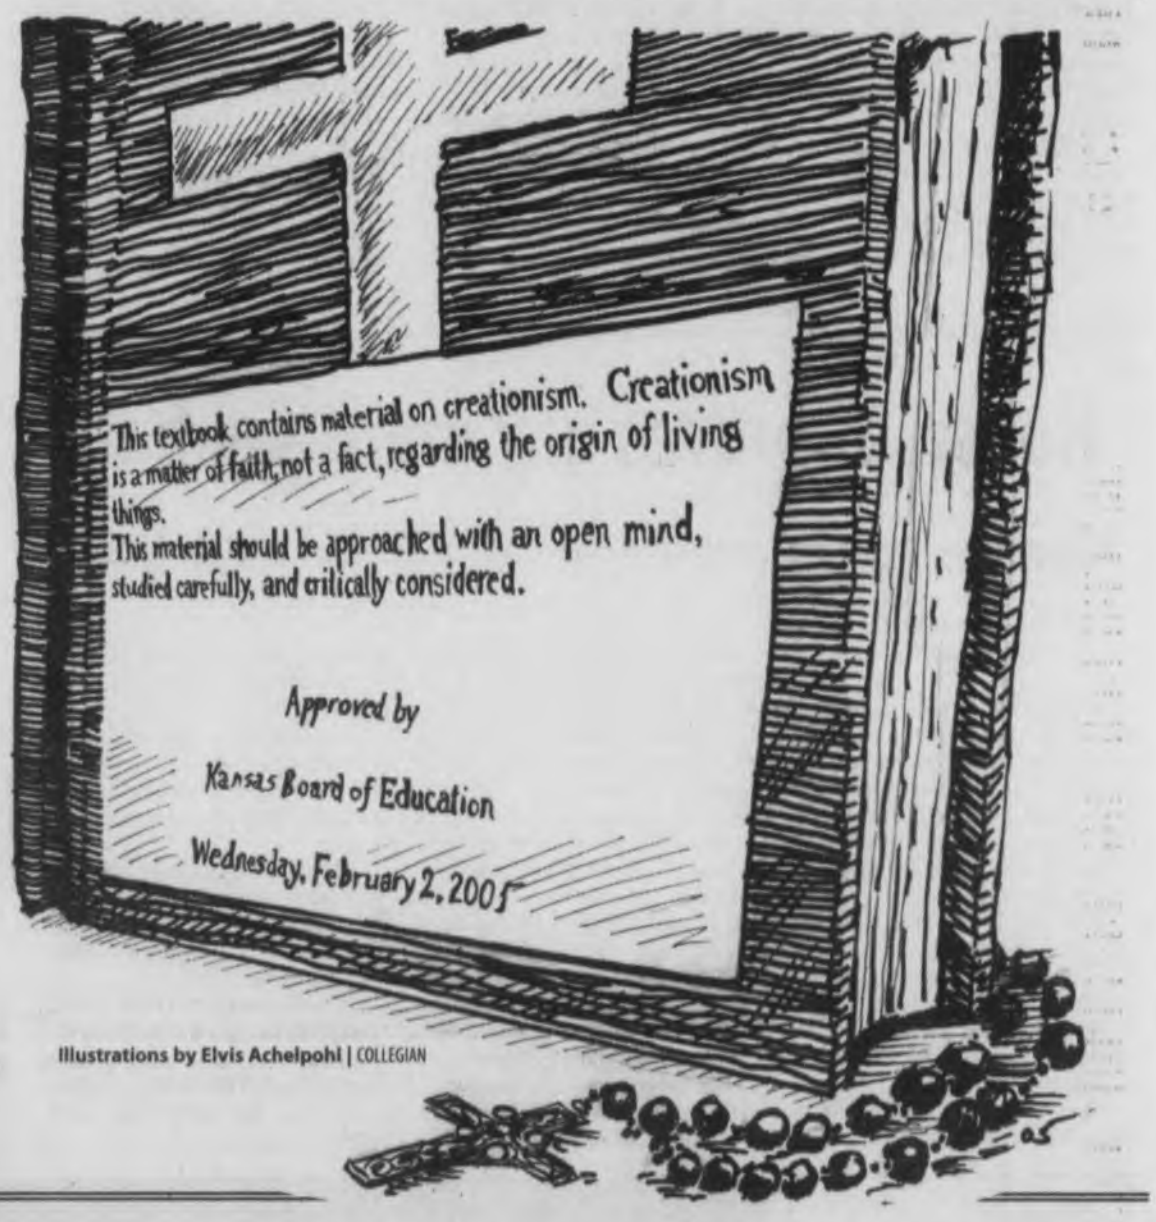
This preposterous assertion stems from a misunderstanding of scientific terminology. In the world of science, a "theory" is a proven hypothesis that has gathered enough evidence, experimental or otherwise, to support itself beyond the shadow of doubt. When scientists call something a theory, they're not actually expressing reservations about its validity.

The theory of evolution is no different. Ever since Charles Darwin published "The Origin of Species" in 1859, biologists and biochemists have only uncovered more evidence–sophisticated proof–of common ancestry between animal species.

But then there's talk of scientists deviously conspiring to keep evolution afloat at all costs. That's just not how science works. You see, in the scientific world a person never gets anywhere by repeatedly proving someone else's theories. Quite the contrary, a scientist instantly makes it big when he or she manages to convincingly disprove a well-established theory.

The point is that if someone could overthrow evolution he would have done so already. Not only would the person win a Nobel Prize for the most sensational discovery of the century, the repercussions of such a find would be so great that it would put all of us in the Biochemistry building, Burt and Ackert Halls out of work. Yet after 146 years of scrutiny, the best the opposition has come up with is a dismal collection of pseudo-scientific mendacities.

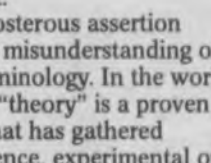
The second complaint creationists have is that teaching evolution in schools alone is "undemocratic." In all fairness, shouldn't alternate theories of origins be taught and the students can decide for themselves which one is right?



Going by this logic, should we decide to teach if the earth is flat or spherical by a consensus?

As unpleasant as this may sound, education has never been a democratic process and I would argue that, to a certain degree, it should not be. Schools are institutions for learning the best currently available knowledge; they are not supermarkets in which students can shop around and pick whichever ideas with which they feel most comfortable.

Despite its name, "creation science" really is an oxymoron. It is a dogma whose adherents are not interested in objectivity, but only data that support it (even if it's skewed). By definition, this is not science and has no place in the classroom.



Leave creationism where it belongs – at home and in churches. Nobody expects a pastor to devote equal time to evolution and the big bang when he preaches the earth's creation in seven days. Frankly, I'd rather leave it that way.

Tax dollars being spent on government mistakes

JULIA STOSKOPF

Last March, the Center for Disease Control and Prevention told the United States that it is fat.

More importantly, the government told the United States that obesity is fast catching tobacco as the leading cause of death, with an increase of over 100,000 people in the last decade.

Guess what?

The CDC was off by more than 35,000 people, according to according to CNN on Jan. 18.

The explanation should seem simple in this information age – as reported by CNN, Dr. Donna Stroup, acting director of the CDC's Coordinating Center for Health Promotions, claims the error was completely software related.

According to the Jan. 24 Modern Healthcare, the error reveals that the number of Americans dying from obesity is not increasing as quickly as we all believed.

Furthermore, the Jan. 19 Los Angeles Times reports that because of this drastic discovery, scientists and critics alike are now claiming the study may have "even deeper methodological flaws that further exaggerate obesity's death toll."

So what? Americans are not as fat as we once thought. Great!

In an age in which serious mistakes by corporations and governments are exposed every day, why should we care about an error that puts the United States back in the black?

Obesity research is an issue that should not be ignored or undermined, but, as with every other mistake, we must ensure that the error is corrected, that the truth is brought to light and that preventive procedures are put in place.

According to Modern Healthcare, a CDC spokesperson excused the error, saying that because research on obesity death rates is relatively new there are "kinks to work out."

Kinks do not excuse lack of accuracy. Kinks cause severe problems, so we should all ensure that kinks do not appear in the CDC's next glance at the scale.

Each of us is affected by this inaccuracy. In 2004, the National Institute of Health's budget for obesity-related research was over $400 million. Research is vital to progress in any area of medicine, but how much of that budget had to be redirected to analyze and correct the CDC's error?

Face it: our money is being spent not only on research, but also on correcting government errors. We should make sure that the government is accurate the first time around and, if that is not possible, that it does not make errors in the future.

Is it such a hindrance to ask government agencies to be accurate in their research? This error was not the first, and it will certainly not be the last, but our money and time should not be wasted on corrections when they could be spent on valuable research.

According to the Los Angeles Times, the report of the CDC internal investigation into this matter has not even been made public. That should be the first step, ensuring that we know what exactly went on in this matter. A more complete answer than a software glitch would be welcome.

For us, our action is relatively simple. In an information age where point-and-click rules the day, hop onto the computer and send a little e-mail the government's way.

If your Internet is too slow or this method isn't for you, like I say every week, just talk about it. As simple as this advice is, talking about issues concerning government policy or society really is the best way for the most people to listen and to act.

Maybe the "Freshman 15" isn't as deadly as we once thought, but now that the CDC has reevaluated their numbers, we need to reevaluate the situation too. It's time for the CDC to step on the scales instead of us.

What does it mean when a girl says, "Call me sometime," and you call her and she never calls back?

To the guy on campus wearing the Superman hat and sweatshirt: now all you need is a cape, a body suit and to stay away from kryptonite.

If I was a squirrel and knew that I was about to be hit by a car, I'd throw myself in front of someone from Johnson County so I'd get hit by a BMW or a Mercedes.

Real world classes

Classes enhance students' dining experiences

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wine tasting and Lucille Ball have found a new home at K-State.

Many students get bored with the usual biology, writing, algebra and economics classes. The idea of dragging themselves out of bed to dissect a frog may not thrill them, but the idea of dissecting the flavor of a fine white wine might actually motivate students to show up to class early.

Students looking to enhance their dining experience can take "Intro To Wines," offered by Elizabeth Barrett.

"Intro To Wines" is a general education class that helps students appreciate the subtleties of wine. This class teaches students to know what kinds of wine to order and drink with certain types of foods. It also instructs students on the proper ways to serve wine.

Some may question the real-world benefits of a class like this.

Barrett, associate professor in human ecology, said that a lot of public relations students take the class for the same reason. Some architectural students, whose interests in wine were piqued after they traveled to Italy, took Barrett's class to learn more.

This is the fourth spring "Intro to Wines" has been offered. It was created four years ago when Barrett was approached by her students.

It began as a professional elective with only 16 students. "Intro To Wines" is now taught to 75 students spread over three courses.

"Intro To Wines" experienced some difficulties in getting started. Because of K-State's guidelines about alcohol on campus, the class was first taught off-campus.

"I taught the class all over Manhattan. I held classes at the Fairfield Inn, Varney's and even in the Episcopal church," Barrett said.

For those students who are not interested in fine wine, Ann Reckling, visiting professor in English, is teaching "Women and TV."

It is designed to introduce students to feminist criticism and apply it to popular culture.

It focuses on two aspects of television, language and the role of women in television throughout the years.

"Students will understand that language is responsible for the creation of iconic female characters," Reckling said. "Students can understand how language and rhythm create humor rather that just making it up on the spot."

The class also takes a feministic critical approach to popular culture. It looks at television shows throughout history and analyzes the female characters, their roles and how they change over time, Reckling said.

She chose television as the medium to study because it is easier for students to relate to.

"Television is considered accessible and familiar," Reckling said. "It enables students to understand the intricacies of the show and our culture from the inside, through understanding the elements of comedy, and the outside, through feminist discourse."

"It is important to see how we are responding to images and messages outside of literature, which the English department typically does. Since television is both audio and visual, the visual element changes the message and women tend to be more visually scrutinized. That is a generalization, but there is still a tendency there," Brigham said.

Young drivers not wearing seat belts

By Dane Lickteig
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the results of recent research came in showing automobile fatalities were 75 percent in rural areas, it shocked Sunanda Dissanayake, assistant professor in civil engineering.

"The results were the complete opposite of what I was expecting them to be," she said. "I thought they would be much higher in urban areas."

The one-year project to identify counter measures to reduce the severity of rural highway crashes funded by the U.S. Department of Transportation is the only one like it in the country.

"Rural areas get less attention because people think driving on long stretches of road with little traffic is less dangerous than urban driving," Dissanayake said.

"This is not good because single automobile crashes are the most severe."

Further research showed that the main reason for the fatalities were crashes, not accidents, because of human factors.

Not wearing a seat belt was head and shoulders above the next causes of speeding and young drivers.

Not wearing a seat belt and young, inexperienced drivers was the main combination for the most severe crashes, she said.

The research holds true at K-State. Rachel Bender, senior in anthropology, said some of her friends are not concerned about wearing their seat belts on campus because of the 20 mph speed limit.

Captain Richard Herrman, patrol commander of K-State Police, said the habit of not wearing seat belts for small trips starts back at home for most students.

"Students get the mindset that they're in their home town, and familiar with the streets and they're just going a couple short, quick blocks," he said.

"They also have other things on their minds like homework and what is going on this weekend."

With the research proving the severity of crashes in Kansas due to the lack of a seat belt, Dissanayake is now involved with a new project that is exploring methods to increase the seat belt usage in Kansas.

"Our goal now is to identify the reasons for the lack of use and have solutions.

A few solutions already is the lack of an high level enforcement on seat belt laws in Kansas and education in wearing a seat belt are some of the causes for such low seat belt use," Dissanayake said.

"You are not invincible," Herrman said. "People have to remember that it doesn't take much to crash."

SPORTS

Say it isn't so, Sammy

ANTHONY MENDOZA

By the time you read this, the Chicago Cubs should have sent Sammy Sosa to the Baltimore Orioles for a big leaguer and a pair of prospects, pending a physical.

The same Sosa that is the Cubs all-time home run leader, the only player in major league history to have hit 60 or more home runs in three separate years and the modern day "Mr. Cub" – filling in for Ernie Banks.

But both Chicago and Baltimore got what they wanted.

The Cubs were able to unload Sosa, who will be entering his 18th year in baseball and has become someone who has turned into a clubhouse problem rather than a solution.

Baltimore gets another big bat to protect Major League Baseball's RBI leader last year, Miguel Tejada. The Orioles tried acquiring American League MVP Vladimir Guerrero last year via free agency, but he chose the Anaheim Angels for less money.

Why, then, would the Cubs dump Sosa for a bag of balls and send $10 million dollars to the Orioles to pay Sosa's contract?

Because he's not the same player. He is getting worse each year and does not realize it.

Last year Sosa batted .253 with 35 home runs in 161 games played. Decent numbers, but not the ones that fans at Wrigley Field have become accustomed to witnessing.

His home run total was his lowest in 10 years and the 126 games he played was the least amount of time Sosa has had on the field in more than eight years.

Sosa's home run totals have dropped each of the last two years and, if it is any indication of how he is not a feared hitter anymore, just look at his base-on-balls total.

Last year he was walked just 56 times.

Sosa's career as a Cub will not end today. Rather, it ended nearly four months ago.

The Cubs' captain did not start the final game of the season and instead bolted from the clubhouse 15 minutes after the game started.

It was Sosa's final curtain call in a hectic last two years as a Cub that included being caught cheating with cork in his bat and a refusal to take a steroid test, even though he told a group of reporters he would take a test on the spot to prove himself clean.

This is not the Sosa that said, "baseball has been very, very good to me" in 1998 when he and Mark McGwire chased down Roger Maris' record of 61 home runs in a season.

It wasn't the same Sosa who, after September 11, did his trademark run out to right field with the American flag.

Sosa got what he deserved, and the Cubs and fans in Chicago are better off without him.

He can hop, skip, jump, look into the camera and blow kisses on his way out of Chicago.

Museum visit inspires president

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The story of a nation divided, a time when blacks and whites lived in different worlds and an era when playing baseball was every little boy's dream – this is the story of Negro League Baseball.

The story K-State President Jon Wefald wrote was of a time of hope, and it is a story that Warner Bros. Television has decided to tell.

When Wefald walked into Kansas City's Negro League Baseball Museum, he knew there was something different about that era.

"I've long been a fan of baseball. It's a great sport," Wefald said. "But what really captivated me was that museum - it's really enthralling."

His visit to the museum inspired Wefald to write a paper on the history of the Negro Baseball League, including the stories of great players like pitcher Satchel Paige, catcher Josh Gibson and centerfielder Cool Papa Bell.

After writing the paper, Wefald attempted to find a company to produce the story of these heroes of the game.

"I just thought, 'If somebody could get this, it could make for a remarkable movie,'" Wefald said.

Building blocks for the future

K-State adds 10 new players to roster for 2005

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After the addition of 10 new faces in the off-season, the K-State baseball team has begun spring practice and is optimistic about the upcoming season.

K-State will be looking to duplicate, if not out-do, the fast start it got off to last season when the Wildcats started out 19-6 overall. The lofty record included an 11-game winning streak and the school's first-ever national ranking at No. 30.

Second-year head coach Brad Hill said he and the team are ready to get out on the field and start playing some games.

"We've got a lot of new guys, and we're just ready to go play some games," Hill said. "More than anything else, we need to play some games, put guys on the field and put some different combinations out there so we can learn our personnel and they can learn each other."

Junior outfielder Steve Murphy, an All-Big 12 selection last year, echoed Coach Hill's sentiments.

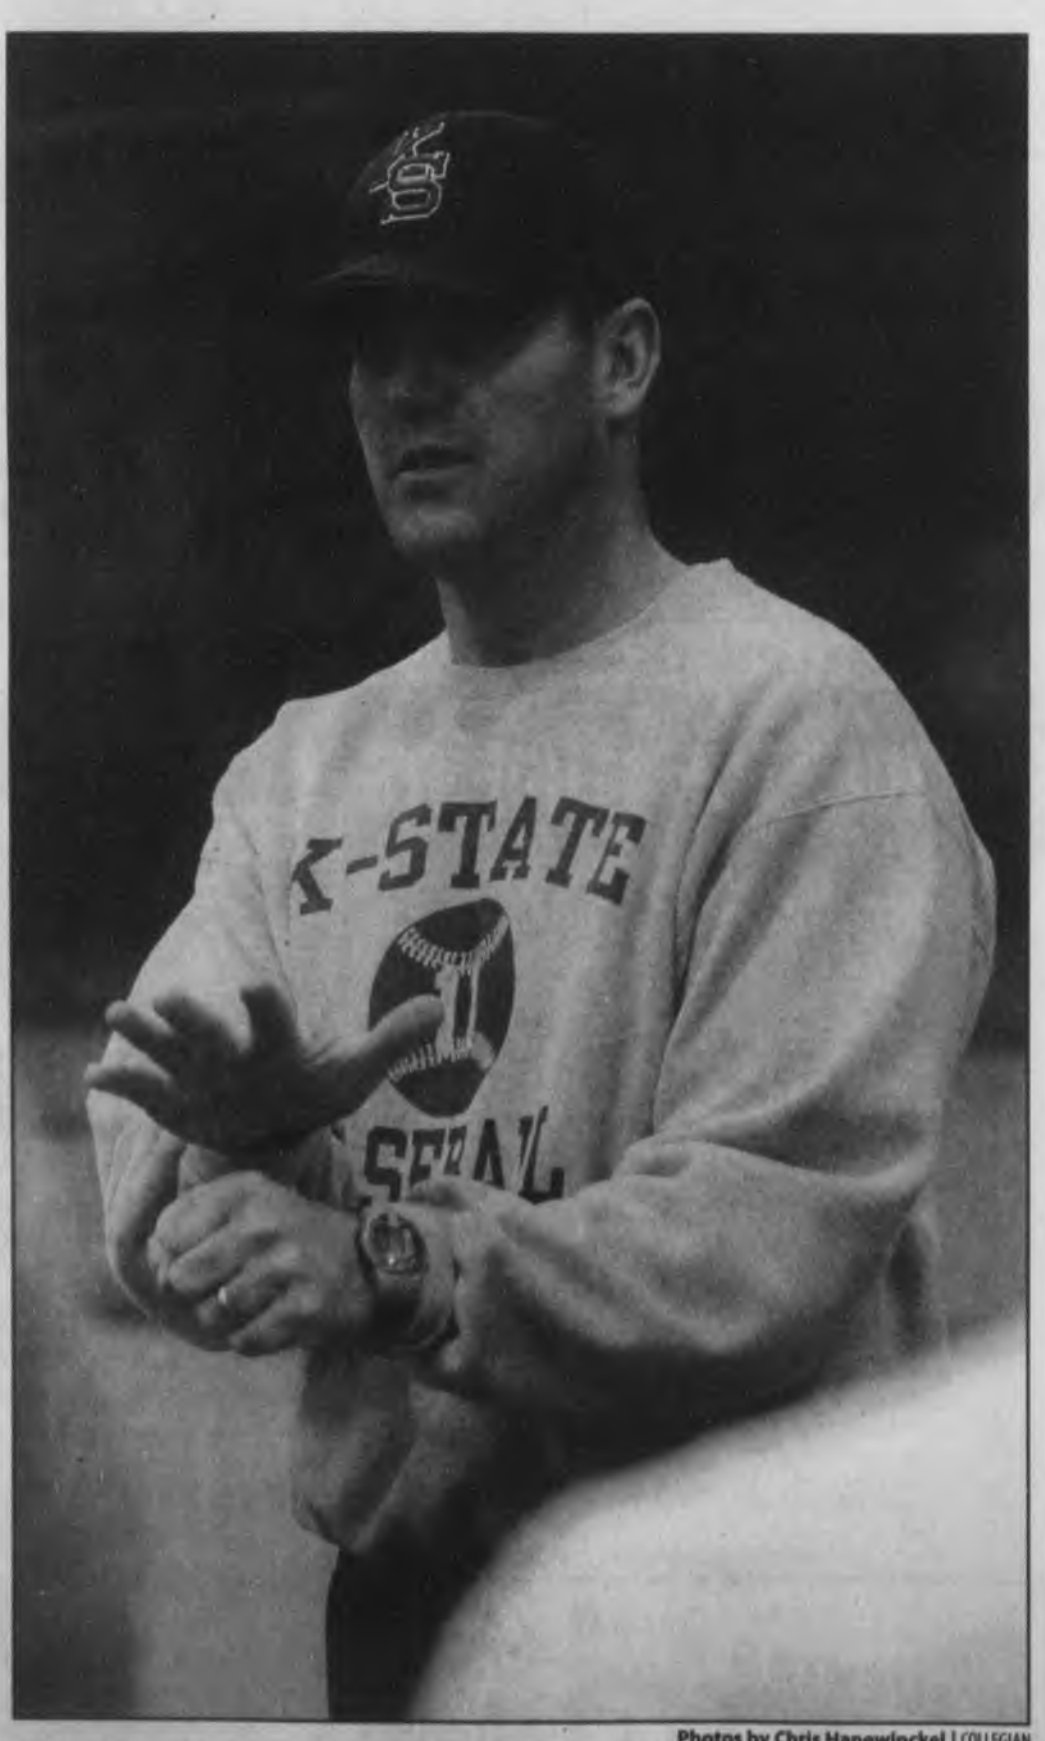
"We're looking to come out of the gates with a couple of wins," Murphy said. "We would like to come into conference with a strong record. I think with our schedule we have and the preparation we've done, we can do that."

With so many additions in the off-season, the Wildcats have the luxury of being a much deeper ball club than last year.

Possibly no area of the team will benefit from the added depth more than the pitching staff.

With the graduation of their top three pitchers – Jim Ripley, Carlos Torres and Brett Bagley – the Wildcats are looking to replace a total of 10 pitchers from last year's staff.

K-State returns two pitchers from last year, Eric Rollins and B.J. Kissel, and adds seniors Mitch Walter and Sean Clancy, who return from medical redshirts from last season.



On top of three junior college transfers and five freshman, the Wildcats will have more options on the mound.

"More than anything else, over last year, we have a little bit more depth," Hill said of the Wildcat pitching staff. "We'll have a few more options. We should have at least two or three left-handers out of the bullpen – we didn't have any last year."

"Last year, everyone we played in the Big 12 had left-handers out of the bullpen, and it would be nice to have two or three left-handers we can use in situational baseball."

On the offensive side of things, last year the Wildcats

Track & Field | Cost earns Big 12 athlete of the week

K-State junior weight-thrower Coby Cost was named the Big 12 Indoor Track and Field Male Athlete of the Week for the week of Jan. 31 - Feb. 4.

Cost

At the UNI invitational this past weekend, Cost broke his own school record in the weight throw with a toss of 69-04 1/4. The El Dorado, Kan., native set the previous record of 68-06 1/2 at the KSU Open held last year.

The honor was the second for a Wildcat athlete in as many weeks, as junior hugh jumper Kyle Lancaster won the award last week.

Tennis | Hingis knocked out in first round of comeback

PATTAYA, Thailand — Former world No. 1 Martina Hingis's comeback was spoiled Tuesday when Marlene Weingartner of Germany beat her 1-6, 6-2, 6-2 in a first-round match at the Volvo Women's Open.

Hingis

Hingis started well, winning the first set easily, but looked far slower than she did before taking a two-year break to recuperate from a severe ankle injury. The five-time Swiss Grand Slam champion last competed in a WTA tournament in October 2002 at Filderstadt, Germany, where she lost to Elena Dementieva.

Unranked since the 2002 tour, Hingis began Tuesday moving swiftly all over the court, using well-placed groundstrokes to break Weingartner twice for a 3-0 lead. After double-faulting to yield a game, she rallied against her erratic opponent to win the set in 24 minutes on a double fault by Weingartner.

Scientists uncover new drug

Canadian scientists uncovered a new steroid designed to avoid detection in standard drug tests, but said they found no evidence it was used by athletes.

The World Anti-Doping Agency said Tuesday that the substance — called desoxy-methyl-testosterone, or DMT — was identified after a tip from an anonymous whistleblower.

WADA science director Olivier Rabin said the drug had similarities to THG, or tetrahydrogestrinone, a drug at the heart of the BALCO steroid investigation in the United States.

CFB | Fulmer gets pay raise to over $2 million per year

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee coach Phillip Fulmer received a raise that will push his salary to over $2 million per year.

Fulmer

Fulmer's total contract was increased from nearly $1.8 million to $2.05 million annually and extended by one year to 2011, university officials announced Tuesday.

Fulmer's base salary rose from $275,000 to $325,000. He gets $800,000 for being on radio and television shows, an equipment and apparel fee of $625,000 and $300,000 for endorsements and appearances.

NBA | Tomjanovich considering resigning as L.A. coach

LOS ANGELES — Rudy Tomjanovich is considering resigning as Los Angeles Lakers coach for health reasons, a team spokesman said Tuesday.

ESPN.com reported that Tomjanovich would step down following Tuesday night's game against Portland.

Spokesman John Black said that would not be the case.

"He's considering several options and resigning is one of them. That decision has not been made," Black said.

Tomjanovich missed Los Angeles' win over Charlotte on Sunday night because of a stomach virus.

Binge drinking weekly occurrence for many students

By Alissa Cherry and Diana Rogers
THE OKLAHOMA DAILY

To some students, five drinks in an hour or two doesn't seem like that many. But according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, this is considered binge drinking.

NIAAA defines binge drinking as "a pattern of drinking alcohol...that corresponds to consuming five or more drinks (male), or four or more drinks (female), in about two hours." But for many college students, binge drinking is a weekly occurrence. Whether they head to the bars on Thursday nights or end up at a friend of a friend's party, getting drunk becomes the goal.

"I would say it's prevalent from the number of people (the Norman Alcohol Information Center) sees, usually self-referred college students, who talk about that culture of binge drinking and partying," he said.

A survey conducted by the NIAAA found that alcohol is the No. 1 drug of choice among children and adolescents. The report shows that about 2 million kids between the ages of 12 and 20 drank five or more drinks at a time, five or more times per month.

A combination of freedom from parents, a broader social scene and greater access to alcohol all influence this drinking culture in most college towns.

"Being away from parents allows freedom to experiment with new things," said Chelsea Dosser, an OU freshman.

GATEWAY TO SOCIALIZATION

Many social situations involve alcohol, especially in college. While most students said they don't feel like they're pressured into drinking, they often see it happen and want to join in.

Jessica McDaniel, an OU senior, said she thinks students drink to have a good time, socialize and hang out with friends.

"It's a gateway to socialization," McDaniel said.

For some students, alcohol starts out as a way to meet new people or to help them loosen up in a new situation.

Alcohol helps to open up around people you don't know well, said Travis Mizell, psychology senior.

"Drinking increases the number of people you hang out with," McDaniel said. "It broadens your social circle."

Many parties begin with a drinking game. Every college has its own version of the same games, but everyone's rules are a little different. But no matter which rules students play by, it all leads to the same thing: getting drunk.

"When it comes to alcohol and your friends, you want to be the one that can drink the most," said Trey Parham, an OU freshman.

POTENTIAL FOR A PROBLEM

Bureman said that while it doesn't always happen, social drinking can lead to binge drinking.

"Just because a person drinks alcohol, it doesn't mean they're going to go into binge drinking, it doesn't mean they're going to become dependent on it, but the potential is there," he said.

Bureman said that while there's no solid definition of binge drinking, one factor is time.

If a person spends three to five days drinking, that's considered binge, he said.

ALCOHOL USE AND ABUSE

Bureman said that although alcoholism is a general term, the Norman Alcohol Information Center looks at whether people abuse alcohol or whether they are dependent on it.

"Pattern of abuse, which after a while, can lead to dependence," he said.

Many students agreed that there is a difference between binge drinking and alcoholism and that there is a definite transition from one to the other.

McDaniel said she thinks it is a disease where people physically cannot stop themselves from drinking.

"Some people are just predisposed, and if you allow yourself to continue, it will get to a point where you can no longer cope without alcohol," she said.

Dosser said she thinks people with alcoholism drink on a daily basis to block out their world because they don't want to deal with certain circumstances in their life.

"An alcoholic is someone who throws away all responsibility to drink," Dosser said.

"It becomes an addiction and a stronghold. It's something you can't break free from. It's someone who needs treatment."

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Nellis

Name: M. Duane Nellis

Title: Provost

How many years at K-State: I returned to K-State in June 2004, after having seven years as dean of the Eberly College of Arts and Sciences at West Virginia University. Prior to WVU, I was at K-State for 17 years.

Three adjectives that describe you: Energetic, passionate, caring.

Describe an ideal night for you: Being with family.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The people.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? Find more resources to support outstanding programs and enhance the diversity of our campus community through more effective recruitment and retention of a diverse student body and faculty.

Most embarrassing moment in college? During my undergraduate days, ending up piled with 10 other students at the bottom of the chair lift exit ramp on the class' first "down hill" skiing class excursion to the top of the mountain in a college physical education course in Montana.

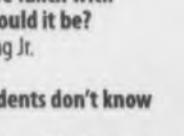
If you could drive any car, what would it be? Some type of convertible sports car.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? Martin Luther King Jr.



Something students don't know about you: I grew up in northwest Montana near Glacier National Park.

THEY SAID IT

Giamatti

"Every job feels like the first job. I'm always fumbling through it, trying to figure it out and going, 'I'm going to get fired. I'm going to get fired.'"

Artificial emotions can prove useful in dealing with opposite sex

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: My girlfriend gets mad every time I go with my friends to a strip club. How can I convince her that it's not that big of a deal?

A: I have many strong opinions about strippers. But let's get this off my chest before I start.

Who the hell told strippers that guys like being whipped and spanked? Every bachelor party and strip club I've been to have strippers who feel the need to bring some poor guy on stage and whip, slap, beat and spank him with his own belt. I'm sure there are guys that like being abused like that, but it has to be something like 3 percent or less.

OK, now I can address this situation. What people need to understand (guys and girls alike) is that strip clubs are safer places than most parties.

At a strip club, the strippers, believe it or not, are not trying to have sex with you.

They just want your money.

At a party, on the other hand, you have a much better chance of running into someone who will make sexual advances toward you. I would much rather have my girlfriend (if I had one) spend the evening laughing with her friends at a strip club than be at a party where some drunk guy tries to coax her into a back room.

And no stripper is ever going to slip something in your drink to take advantage of you. You need to make your girlfriend understand that your chances of cheating on her are a hundred times greater at a party than they are at a strip club.

Wait.

Make sure that you say that you would never cheat on her, because a girl will turn that statement I just wrote around on you in a second.

Strip clubs can be an all-around fun atmosphere in which to drink. Just because I'm in a strip club doesn't mean I'm walking around with a huge erection that could explode any minute.

Many people say that stripping is an act that degrades women. That's probably true. But I bet that I feel a lot more degraded leaving with an empty wallet than a stripper does leaving with a wad of cash.

Q: My one-year anniversary with my girlfriend is the same day as the Super Bowl. She wants us to hang out and spend quality time together and I want to drink beer with my friends and watch the game, what should I do?

A: I do have a general belief about the delicate balance between girlfriend time and friend time.

In general, it is best to spend your weekends partying with your friends, and your weekdays with your girlfriend.

The reason for this is that your weekends are usually wild, unorganized and a little fuzzy overall. Weekdays tend to be more focused and clear.

"Just because I'm in a strip club doesn't mean I'm walking around with a huge erection that could explode any minute."

This is the best opportunity to spend quality time with your loved one. Hanging out with your girlfriend on weekends can occasionally lead to some interesting bedside manner, but it often leads to drunken arguments.

Having meaningful conversations with your partner on late weekend nights can often leave you regretting things you've said the next morning.

Before I address your question specifically I must say that I don't believe that the one-year anniversary is valid if you're not married.

When I think of the word "anniversary," I think of a married couple.

So, from my point of view, this isn't that big of a deal.

I'm betting that you don't really care about it that much either, but your girlfriend is probably one of those types of people who thrive on this kind of stuff.

Let me guess – she celebrates her "half birthday," too.

Your way out of this one is to perfect a skill that will help you out of many other similar situations with your girlfriend in the future.

The skill I speak of is the ability to control your emotions.

Now, when I say control your emotions, I don't mean that you need to avoid displaying emotion.

I mean the exact opposite.

You need to appear to be more upset about the situation than your girlfriend is.

Your ideal goal is to be able to cry on command.

Being able to artificially produce emotion like this will give you more power in the relationship than you ever thought possible. If you react to this situation with anger, your girlfriend will get upset and see herself as the victim in the situation. But if you can appear to be so hurt and upset about the situation that you are about to break down emotionally, she will see herself as the aggressor and you as the victim. She will fall like a house of cards.

Women don't respond positively to anger.

But they love to console and appease individuals who are emotionally distraught.

When your girlfriend gets upset with you, show her your puppy dog face and a few tears, if necessary.

Pope rushed to hospital

Vatican reports pope sick with flu, will recover

By Victor I. Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME – Pope John Paul II was rushed to the hospital urgently Tuesday night after he suffered inflammation of the throat and had difficulty breathing while battling the flu, the Vatican said.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls told The Associated Press that the decision to hospitalize the 84-year-old pontiff was "mainly a precaution."

He pointed out that the pope was not in intensive care but in the same 10th floor suite of rooms where he has been during several previous stays at Rome's Gemelli Polyclinic, about 2 1/2 miles from the Vatican.

The pope has the flu and acute laryngeal tracheitis, Navarro-Valls said, acknowledging the pontiff had a "certain difficulty in breathing."

The spokesman, who has a medical degree, denied Italian news reports that the pope had a CAT scan at the hospital.

Navarro-Valls said more tests will be done and the Vatican would issue a medical report sometime after 9 a.m. (3 a.m. EST) Wednesday. The hospital said the first statement would be from the Vatican. Journalists were being kept out of the facility.

The Vatican said in an earlier statement that the pope suffered from "an acute laryngeal tracheitis and larynx spasm crisis."

Tracheitis, an inflammation of the trachea, requires hospitalization and usually a breathing tube to keep the airway clear. The spasms are likely a complication from the respiratory illness he's had.

It's possible his Parkinson's disease has made his condition more serious and his breathing more labored.

A Vatican official told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity that the pontiff, who has had the flu since Sunday, had apparently suffered a "breathing crisis."

A close member of the pope's staff, American Archbishop James Harvey, said the pope had congestion and a slight fever during the day.

He said the decision to hospitalize the pope was made by close aides.

It apparently took many at the Vatican by surprise and cars with Vatican license plates began pulling up at the hospital only after John Paul arrived.

A State Department official, who asked not to be identified, said the pope would be held overnight for observation but there was no indication he was gravely ill.

It was the same Rome Catholic teaching hospital he was taken to when he was shot in the abdomen in 1981 and at which he has undergone several operations.

Navarro-Valls told the Italian news agency ANSA that the pope was in his room in an apartment set aside for him at the hospital, which is near the Vatican.

The frail pontiff has Parkinson's disease, which makes his speech difficult, as well as chronic hip and knee problems.

He was last seen in public on Sunday, when he made his regular noontime appearance at his window overlooking St. Peter's Square and released a dove in a sign of peace.

He appeared remarkably lively, but his words were barely audible.

Cattlemen seek injunction to halt imports

By Linda Deutsch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Citing a risk of mad cow disease, a cattlemen's organization asked a judge Tuesday to block the federal government from allowing imports of live cattle and an expanded range of beef products from Canada.

R-CALF United Stockgrowers of America argued that the U.S. meat supply will be regarded as suspect if it becomes mixed with beef cuts from Canada, where two cases of mad cow disease were confirmed in January.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture plans to allow imports of cattle under 2 1/2 years old and certain other animals and beef products from Canada beginning March 7.

Andrea McNally, a spokeswoman for the USDA, said the agency does not comment on pending litigation but stands behind its plan to allow Canadian imports.

After Canada reported its first case of mad cow disease in May 2003, the United States banned Canadian cattle, beef and beef products.

The restrictions were later eased to allow imports considered at very low risk of the disease.

Annan selects Clinton to lead tsunami reconstruction effort

By Edith Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan selected former President Clinton on Tuesday to be the U.N. point man for tsunami reconstruction, saying no one could better ensure that the world doesn't forget the needs of the countries devastated by the Dec. 26 disaster.

Clinton said in a statement that he looked forward to serving as Annan's special envoy starting next month.

Soon after the disaster, President George W. Bush named Clinton and Bush's father, former President George H.W. Bush, to head a nationwide private fund-raising effort to help the 11 countries affected by the tsunamis.

The disaster killed more than 157,000 people and displaced millions of others.

Clinton said he will continue to focus on his work with Bush "to urge people to contribute to this cause, and the two of us hope to visit the region together later this month."

U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said Annan wanted to appoint a special envoy not only to focus on the cleanup and reconstruction but to help resolve conflicts with rebels in the two worst-hit countries – Indonesia and Sri Lanka.

This would give Clinton a chance to tackle longstanding conflicts with rebels in Indonesia's Aceh province who have been fighting for independence since 1976.

"The secretary-general is confident that President Clinton will bring energy, dynamism and focus to the task of sustaining world interest in the vital recovery and reconstruction phase following the tsunami disaster," a U.N. statement said.

CARS | Students volunteer time toward competition

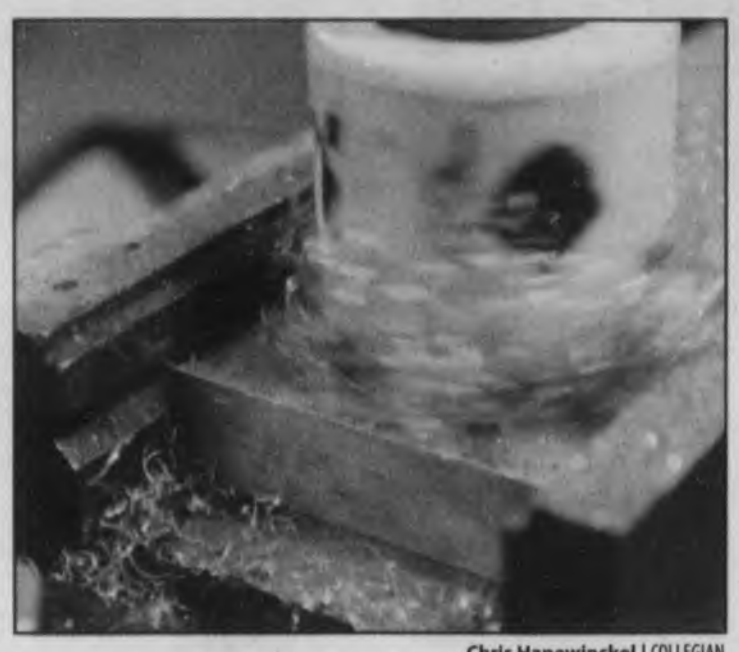
"I got both of our families involved," she said. "We all show up and cheer for the team on the sidelines. We are the team's biggest fans."

Pollock said along with the struggles of school and relationships, he has learned about project management.



"I learned about keeping a project on track by working with full-time students who are volunteering their time," he said.

Being a part of the K-State Formula SAE team also impresses employers, Pollock said.

"It's not anything short-term," he said. "It pulls a lot of weight with employers because it's basically a job outside of school. Automotive companies and any kind of engineering companies use this as a way to recruit."

Steve Anderson, freshman in mechanical engineering, works on the car's controls team. He said he became interested in the team because of his love for cars.

"I had been working on cars throughout high school," he said. "I heard about the team from a friend and kind of got into it."

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Students use a hole saw to cut a filler cap for the gas tank Tuesday evening in Rathbone Hall. Members of the K-State Formula SAE team usually spend on average 15 hours a week working on the car.

Being on the team has had several benefits, Anderson said.

"I learned a lot of team dynamics and a lot about these types of cars," he said. "I've expanded my knowledge a lot about cars from being on the team."

Although he is only a freshman, Anderson hopes he will get to go to competition in the spring.

"If they'll have me, I'll go," he said. "It's so far off right now it's really sketchy who will go."

BASEBALL | Wildcats open season in Phoenix

were decent, as they hit .259 as a team and stole 63 bases.

K-State's stolen base leader, senior outfielder Terry Blunt, thinks K-State will show opposing teams a more open-ended offense this season.

"Coach Hill has been talking about how we're going to open up our offense a little more and start runners that maybe most people think we're not going to start, and throwing in hit-and-runs and stuff like that, which we didn't get to do as much as we wanted to last year," Blunt said.

Murphy said he is excited about this year's squad, and he feels the Wildcats are ready to make some noise this season.

"(The team) is different because there's a lot of new faces, but as for as the team all together, we've bonded really quickly," Murphy said. "The talent on this team is barnone. We've done an incredible job of working hard and I think everyone is ready to start the season."

K-State kicks off the season Feb. 10 against the Portland Pilots at the Rawlings/Oakland A's tournament in Phoenix.

WEFALD | Mini-series to honor Negro League heros

Several companies showed initial interest, including DreamWorks and Paramount Pictures, but the negotiations fell through.

Wefald's efforts finally paid off after the paper fell into the hands of Dick Robertson, president of Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution.

"Most of the time we politely send back these ideas," Robertson said. "But I thought that it was extremely interesting, and I wanted to learn more about it."

Robertson was hooked.

Warner Bros. is creating a television mini-series to honor the heroes of the Negro League and their efforts to unite a divided America.

Don Motley, the executive director of the Negro League Baseball museum, said it is important to remember what the league did to help a divided America reunite.

"The Negro League is modern–day civil rights," Motley said. "There's so much to tell about what these people had to go through to play baseball."

Suzanne de Passe, chair and CEO of de Passe Entertainment and executive producer of award-winning productions "Lonesome Dove" and "The Jacksons: An American Dream," has been named the executive producer of the movie.

While Robertson says it is premature to make casting decisions, there has been talk about asking LL Cool J and other popular singer/actors to portray the great young players of the Negro League.

The mini-series air date has not been determined but is tentatively scheduled to premiere in November 2006 after the World Series.

"This is untold American history you can't find in American history books," Motley said.

GLOBALFLYER | Students work on flight attempt

"It's pretty easy to see what the weather is going to be like 100 miles from here," Chester said.

The flights within Kansas can usually be planned that day, but they have been working on planning this flight for about a month, the four said.

Chester said the difficulty is more an aspect of how time-consuming the work is.

"It's tedious work more so than stressful, I think, because it does have to be perfect," she said.

Although the record-setting attempt is dependent on the weather, the four students said they believe he'll make it.

"We're all pretty positive he'll make it around and back to Salina," Short said. "Otherwise we'd have some explaining to do."

The event is expected to bring in more than 300 reports from across the United States and Europe, Dean Dennis Kuhlman, College of Technology and Aviation, said.

"I'm not certain that Kansas State University has had an event of this size, of this magnitude," he said.

Up until the day the Flyer takes off, the mission control room and the hanger containing it are locked and secure, he said. Only authorized personnel are allowed in.

Kulhman said he's delighted with having this happen at Salina's campus.

"That's right up my alley," he said. "I'm in hog heaven just getting to visit with these guys."

Prison camps accused of abuse

By Paisley Dodds
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico – Videotapes of riot squads subduing troublesome terror suspects at the U.S. prison camp at Guantanamo Bay show the guards punching some detainees, tying one to a gurney for questioning and forcing a dozen to strip from the waist down, according to a secret report. One squad was all-female, traumatizing some Muslim prisoners.

Investigators from U.S. Southern Command in Miami, which oversees the camp in Cuba, wrote the report that was obtained by The Associated Press after spending a little over a week in June reviewing 20 hours of videotapes involving "Immediate Reaction Forces."

The camp's layout prevented videotaping in all the cells where the five-person teams– also known as "Immediate Response Forces"– operated, the report said. Reviewers said they did not look at all of the available videotapes.

Although the report cited several cases of physical force, reviewers said they found no evidence of systemic detainee abuse, according to the six-page summary dated June 19, 2004. An official familiar with the report authenticated it, speaking to AP on condition of anonymity.

AP also reviewed an unclassified log of the videotape footage.

The tapes raised questions about mistreatment and misconduct, however, said the investigators, who suggested some clips needed more scrutiny to rule out abuse. The military has cited 10 substantiated cases of abuse at Guantanamo, and announced Tuesday an extension would be granted for an investigation to interview of witnesses in the United States and abroad.

One such clip the investigators flagged was from Feb. 17, 2004. It showed "one or more" team members punching a detainee "on an area of his body that seemingly would be inconsistent with striking a pressure point," which is a sanctioned tactic for subduing prisoners.

In five other clips showing detainees who appeared to have been punched by team members, the investigators said, "The punching was in line with accepted law enforcement practice of striking the pressure point on the back of the thigh to temporarily distract the detainee."

In other "questionable" cases, reviewers said a video showed a guard kneeing a detainee in the head, while another showed a team securing a detainee to a gurney for an interrogation.

A separate clip captured a platoon leader taunting a detainee with pepper spray and repeatedly spraying him before letting the reaction team enter the cell, reviewers wrote.

Investigators also noted about a dozen cases where detainees were stripped from the waist down and taken to the "Romeo block," of the camp.

No female guards were involved, they said.

Romeo block is a camp section where prisoners were often left naked for days, according to two former detainees, Britons Shafiq Rasul and Asif Iqbal, who were released last year.

Although no female guards were videotaped in any of the stripping cases, investigators cautioned the U.S. government about using the all-female team to handle disruptive detainees, citing religious and cultural issues.

Many of the prisoners are Muslim men and under strict interpretations of Islam view contact with other women other than their wives as taboo.

2nd-half sensation

Fast facts
About Jeremiah Massey

- In his last two games, Massey has scored 34 of his 40 total points in the second half.
- Massey's performances in wins against Iowa State and Missouri last week earned him Big 12 Player of the Week honors for the second time this season.
- For the season, Massey is averaging 10 points on 55.5 percent shooting in the second half.

Massey continues to come up big for Wildcats after halftime

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's becoming Jeremiah Massey's calling card.

When K-State's offense is sputtering and the Wildcats need someone to lead the team, the senior forward has been the man.

In the Wildcats' last two Big 12 wins against Iowa State and Missouri, Massey has exploded in the second half, compiling 34 of his 40 total points after halftime.

That type of play has earned him Big 12 Player of the Week honors and has sparked the Wildcats to their best overall and conference start (13-4, 3-3) since the 1995-96 season.

Sophomore guard Fred Peete said the team knows it can keep counting on Massey, as it prepares for tonight's clash with No. 10 Oklahoma State at 6 p.m. in Stillwater, Okla.

"When it comes down to clutch situations, we know who needs the ball, and who needs to score," Peete said. "It kind of relieves pressure on us."

In a 63-51 win at home against Iowa State on Jan. 26, Massey scored 19 of his game-high 23 points in the second half to go along with a game-high 10 rebounds.

Then on Saturday, Massey showed his second-half excellence was not limited to the confines of Bramlage Coliseum.

The Detroit, Mich. native scored 15 second-half points – after scoring just two before halftime – to lead the Wildcats to a 64-53 win at Missouri.

Massey said coming out of the locker room at halftime, he knew he had to step his game up.

"It wasn't that I had to take it over, I just had to turn it up," said Massey, who also grabbed seven rebounds against the Tigers. "I wasn't doing much to help my team win.

"I knew guys needed me to step up for us to get the win, and that's what I tried to do."

Stepping up in a game's final 20 minutes is not a new thing for last season's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year. Massey has averaged 10 points on 55.5 percent shooting and has gone 60-of-74 from the free throw line in the second half this season.

Teammates have different theories as to why Massey finds so much more success after halftime.

Freshman point guard Clent Stewart said it's just Massey's pure skills that eventually prevail over the defense.

"As far as down low, he's very versatile," Stewart said. "He can penetrate a little bit, he can shoot the little left jump hook and he can draw a lot of crowds. He's definitely a player we look to in the clutch."

Peete said Missouri and others have been fooled when Massey starts off a game slow.

"The first half they were looking for him to do a lot of the scoring, and when he wasn't producing they probably were trying to lay off of him," Peete said. "Then in the second half, he brought it on a little stronger and took them by surprise."

In addition to his player of the week honors, Massey was among the league leaders in several categories going into Tuesday's night game.

Massey was seventh in the Big 12 in scoring (16.9 ppg), eighth in field goal percentage (49 percent) and fifth in free throw percentage (81 percent).

For Stewart, there's little doubt that Massey's clutch play has earned him a spot among the Big 12's best.

"He's been leading the team," Stewart said. "The last two games, in the second half, he's been tremendous. When we need a guy down the stretch in a ballgame, he's performed, and that's why he's one of the top players in this league."

Wheeler, Coggins step up; Wildcats undefeated with freshman, sophomore in starting lineup

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's hard to argue against the results.

The K-State women's basketball team has been better when freshman Shana Wheeler and sophomore Claire Coggins start for the No. 15 Wildcats.

K-State has rolled off seven wins in a row in Big 12 Conference play heading into tonight's game with Baylor, but the even more impressive number is 10-0 – the Wildcats' record when Coggins and Wheeler are in the starting lineup.

Seven games into the season, head coach Deb Patterson made the decision to start Wheeler and Coggins and sit two seniors.

The two seniors were Chelsea Domenico, K-State's career assist-to-turnover ratio leader, and Brie Madden, who ranks third in career blocked shots in K-State history.

"It happens. The people (Patterson) put on the floor, we've been successful and we're winning and that's what counts," Domenico said. "I'm not going to be selfish in any way. As long as we're winning, whoever Coach P. is putting on the court is stepping up and playing hard and they deserve to be out there."

In the seven games Madden and Domenico started, K-State lost two of them. One to highly-ranked Duke, and the other to Liberty, a game K-State played without leading scorer Kendra Wecker.

In those games, the Wildcat defense held the opponents to 53.8 points per game.

When the freshman-sophomore tandem from Lee's Summit, Mo. starts, the Wildcats have an unblemished record and hold opponents to 49.5 points per game. This includes wins over conference powers Iowa State at home and Texas Tech on the road.

Patterson said the move was made to get more athletic on the perimeter and in the post.

"(Coggins and Wheeler) are young and both are quick learners and there came a point in the season where it was really important for us to put three defenders on the perimeter," Patterson said. "To be able to put three really proficient scorers on the floor as much as we could and on the inside it was just a goal of ours to attempt to be as athletic and agile as we could be at that five spot."

While Wheeler continues to improve, Madden has returned to a role she played while former teammate Nicole Ohlde was in a K-State uniform.

Players	Record
Coggins and Wheeler start	10-0
Domenico and Madden start	5-2

But Madden said she knew the change was coming, as Wheeler's confidence within the system continued to improve.

"Everybody thinks it was like a shock, like it just happened, and I don't view it like that because I saw Shana improve every day," Madden said. "I'm

Cats look to continue win streak

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fresh off a tough win at Colorado, the K-State women's basketball team is hitting the road again, this time to Waco, Texas, to take on No. 8 Baylor.

The Wildcats are riding a seven game win-streak, and were victorious in their last three road games, including a huge road win over then-No. 10 Texas Tech.

To stretch the streak to eight straight games, K-State will have to beat a hungry Baylor team coming off of an uncharacteristic two-point win over last place Oklahoma State.

Head coach Deb Patterson said she expects Baylor to be ready to play after a disappointing outing.

"They'll be sharper than sharp," she said. "That's what your response is when you feel like you might not have played at the level you're capable of, and there is no question in my mind we'll see the very best Baylor has to bring to the floor."

To tame the Bears, the Wildcats will have to limit the production of inside threats Blackmon and Sophia Young. Both average over 15 points per outing and cause matchup problems for many opposing defenses.

K-State senior center and Texas native Brie Madden has played against Young and Blackmon before, and she knows what attitude she needs to bring to the court against the Bears.

"They're really good post players," she said. "But it's something where you've got to keep your head about you and you can't make it a huge deal, you've just got to come out and play your game."

Outside of the paint, Baylor is also capable of dismantling teams from the perimeter. Guard Emily Niemann is shooting over 50 percent from three-point range for the season, and averages nearly 10 points a game.

Senior guard Megan Mahoney knows what kind of damage Niemann can inflict on a team.

Game time

When: 7 tonight
Where: Ferrell Center, Waco, Texas
Radio: Mid America Sports Network (KMAN 1350 AM)

Mahoney said Niemann must be kept in check if K-State hopes to win.

"She's a great shooter," she said. "We just have to not let her get hot and get those open looks because she has a very quick release and she can hit it from deep."

Despite K-State's recent success on the road, Mahoney said Baylor is a tough team and a quality effort is needed if the Wildcats are to extend steal a win.

"Baylor is going to be a tough place to play, and they are a great team, so we just have to be focused and be tough mentally going in there," Mahoney said.

Surge of momentum

K-State looks to upset No. 10 Oklahoma State in Stillwater

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On paper, the odds will be stacked against the K-State Wildcats when they face Oklahoma State at 6 tonight in Stillwater, Okla.

Not only are the Cowboys the No. 10 team in the country, but they also own the nation's longest home-court winning streak at 25 games.

Then there's the fact that the Wildcats (13-4, 3-3) have not won at Gallagher-Iba Arena since Jan. 9, 1993, when K-State prevailed 75-62 in overtime.

But coming off a 64-53 win at Missouri that snapped nearly 20 years of losing in Columbia, the Wildcats are confident and ready to break another streak against the Cowboys (15-3, 5-2).

"It (the Missouri win) just gives us motivation going into Oklahoma State," senior forward Jeremiah Massey said.

"We have to go in and probably play the best game we have all year to beat those guys at home – and that's what we plan on doing."

The Wildcats come into tonight winners of three of their last four games and off to their best start since the 1995-96 season. They would equal last season's win total with a victory over the Cowboys.

In Massey, the team also boasts the reigning Big 12 Player of the Week. Last week, in wins over Iowa State and the Tigers, the Detroit native averaged 20 points and 8.5 rebounds.

Oklahoma State is the first nationally-ranked team K-State has faced this season, and the Cowboys present the Wildcats with a variety of challenges.

Heading into Tuesday night's Big 12 games, the Cowboys featured the Big 12's No. 1 and No. 2 scorers in senior forward Joey Graham at 18.5 points per game and senior guard John Lucas at 17.8 points a contest.

"They've got a good basketball team, so I don't know if we're going to focus on any individual more than anybody else," Massey said.

Senior forward Ivan McFarlin is the Cowboys' third player who scores in double digits (12.5 ppg), and yet another Cowboy threat has recently emerged.

On Sunday, freshman guard JamesOn Curry scored a career-high 22 points in his first start,

MICHAEL ASHFORD

It's safe to say K-State women's basketball is one of the top programs in the country.

K-State has become a fixture in the top 25 the last three seasons and has had All-Americans like Laurie Koehn, Kendra Wecker and Nicole Ohlde.

All the success the Wildcats have enjoyed since the 2001-02 season has translated into huge crowds at basketball games.

K-State has even registered seven sellouts over the last three years, with an enormous crowd of 13,466 at the Nebraska game on Jan. 12, 2002.

So while the team has produced on the court, and the fans have turned out in droves to watch, something is still lacking.

That something is the absence of a student section for the women's basketball games.

K-State women's basketball has gotten to the point that the students should receive their own section at the games.

As great as the atmosphere is at Bramlage Coliseum, it could be so much more if the students were given their own section.

Since 2001-02, K-State has lost just four times at home.

This is due not only to the amazing talent put on the court, but also the formidable atmosphere Bramlage presents to opponents because of the fans.

I am not suggesting five or six full sections of the arena's seating be dedicated to the students.

We all know large portions would go unfilled except for huge games like Texas or Kansas.

All I want is a section or two where the students can be allowed to stand at the games and make some noise without fear of disrupting the games for the older and younger fans in attendance.

Some may be concerned that a student section would take away from the more family-oriented atmosphere of the women's basketball games.

Many will look at the rowdy student section at the men's game and say there is no place for that in women's basketball.

I couldn't agree more.

There is no place at the women's games for some of the stuff that goes on at men's games, but I believe students are smart enough to realize this.

They know when just cheering and being loud is best, and when enough is enough.

For those fearing a student section would bring vulgar, crude and obscene antics to the women's games, I say give the students more credit before jumping to conclusions.

It has apparently worked at schools such as Iowa State, Texas and Texas Tech.

All three of those schools are perennial women's basketball powerhouses in the Big 12, and each one of those schools has a student section for their women's games.

All seem to be faring well.

I have to admit, as students, we have it pretty good.

We get into all the games for free, which is amazing in this day and age.

So while I don't want to sound ungrateful and rude, I still would like to see the students given their own section.

It would be a great move for the fans, the students and the team.

Oklahoma State consistent with Coach Sutton

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last time the K-State Wildcats played in Stillwater, Okla., Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton had never won a Big 12 Conference championship, had not been to the Final Four in seven years and Gallagher-Iba Arena's floor had not been named yet.

Sutton
OSU HEAD COACH

This year, all that has changed.

Along with winning his first conference championship and making a trip to the Final Four last season, Sutton was honored this season by having the Cowboys' home floor named after him.

"I was thrilled and very surprised," said Sutton, who was told of the honor after capturing his 768th career win Jan. 15. "It is quite an honor to have a court named after you, but it is especially gratifying for me since Oklahoma State is my alma mater."

Sutton, who is in his 35th year as a Division I coach and 15th season as the Cowboys coach, has been a model for consistency throughout his career.

Since taking over the Cowboys, Sutton has won 20 or more games and has taken his teams to the NCAA Tournament 12 times.

"He has done a magnificent job," K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge said. "It's hard to get to the top and then there is a new set of challenges once you get to the top."

Oklahoma State is currently five games away from the 20-win mark, which would be the Cowboys' eighth straight season with 20 or more wins, and are ranked No. 10 in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll.

Texas coach Rick Barnes said Sutton has been able to be successful because of his recruiting.

Saturday's men's matchup

(10-8, 2-5)

Colorado at K-State, 12:30 p.m.

(13-4, 3-3)

Wednesday match-up: Colorado at Texas Tech (12-5, 4-2)

Last time out:

Despite hitting a school-record 17 3-pointers, Colorado could not keep pace with then-No. 9 Oklahoma State in the second half, falling 104-86 on Sunday at home.

Colorado leaders:

Points	Rebounds	Assists
Guard — Richard Roby, FR	Forward — Julius Ashby, JR	Guard — Marcus Hall, SO
14.5 points per game	6.7 rebounds per game	4.0 assists per game

Series record - K-State leads 87-41

Last time K-State - Colorado met:

Jeremiah Massey had 23 points and 11 rebounds, but it was not enough, as Colorado beat K-State 72-62 on Feb. 21, 2004 at Bramlage Coliseum. The loss ensured a Colorado regular-season sweep over the Wildcats for the first time in four years.

Saturday's women's matchup

(6-11, 1-6)

OSU at K-State, 5 p.m.

(16-3, 7-1)

Tuesday matchup: Oklahoma State vs. Nebraska (12-7, 4-3)

Last time out:

The Cowgirls almost pulled off a monster upset on Saturday, but fell just short, losing to then-No. 7 Baylor 67-65 at home. Baylor won on two Steffanie Blackmon free throws with 0.9 seconds remaining.

Colorado leaders:

Rebounds	Rebounds	Rebounds
Guard — Nina Stone, SR	Guard — Nina Stone, SR	Guard — Devry McDonald
15.6 points per game	5.3 rebounds per game	2.2 assists per game

Series record - Oklahoma State leads 25-23

Last time K-State - Colorado met:

Kendra Wecker had 18 points, as K-State dominated Oklahoma State 76-44 on Jan. 13, 2004 in Stillwater, Okla. The Cowgirls shot a dismal 29 percent from the floor, while the Wildcats shot 47 percent and hit nine 3-pointers.

as Oklahoma State beat Colorado 104-86 on the road.

"Isn't there enough to worry about when you play those guys?" Head coach Jim Wooldridge said when asked about Curry's addition to a starting backcourt that already includes Lucas.

Probably so.

The vaunted Gallagher-Iba Arena has been a graveyard for all teams that have entered since Texas Tech pulled off a 62-57 win on Feb. 24, 2003.

Sophomore guard Fred Peete said he expects an intense environment.

"We know it's going to be hectic," Peete said. "The crowd is going to be loud. We know it's a great atmosphere to play in, so we've got to be ready for the crowd and ready to play."

Junior forward Marques Hayden – who is listed as out for tonight's game due to severe migraines – and senior forward Travis Canby are the only Wildcats who have gone with the team to Stillwater.

Massey said the Wildcats need to keep their focus despite the hostile environment.

"We got to go in there and play our game," Massey said. "We can't go in there and get intimidated and let the crowd get the best of us."

And what if the Wildcats can somehow pull off the win?

"Man, that'd really put us up there," freshman point guard and Oklahoma native Clent Stewart said. "It'd make a lot of teams notice K-State's for real. And that's what we want. We want teams to know that we're here to play, we're not going to lay down to anybody and we're going to stand up and hold our own in there."

SUTTON | Home court floor named after coach

"When you talk about great programs in this country, consistency is the real key and he has had consistently good teams," he said.

Although Wooldridge said he won't prepare his team any differently as they take on Sutton's Cowboys tonight, he recognizes that Sutton has a strong tradition for building winning teams.

"He has put together a good team this year and in years past," Wooldridge said.

"His players play hard and are well coached."

With a 104-86 victory over the Colorado Buffaloes on Sunday, Sutton picked up his 770th career victory and is going to continue to go with what works.

"I don't coach any different now than when I started," Sutton said.

"The play is a little faster now, but we still teach the players the same way we did when I first started coaching."

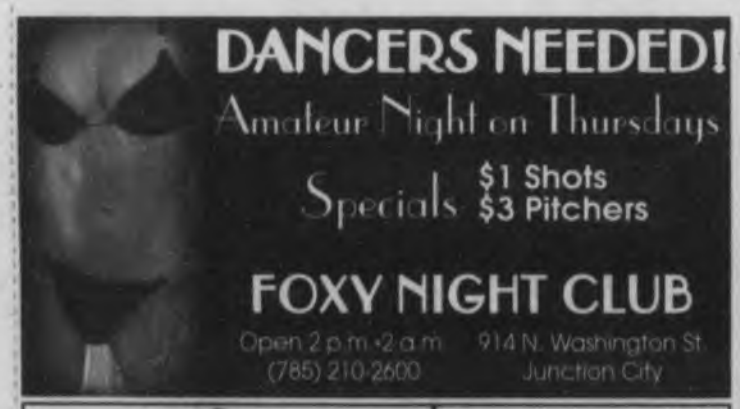
not stupid, she's an athlete and that's what they want and she's going to be incredible when she continues to get better and better.

"I want to win and that's all I really care about, and if that's what it takes, that's what it takes.

"It's not a shock or blow to my ego at all."



In Saturday's 81-70 win over Colorado in Boulder, Coggins had a career-high 25 points but the Wildcats struggled defensively without Wheeler, who missed the game because of a funeral.

It was the most points scored against the Wildcats since their Big 12 opening loss to Iowa State – a game in which Wheeler didn't start and played a total of just four minutes.

Coggins said Wheeler creates a lot of problems for opponents inside with her athleticism.

"Wheeler is a very athletic post player," Coggins said. "She creates a lot of havoc for the other team defensively.

"I don't know what it is with the two of us together but I think when she's in the game, she brings so many different elements and she is very hard to guard."

Bush vows to strengthen Social Security

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

President George W. Bush urged the Congress to "strengthen and save" Social Security during his State of the Union Address Wednesday night.

Bush vowed to work at diverting Social Security revenue into private investment accounts while ensuring a safe Social Security system for the young citizens of America.

Bush told citizens over the age of 55 not to worry, their Social Security system won't be changed. However, he said the young generation of America will have a serious problem with the Social Security system in the future.

"Your money will grow over time, at a greater rate than anything the current system can deliver," Bush told younger citizens.

Brett King, freshman in chemistry and member of College Republicans, said he appreciated Bush's focus on Social Security for the younger citizens.

"I really enjoyed it, especially being in that age bracket that won't at this point get full Social Security. The open options for stocks and bonds was an attainable goal," King said.

"If you believe Social Security will keep you through retirement, you should start to face the reality. Bush proposed some good arguments."

Cook Jones, senior in computer engineering and member of Young Democrats, said there is no way Bush's plan for Social Security policy can work.

"Any of his points on privatization, I know I can't agree with," Jones said. "He can do anything he wants as president,

Attempted mugging reported

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County Police said a Manhattan resident was reportedly the victim of an attempted mugging early Tuesday morning

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the victim, Paul Shin, 36, 1005 Kearney, was entering his home at about 12:29 a.m. when he was approached by three unknown males.

The suspects had a silver hand gun and demanded money, police said.

Police officers responded within one minute of receiving the call.

Nothing was reported taken from the victim, and an attempted aggravated robbery report was filed, Moldrup said in a press release.

The suspects are described as three men wearing dark, hooded sweatshirts, Moldrup said.

The case, he said, is still under investigation.

Finding a healthy balance

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Exercising for more than an hour and eating whole grains are some of the new ways to be healthy.

New dietary guidelines include exercising 60 to 90 minutes daily and eating more whole wheat, fruits and vegetables.

"Developing a healthy balance between food choice and physical activity is the basis of the new dietary guidelines," said U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Director of Media Affairs Christina Pearson.

The new guidelines, which include diet and exercising recommendations, were released Jan. 12. Pearson said they are important for federal funding.

"The dietary guidelines are the cornerstone of a lot of government programs," she said. "They are used to decide the food stamp program, the WIC (Women, Infants, and Children) program, the school lunch program, and the food guide pyramid."

Randall Phebus, associate professor of food science, said the guidelines are intended to fulfill a specific purpose.

"The goal of the guidelines is to promote a healthy diet and a healthy lifestyle," Phebus said.

Flu epidemic hits campus; Kansas officials report 1 death

By Abby White
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas health officials reported one death as the influenza activity reached the highest category of widespread designation in week three of flu season.

"The flu season always comes in December, January and February," said Dr. Jay Reppert, medical director of Lafene Health Center. "We don't know why; it could be seasonal weather changes or different activity levels," he said.

Influenza has been active on campus, with more students getting sick, Reppert said.

"We had a lot of cases start coming in 10 days ago," Reppert said. "It happens every year and is nothing to panic over," he said.

With the shortage of the vaccine earlier in the season and people who were unable to receive the vaccine, Reppert said there might be an increase in the number of people with the virus.

"It might have had some effect, but this is fairly standard," Reppert said.

When compared with past years, there hasn't been a noticeable increase as of yet.

"We don't know yet," said Chuck Murphy, director of the Riley County Health Department. "The Center for Disease Control gives informal data, and it's not reportable disease."

So far, the increase has been what is expected.

"Even with no shortage, we still have an epidemic every year that lasts for three or four weeks," Reppert said.

Kansas and 14 other states, including Colorado and Texas, have been designated to widespread level of flu activity.

"I'd say we're pretty close to the peak of the season," Murphy said.

Murphy said people can still

King Hall fire caused by chemistry experiment waste

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tuesday night's fire in King Hall was caused by materials left from a lab experiment, the Chemistry Department head said Wednesday.

The fire was the second in the past year caused by the same circumstances, department head Eric Maatta said.

"There was no danger to students, but we found something that wasn't mentioned in the published experiment."

K-State instructors taught the experiment that caused the fire, originally found in the Chemical Education Journal, as part of Chemistry 2 curriculum. The experiment involved combining a copper penny with zinc to create copper.

The department will no longer teach the experiment, Maatta said.

Earline Dikeman, director of undergraduate chemistry labs, and chemist Brenda Luther found Wednesday that zinc residue on paper towels caused a chemical reaction that ignited the fires.

Dikeman and Luther will write a letter to the Chemical Education Journal describing their findings to try to prevent others from experiencing similar problems, Maatta said.

Maatta said he expects the results to be published in the next two to three months.

The fire caused about $500 damage to a trash can and experiment station in King 103. Both fires originally were blamed on improperly discarded matches, but Maatta said the research helped prevent similar problems in the future.

"I'm glad our people were diligent enough to go back and uncover this through experiment," Maatta said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Plane crashes
A corporate jet skidded off a runway Wednesday on takeoff and hurtled across a six-lane highway during the morning rush hour, smashing into two cars and punching through the wall of a warehouse. Two people were injured in their cars, which added to the 20 people hospitalized. The crash occurred at Teterboro Airport in New Jersey.

Interest rates increased
The Federal Reserve pushed short-term interest rates higher Wednesday, part of a campaign begun last June and expected to continue well into this year to keep inflation and the economy on an even keel. The interest rates were raised to 2.5 percent, one-quarter of a percent higher.

Kansas considers casino
Gambling lobbyists trotted out a new proposal for state-owned casinos on Wednesday, arguing they would provide more money for education while tapping into a lucrative tourism industry. A lobbyist for the Kansas Greyhound Association said that the casinos could save the state $150 million in revenue over the next year, beginning July 1.

USD 383 hires superintendent

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bob Shannon has been selected as the new Superintendent of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

The school board made the announcement at its meeting Wednesday.

Shannon is replacing Sharol Little, who will retire on July 1. His contract is for two years.

As superintendent, Shannon's salary will be $125,000, which is an $8,000 dollar increase. The school board also approved full family health insurance, 20 days of vacation and 12 days sick leave annually.

Shannon received his bachelor's degree in zoology at the University of Nebraska in Lincoln, Neb.

He continued his education there, receiving both a masters and doctorate in educational administration.

He's coming to USD 383 from McPherson USD 418 where he now serves as superintendent.

He has been the superintendent there for 16 years.

Before Shannon was a superintendent, he worked in other administrative positions and as a science teacher.

Shannon was also a founding member of the McPherson Community Education Foundation, which has currently raised $300,000.

The money is divided into grant awards for teachers.

The school board was pleased with the community's help and support on making this decision.

School board President Walt Pesaresi mentioned their willingness to attend public information meetings and fill out forms to give feed back. Public meetings were held twice for each interview.

"I'd like to thank everyone who came out to help pick the new superintendent," Pesaresi said.

School board approves sales tax plan; proposal could raise $5.4 million

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A question that may appear on the April 5 ballot got one step closer to being finalized at the school board meeting Wednesday night.

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board passed the amended version of their sales tax proposal.

The original bill planned for the district to earn $1.8 million annually for three years by increasing the sales tax by 0.25 percent.

The City Commission wasn't comfortable with the possible amount the tax could raise and put a cap on the amount the district can earn at its meeting Tuesday evening.

Instead of having the tax for three years, the new bill says the City Commission will be able to step in and stop the tax after the $5.4 million, which it is supposed to earn, has been raised.

"We don't receive one dollar less, so if this makes the commission more comfortable, it's in the best interest of the kids," Randy Martin, school board member, said.

The school board also called on trust and support for the tax from the city.

"There's a lack of trust in this city," David Colburn, school board vice president said.

"If we want to make this city better, we have to trust each other.

"It's time to start seeing the good things."

The proposal is now being sent back to the City Commission for a second reading.

If they approve it, it will be added to the April 5 ballot.

Local religious leaders pray for pope's health

By Annie Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The hospitalization of Pope John Paul II brought concern and prayers from the citizens of Manhattan.

The Rev. Larry Grennan said they would include prayers for his healing from the intercession of St. Blas, and it will be included in the prayers at Mass.

"We will pray that Jesus' healing grace will touch his life," he said.

His sudden hospitalization did not come as a surprise, Grennan said, because it is the nature of his age and Parkinson's disease. The respect John Paul has received was hard earned, Grennan said.

"He made an effort to go to all corners of the globe, he was the first pope to reach out," he said. "He spoke out for justice and the impoverished."

David Jones, campus pastor of Crossroads ECM, said people of all faiths revere John Paul.

"He is a well-respected leader of the church worldwide," he said. "He is respected by Protestants and Catholics around the world."

Jones said the response to John Paul's illness would be more personal for Catholics than Protestants.

"It is still important for Protestants to hold their Catholic brothers and sisters in the prayers," he said. "His life does mean a lot to them, and you can't just ignore that."

Director of Christian Challenge Bob Anderson said that when John Paul does die, there will be incredibly big shoes to fill.

"He has such a great past that no one can duplicate it," he said. "But someone else can contribute greatly in their own way."

A ..great lesson to learn from John Paul's life, Anderson said, is that everyone has a journey to walk and he walked his well.

"We have a choice of what place God will hold in our life," he said. "The little speck of time we live will effect how eternity will be for us."

When John Paul does die, Grennan said the selection of a new Pope will be a serious decision.

"He is the head of all bishops around the world," he said. "He stands for the authority of the church and he is the head person of all administration."

When a new pope is needed, the College of Cardinals are called in from around the world. They elect a new pope as soon as it is feasible to travel and meet together.

TO THE POINT

Prison program gives needed 2nd chance

Everyone deserves a second chance, but too often, not enough people get a first chance.

The Graduate Equivalency Degree preparation at the Riley County Jail gives inmates a chance to improve themselves and society.

Research shows a correlation between the amount of education one receives and the likelihood of that person committing crimes. By improving the inmates' education, the program offers them a new chance at finding a positive niche in society.

Sgt. Diahann Frazier began the program with a small donation from Wal-Mart in 2001, and has continued to help prepare inmates for a chance at future success.

University students often have relatively decent lives with limitless opportunities. Societal forces, however, do not afford everyone these same opportunities.

Financial and social situations can place others at a disadvantage early in life. It sometimes takes dedicated people to step up and devote themselves to helping others.

The Riley County Jail and those who work with the program should be commended for making the GED program successful in a community generally considered too small to make it work.

Through programs like Riley County's GED preparation program, we can all give a little of ourselves to prop up others and give them the chance they deserve.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Value of differences

Diversity concepts cheapen individuality, waste of tuition

GRANT REICHERT

"To treat people as objects, as though they are the residuum of their race, class, gender and other such superficialities, and not individuals who define themselves through their ideas and creative acts – that is injustice."

This excerpt from Peter Wood's "Diversity: The Invention of a Concept" is a pithy summary of my last column. The next day, as if to illustrate my point, a Fourum commenter observed that I was just another "white male, complaining about diversity."

I wasn't an individual, whose argument should be examined on its merits; rather, I had the bar codes of "race" and "gender" stamped on my forehead, with my opinions judged accordingly.

This reality of "diversity" is worrisome, and its future is even more so.

During a student panel on diversity last semester, a panel member said he wanted "mandatory diversity classes" and, frighteningly, the professors in the audience cheered the idea.

Because of such ominous hints, "diversity" should be engaged.

Diversophiles say a racially and gender diverse student population aids everyone's education. I deny this, as the content of one's character is infinitely more important than physical characteristics, and these characteristics certainly don't indicate depth or type of character in any way, despite the beliefs of diversophiles. I'm benefited most when the people next to me are qualified, not when they possess arbitrary physical traits.

Even if "diversity" added to my education, it's not my right to insist my peers have certain physical characteristics. Others aren't here for my benefit. This would be using minorities as a means to an end; are they simply the tool by which the white majority may achieve "diversity?"

Diversophiles also make the business case: an increasingly multicultural world requires an increasingly multicultural workforce.

Thomas Kochan, a professor at MIT's Sloan School of Management, conducted a five-year study of diversity's impact on business, and he summed up his research in the April 2003 addition of "Workforce": "The diversity industry is built on sand. The business case rhetoric for diversity is simply naïve and overdone."

Stanley Rothman, Seymour Martin Lipset and Neil Nevitte, in the Spring 2003 edition of the "The Public Interest," wrote about their study of universities with "diversity" programs, noting that "enrollment diversity was inversely related to faculty satisfaction with the quality of education, the work effort of the student body, and the academic readiness of students."

They concluded: "Obscuring existing problems by trumpeting ever louder the benefits of diversity is no way to help students of any race."

With tuition climbing, we should question the efficacy of "diversity." Should each college on campus have its own "diversity" committee? Does that help my education? Is a faux-diversity of racial representation superior to a real diversity based on the inviolable sanctity of the individual?

I would hate to be a cog in the "diversity" machine. I couldn't bear the soul-crushing discouragement of having my achievements continually dismissed as merely "adding to diversity," or being analyzed through the prism of my race and gender rather than my individuality.

What generalizations would people draw of me? Would they assume I was a "diversity hire," not truly qualified for my position?

Would they believe diversophile notions that I must represent every other member of my race with my actions, and thus be represented by others in turn? Is this not the definition of racism: encouraging others to draw generalizations from the attitudes of the few and extrapolate them to the many?

The end result of "diversity" is conformity: conformity of individuals to a group identity, of society to a rigid pattern of proportional representation, and of thought to an inflexible, monotonous ideology.

Whatever your opinion, I ask only that you question it.

Diversity in education encourages further understanding, peace

AARON DUNCAN

I am sure that Grant, as a white male from Kansas, is a well-qualified expert on the subject of diversity. However, being that I am a white male from Nebraska, I am infinitely more qualified to discuss the subject. You may not know this, but Nebraska is a bastion of diversity; we grow wheat and corn.

The irony of two middle-class, white men discussing this topic is not lost on me. Nonetheless, I feel that someone must stand up for the ideals of diversity. After all, diversity in higher education is such a compelling issue that the Fulton County (Georgia) Daily Report of December 15, 2004, recalled that the U.S. Supreme Court decided in a recent case involving the University of Michigan's law school that the state has a compelling interest in ensuring a diverse student body.

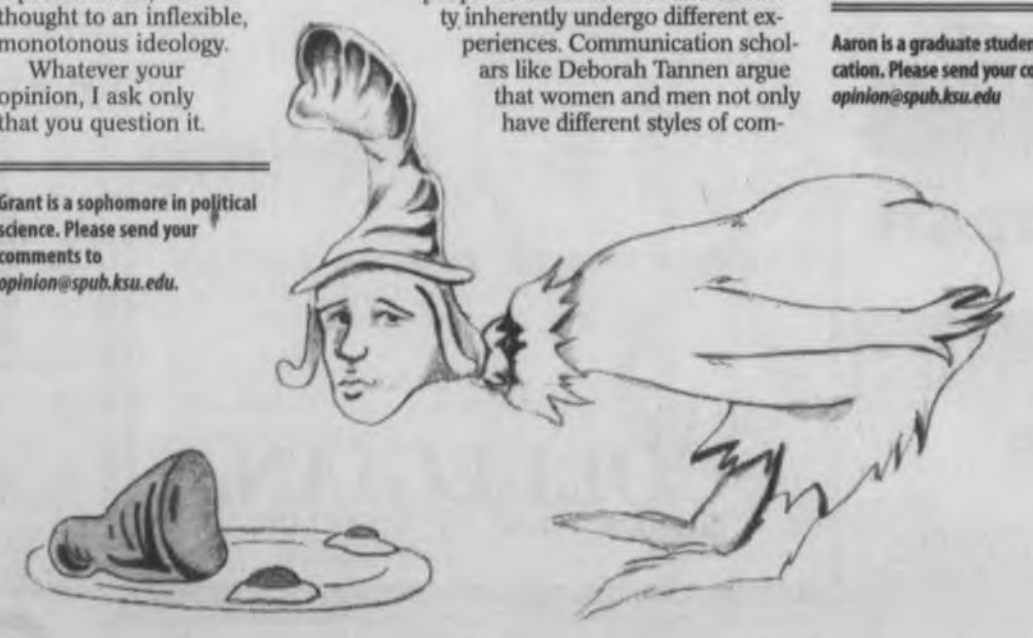
The case centered on a group of white students who brought a suit against the law school, which had awarded extra points in the application process to students in racial minorities.

Remember that this Supreme Court is one of the most conservative in memory. Additionally, the case was so important that many of America's top Fortune 500 companies filed "friends of the court briefs" defending diversity.

Last week, Grant argued that we need less racial and ethnic diversity and more diversity of opinion. However, there are several flaws in his argument. First, he operates under the false assumption that affirmative action and other diversity initiatives require quotas. This is simply not true, because the Supreme Court ruled that quotas were unconstitutional in 1978.

Second, he fails to realize that people of different races and ethnicity inherently undergo different experiences. Communication scholars like Deborah Tannen argue that women and men not only have different styles of communication, but also different perspectives on the world. Other intercultural communication scholars and anthropologists have the same perspective on people of different races and ethnicity.

For example, some cultures have a communal perspective that clashes directly with the American individualistic culture. Interaction between these cultures fosters understanding between them and exposure to unique ways of problem solving.



Even people who might appear to be of a similar culture and background can have fundamentally different perspectives. For example, a minority student from my high school and with my socioeconomic background would have a very different perspective of attending a predominately white school than I have.

In his last column, Grant clamored for more differences of viewpoint, which he likened to having more Metallica fans. Such an analogy between someone's ethnic or racial identity and someone's musical preferences is not only terribly misguided but demeaning to those individuals' identities. Grant fails to understand the depth and breadth of those individuals' experiences.

I doubt that Grant can offer a single example where society suffered from having too much diversity. Wars are fought all over the world because people don't understand each others' religions and cultures. I know that K-State isn't the United Nations Headquarters, but if we can have just a little more understanding, why wouldn't we do it?

Grant reminds me of that Dr. Seuss character who refuses to eat green eggs and ham, even though he's never actually experienced them and doesn't know what he's missing. Maybe one day he will experience the benefits of diversity, and, like the poor, misguided character in "Green Eggs and Ham," he'll change his ways.

No, I am god of Mario Tennis.

Hey, could you guys turn the heat down at the Rec a little bit? It's ridiculously hot in there. Thanks.

The reason America hasn't embraced nudity is because people like Jeremy Parker are so ugly.

My favorite place of all to poo is in the Union on floor number two.

What happens when you have multiple Tri-Delts in a line-up? Which one's the hot one?

I'd just like to say that there is a good way to break up with someone, and it does not include an e-mail.

So it's 12:30 in the morning on Wednesday, and I'm high on my way to Abilene to buy a vibrator with a gay guy and a virgin.

Hey Jeremy Parker: just because you have no decency or tact doesn't mean that we extreme conservatives have to get rid of those unnecessaries like clothes. And you're still a tool.

I, for one, think that the lesbian mannequins in the KSU bookstore in the Union are hot.

Expectations cause stress

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Parents with high expectations for their children may be inducing depression, anxiety, suicide and binge drinking during college, according to a study by www.psychologytoday.com.

Sherry Benton, assistant director of the University Counseling Services, said the study could have some truth to it.

"The number of students coming here with anxiety has doubled, and the students with depression has tripled within the past 15 years," Benton said.

However, Benton said the emphasis is on the wrong problem.

"Folks are upset about binge drinking, that's a problem that hasn't quite changed in the last 15 years," Benton said. "That proportion has not changed, it's stayed remarkably consistent, but it doesn't mean it's not a problem."

According to the study, parents expect only the best from their children; failure is not in their vocabulary. As children grow up and school gets more challenging, the fear of disappointing parents becomes greater.

Heather Reed, assistant director of student life, said parents are not the only ones contributing escalating stress levels of students.

"I think our society has become more competitive for college entrance and work world," Reed said. "There is more competition and parents try to prepare their children for it."

Benton also inspects the phenomenon.

"We see a pattern, students take more hours in school, they start living at an incredible stress level," Benton said. "It'll go from very high stress and form into an anxiety disorder, and that's a really dangerous pattern."

Nick Arena, junior in political science, didn't experience this with his parents.

"I put more pressure on myself to succeed than my parents," Arena said. "I do believe that college students are more pressured in today's society than before, it's such a hyper competitive society."

Joann Arena, Nick's mother, said the pressure from parents toward their kids has increased.

"I feel sorry for kids now," said Joann Arena. "It's hard financially, by the time they get out of college they are so much in debt."

The theory discussed never becoming independent and relying on parents to solve problems.

"In the past, people just did what felt right to them," Reed said. "Now students want to check with our family, and they're also checking with us every hour."

Expecting a lot from children is good, as long as the parents aren't overly protective, Benton said.

"It's really important to allow kids to individuate, don't run interference with the kid all the time," Benton said. "Before you go off to college you have to have room to make mistakes."

Milestones in aviation history met with new technology, aircraft

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina will sponsor an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

By Jeremy Dautenhahn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Burt Rutan knows the way into the record books.

In 1986 Burt's brother, Dick Rutan, successfully flew the Voyager around the world nonstop without refueling with copilot Jeana Yeager. Burt Rutan, the world renowned aviation designer, devoted five years to designing and building the plane.

Burt Rutan and his company, Scaled Composites, also designed the Global Flyer.

The Virgin Atlantic Global Flyer funded by Virgin Atlantic chairman Richard Branson will likely lift off into the record books next week.

With the date for the Global Flyer mission now approaching, it is a good time to look back in to the aviation history books at previous around the world flying attempts.

In 1949, 15 U.S. Air Force pilots successfully flew nonstop around the earth in the Lucky Lady II, making four refueling stops during the flight.

Steve Faucet, the pilot of the Global Flyer, became the first person to solo-circumnavigate the globe in a balloon on July 2, 2002 after failing five previous around the world attempts.

Sometime between Feb. 8 and Feb. 11, Steve will attempt to fly solo, without refueling around the earth.

The mission will be completed in less than 80 hours and will start and finish in Salina.

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of College of Technology and Aviation at K-State-Salina said Global Flyer's attempt to break the record may be it for aviation.

"This will be one of the last aviation records of its type that will ever be set. From here forward most new records are all going to be space related," said Kuhlman.

If Faucet is successful, this will become his 63rd official world record.

Since 1903, aviation records have been set. Milestones in the field of aviation continue to be broken as new aircraft are built and more sophisticated technologies are discovered.

On April 6, 1924, a group of American pilots set out from Seattle in an attempt to circumnavigate the globe in four Douglas World Cruiser biplanes. Two of the four planes completed the adventure 175 days later, becoming the first aircraft to fly around the world.

In 1933, American pilot Wiley Post became the first person to fly solo around the world. He completed this feat in only seven days with the help of advances in technology including an automatic pilot and radio direction finder.

In 1937, Amelia Earhart, a former resident of Atchison, Kan., attempted to be the first woman to fly around the world.

The attempt was unsuccessful and led to her disappearance when her plane was lost in flight somewhere over the Pacific.

Geraldine Mock completed Earhart's mission and became the first woman to fly around the world in 1964.

1986 - Dick Rutan and Jeana Yeager successfully flew around the world nonstop without refueling

Education program helps inmates improve lives

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sgt. Diahann Frazier spends every Thursday evening at the Riley County Jail, but she's not filing paperwork or booking prisoners. Instead, she's helping inmates improve their lives.

Thanks to an inmate literacy program and Graduate Equivalency Degree preparation course, inmates are learning skills that could help them once they return to the real world.

Frazier said these programs help inmates improve their skills, no matter how much or how little time they spend working.

"It doesn't matter when they're coming out," Frazier said. "If they're doing the homework, they can't help but improve."

Frazier began the programs shortly after she joined the Riley County Police Department in May 2001. With no budget for the programs, Frazier solicited money and paid for things out of her own pocket until Wal-Mart awarded the program a $1,000 grant.

Inmates in the GED course prepare to take the GED test once they are released. The program includes grammar, writing, reading and building a resume.

Along with Frazier, several student volunteers from Manhattan Christian College teach the course. Volunteering at the jail counts toward the 16 hours of community service.

Participating in the programs have benefits for the inmates.

"You can see an increase in their self-esteem because they've accomplished something," she said.

Steffan Staley, senior in pastoral ministry at Manhattan Christian College and one of the program's volunteers, said the program gives inmates a new opinion of themselves.

"It helps them believe they're not just criminals, they're writers and other things of that nature," Staley said. "I think the program gives them something to put their pride in."

Frazier said the program also gives the inmates something to do in their free time. Inmates in the literacy program are given homework, books to read and personal diaries to write in outside of class.

Captain Jeff Hooper said programs like this are rare, and even more so in jails with fewer than 100 inmates.

"I don't know of any jails in Kansas that have these programs," he said, "especially in jails of this size."

Both Frazier and Staley said they benefit from the program as well.

"My goal was only to see what I could do to help," Frazier said.

"It's always a good feeling to see someone accomplish things."

EA games creates NFL competition

NATHAN RYERSON

EA Games is trying its best to create a video game monopoly.

EA currently makes some of the most popular video games on store shelves to date.

Among these titles is the coveted Madden football franchise.

The Madden video game series has had little competition over the years until recently, when ESPN decided to throw its hat into the NFL video game arena and give EA some competition.

They succeeded by teaming with Sega games to create a football game that retails at only $19.99, which is $30 less than the Madden titles.

The price of ESPN sports games caused EA to lower prices to compete.

Honestly, I loved the ESPN NFL game.

It is the best professional football video game I have played to date.

Problem is, EA decided it had enough competition.

It signed a contract with the NFL, receiving exclusive rights to NFL players and names for use in video games.

Sorry ESPN, you had your shot and did your best, which was better than I could have expected.

So that's the story, right?

Not quite.

As a lover of sports video games, I feel that I should have a choice of NFL games to play.

John Madden has haunted my nightmares for years, and his addition to Monday Night Football only made it worse.

ESPN gave me relief from this massive icon. It gave me a choice.

Now, to top it all off, ESPN has been swallowed up by Madden, too.

ESPN has signed a 15-year partnership with EA, giving it access to ESPN's broadcast, magazine and online content. It also gets to use any of ESPN's personalities.

This, friends, is the only upside to the deal.

Madden has only one more year on his contract with EA games.

After that, it is up for negotiation, and hopefully he will not re-sign.

Another problem with my dream of a Madden-less EA sports game is that he is a part of the ESPN family with Monday Night Football, which may give him a reason to re-sign with EA.

Many of you may disagree with my opinion of Madden – he was a good coach, but he should have left it at that.

What other upsides come out of this deal?

Simply put, all the X-Games junkies around the world will get their fix.

EA has said that it's in the process of developing games based on ESPN's X-Games.

EA is also thinking of developing some games based on ESPN's bass fishing programming.

I don't know about you, but I am going to go out and reserve my copy of that one right away.

Overall, this move may end up bettering the world of professional sports games, but as of today, I am very disappointed.

I like to have a choice in which video games I play, and just because I like one kind of game doesn't mean I want some large video game developer making my decision for me.

Madden has his fans, but I like Chris Berman doing the intro and having some announcers who say something slightly funny once in a while.

K-State women lose after battling Baylor

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's hot streak on the road finally cooled off Wednesday night.

After upsetting then-No. 10 Texas Tech in Lubbock on Jan. 22, and winning a hard-fought battle over Colorado last Saturday, the No. 15 Wildcats could not extend their road winning streak to three games, losing 72-62 to No. 8 Baylor in Waco, Texas Wednesday night.

"We just didn't step up tonight," Associate head coach Kamie Ethridge said. "You have to be better than that against a top-10 team."

Even though K-State (16-4, 7-2) shot 44 percent from the field to Baylor's 38 percent, the Wildcats still lost, as they were out-rebounded 44-30 and had just six offensive rebounds to the Bears' 19.

Ethridge said Baylor's (16-3, 6-2) rebounding edge was too much for K-State to handle.

Seniors Kendra Wecker, Laurie Koehn and Megan Mahoney each scored 12 points, while Wecker collected eight rebounds to lead the K-State (16-4, 7-2).

Baylor (16-3, 6-2) got 21 points from Steffanie Blackmon, and Sophia Young collected her Big 12-leading 10th double-double of the season with 15 points and 13 rebounds to help lead the Bears past K-State.

Turnovers	16	15
Leading scorer	3 tied 12	Blackmon 21
Leading rebounder	K. Wecker 8	S. Young 13

Ethridge said the Wildcats had a hard time recovering from their poor first half.

"I think you could point to the first half of us not playing a very aggressive first half," she said. "We just fell apart offensively. You can lose a game in the first half in the sense that it's hard to make up 10 and 12 points in the course of the game.

"Bottom line is they were the more aggressive team."

The loss dropped K-State to third place in the Big 12 standings, behind Iowa State and Texas Tech, who each sit at 6-1 in the conference.

K-State returns home to face Oklahoma State this Saturday hoping to regroup from its tough loss on the road.

K-State falls in 2nd half to No. 10 OSU

STILLWATER, Okla. – For a little more than a half on Wednesday night, the K-State Wildcats looked as if they might have a chance at temporarily ending No. 10 Oklahoma State's dominance at home.

But a 17-3 second-half run by the Cowboys (16-3, 6-2) put the Wildcats away, as Oklahoma State won 77-57 at Gallagher-Iba Arena, extending the nation's longest home winning streak to 26 games.

K-State (13-5, 3-4) lost despite 25 points and eight rebounds from senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

"The difference in the game was the fact that we couldn't generate enough offense to stay with them as we moved towards the end of the ball game," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "We just couldn't find enough offense."

Massey, the reigning Big 12 Player of the Week, had dominated the second half in the Wildcats' previous two victories against Iowa State and Missouri, but on this night, the Detroit native excelled before halftime.

Scoring 12 of the Wildcats' final 13 points of the first half to keep the Cowboy lead at 36-30, Massey was 7-of-9 from the field and 4-of-4 from the free-throw line for 18 points heading into the break.

"We were getting the ball to the open guy in the first half," Massey said. "I was able to score in the first half, and that helped us get into the game, and we just couldn't do the same thing in the second half."

The second half was far from smooth for Massey and the Wildcats, though it started in fine fashion.

A dunk by sophomore center Tyler Hughes capped a 7-2 Wildcat run that cut the Oklahoma State lead to 38-37 with 16:28 to play.

"We felt like we had something going," freshman point guard Clent Stewart said. "We felt like we had a good chance to come out here and get a win."

However, it was downhill from there.

Oklahoma State's senior backcourt of John Lucas and Daniel Bobik lit up the Wildcats in the second half with several back-breaking 3-pointers.

Wooldridge said fatigue was a factor in Massey's lack of second-half production.

"He got tired," Wooldridge said. "It was a very physical ball game, and I think the physicality of the game wears on him. I thought he did fight it tonight, though."

Peete and sophomore forward Cartier Martin were the only Wildcats besides Massey to have a significant offensive impact, scoring 14 and 11 points, respectively.

The Wildcats will now return to Manhattan as they prepare for Saturday's game against Colorado at Bramlage Coliseum.

Wooldridge said the Wildcats can take some positives out of Wednesday night's performance.

"This game stretched us as a team, and I thought we showed some real competitiveness ourselves," Wooldridge said.

Football team signs recruits; Snyder happy with new class

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football team welcomed its newest members Wednesday on National Signing Day, which began the period where high school and junior college recruits can sign a national letter of intent to play at the college of their choice.

K-State head coach Bill Snyder announced the Wildcats signed 20 new athletes – including 13 on the defensive side of the ball – to play football in Manhattan.

"We have attempted to find young student-athletes who fit our needs for the future," Snyder said in a released statement.

Wednesday marked the culmination of weeks and months the K-State football coaches spent recruiting and traveling across the nation to visit potential recruits and evaluate talent.

"I think we addressed every need," K-State assistant coach and recruiting coordinator Joe Bob Clements said.

In this year's class, the Wildcats signed five defensive linemen to help ease the loss of departed seniors Jermaine Berry, Kevin Huntley and Andrew Bulman.

One of the Wildcats' most prized gets this recruiting season comes on the offensive side, as quarterback Kevin Lopina from De La Salle High School in Concord, Calif., committed to K-State after visiting Manhattan Jan. 14.

Lopina, who switched to K-State after he originally committed to Oregon State, is the 18th-ranked dual-threat quarterback according to Rivals100.com.

To sum up K-State's 2005 recruiting class, Snyder said the players signed have been successful on and off the field.

"This is a class of fine young men who appear to be of quality character and who have expressed a genuine interest in their education," Snyder said. "Their football and athletic skills have been proven at the schools from which they have made a name for themselves."

NHL | NHL makes new offer to players' association

NEW YORK — The NHL made its latest salary cap offer to the players' association on Wednesday when talks aimed at ending the season-long lockout resumed.

Commissioner Gary Bettman and union head Bob Goodenow again were absent as the sides met for the fifth time in two weeks. But the session featured the first proposal since mid-December, when the league and union traded offers five days apart.

The NHL proposed a six-year deal that contained a cap that would force teams to spend at least $32 million on player salaries but no more than $42 million. Both figures would be adjusted each year to reflect changes in league revenues.

NFL | Dolphins wide receiver pleads no contest

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Miami Dolphins wide receiver David Boston pleaded no contest Wednesday to a charge that he struck a ticket agent at the Burlington International Airport in October.

Boston

Boston's attorney Douglas Kallen said his client was ordered to pay a $500 fine and $211 in restitution.

Boston, who missed the entire NFL season with a knee injury, was accused of hitting a U.S. Airways employee in the face on Oct. 19 after the agent refused to let him to board a plane. Boston said the agent caused him to miss his flight and had spit in his face.

CFB | Sugar Bowl working on new deal with BCS

NEW ORLEANS — The Sugar Bowl, along with the Orange and Fiesta Bowls began negotiating new contracts with the BCS on Wednesday.

Sugar Bowl executive director Paul Hoolahan is sure the new agreement will be worked out. He's also sure it will be costly.

"It's safe to say that, unquestionably, they will be expecting a higher payout from us, and quite possibly a significantly higher payout," said Hoolahan.

Starting in 2006 the BCS will add a fifth bowl to the Sugar, Orange, Fiesta and Rose bowls. Each of the bowls will host a game, then one of the five will host the championship game approximately a week later.

Also, starting in 2006, Fox will take over televising all of the BCS bowls except the Rose Bowl. ABC retains rights to the Rose Bowl and the title game when it is played in Pasadena, Calif.

NBA | Tomjanovich officially steps down as Lakers' coach

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. —Rudy Tomjanovich has resigned midway through his first season as coach of the Los Angeles Lakers.

Mitch Kupchak met with Tomjanovich at his home Monday after the coach missed Sunday's game because he did not feel well. The conversation led Kupchak to believe Tomjanovich would resign his coaching position.

Tomjanovich

Tomjanovich addressed the team Wednesday and stepped down as coach.

Tomjanovich said there were no outside influences, no disagreements with players or the Lakers that led to the resignation.

CBB | Pierce dismissed from Iowa basketball team

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Iowa basketball star Pierre Pierce was kicked off the team Wednesday while under investigation by West Des Moines police for intent to commit sexual abuse, burglary and other crimes at the home of a former girlfriend.

"Effective immediately, Pierre Pierce has been dismissed from the University of Iowa men's basketball team," coach Steve Alford said in a statement. "I regret this step has become necessary, but Pierre has betrayed the trust we placed in him when he was given a second chance two years ago."

In 2002, Pierce was charged with third-degree sexual abuse. He later pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of assault causing injury, but the case and the way in which it was handled by university administrators triggered two faculty-led inquiries.

Textured layers, bold cuts in style for spring haircuts

If winter weather is beginning to take a toll on your attitude, changing your look with a new do for spring could be the solution.

New styles for spring are textured and piecey, Cheryl Wilson, owner of Crimpers, said.

"Messy is in for both women and men this spring," Wilson said. "It's not a bed-head look, but lots of movement is in."

Wilson said bangs have also made a comeback for women, but they should not be heavy or blunt.

Stylists from Crimpers and Hair Experts Salon & Spa spent three days this month learning new styles and techniques at the Redken Symposium in Las Vegas.

Amy Watson, designer at Hair Experts, said she agreed with Wilson.

"We saw longer, not-as-groomed styles for men," Watson said, "and big, bold styles for women."

Color this season is also bold, but not as stripy as it has been in the past, Wilson said.

"We call it a wave of color," she said.

Most salons offer free consultations to help clients choose stylish looks that fit their lifestyles.

"We use the consultation to try to get to know the client," said Erica Nufer, stylist and nail technician at Shear Dynamics. "We look at stylebooks and find out how much time they want to spend on their style."

For women who want style but don't like to spend a lot of time on their 'do, Wilson suggests a shag-inspired style.

"With a shag, the look is done with the cut and color, so it is really low-maintenance," Wilson said.

For those not ready for a drastic change but still wanting an update, there are several solutions.

Adding all-over color or highlights is an obvious option, or, for women who don't want to mess with color, adding long layers or bangs is an alternative, Nufer said.

Styles to watch out for when heading to the salon are blunt, overly clean-cut styles, Wilson said.

"The diagonal forward look or blunt bobs are over for women," Wilson said. "Spiky, straight up from the forehead should be avoided for men."

As for the right products to use when finishing a style, everyone should consider their hair's texture, Watson said.

For most people, texturizing wax can help achieve the piecey look and add volume and shine.

Hair Experts offers Aquage products that work well for women.

For men, Watson suggests Redken Get Groomed, which offers light hold without being stiff. Shear Dynamics offers a Matrix line called Trix, which is designed for younger people.

For an all-over attitude adjustment, salons offer more than hair styling. Most salons offer eyebrow waxing and coloring.

"Lots of people try eyebrow color," Watson said. "Having the right color can really improve your look and make your eyes stand out."

For the more daring, Crimpers specializes in the Brazilian bikini wax and offers a special on heart-shaped bikini waxes in February.

Compromising values, lack of self confidence signs of relationship's end

LACEY STORER

Throughout my high school and college years, I've seen numerous relationships, both my own and those of my friends. I've seen the romantic beginnings, the painful endings and everything in between.

One thing I've noticed over the years is how willing people are to stick through all the bad times and to fight for their relationship. This is understandable when you have something that is worth fighting for. But the scary part is, these relationships weren't always worth it.

When you're in love, it can be hard to tell yourself that things might not be as right as they should be. You don't always want to see that being single might be better than being with your partner.

Based on the bad relationships I've seen, I have come up with some signs that can tell you whether you're in a good relationship. If you recognize your relationship in any of these examples, it's time to call it quits.

1. Your partner never has time for you. It's one thing to be busy and have to squeeze in time for each other between classes, work and sleep. But if your partner continually has time for other people or things, but hardly ever for you, something is wrong. Another sign is if he or she gets overly mad at you for mentioning this lack of time together. Happy couples should want to spent time together and should be willing to make time for each other.

2. What you want is always being compromised. A healthy relationship is when you care about what your partner wants and vice versa. It's not a good sign if you find that you are repeatedly giving up your wants to make your partner happy. A relationship is about both parties compromising to make each other happy. If you are the only one giving up anything, then your partner doesn't really care about what you want or about making you happy.

3. You spend more time fighting and making up than having an actual relationship. Sure, making up can be fun, but that shouldn't be the only good part of your relationship. If you spend more time fighting, yelling and crying because the two of you can't get along, then why are you still together? Same goes for couples that break up a couple times a week. If you guys are continually on-again, off-again, the best thing to do would be to stay off.

4. You feel bad about yourself. The one thing you should get out of a relationship is feeling good about yourself, because you are with someone who loves you just the way you are. It's an instant self-esteem booster. In a good relationship, your partner should always make you feel like the hottest, smartest, funniest person in the world. If, however, being together makes you doubt just how cool you are and how much worth you have as a person, you're with the wrong person.

5. You start liking other people. It's normal to have little crushes on people or be a bit flirty at times, but you shouldn't be catching yourself thinking about how much you want to make out with that hottie from class. If you find yourself having serious fantasies about dating someone else, that's a definite sign you are wanting to move on.

So there are a few signs that can clue you in to how good – or bad – your relationship is. The bottom line is that your relationship should make you happy more often than it makes you sad, and your partner should make you feel good about yourself. If none of this is happening, you need to end it.

Local coffee shops offer wireless Internet service

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wireless Internet will soon be available in a new place in Manhattan.

The Hardback Cafe, the coffee shop connected to Hastings Books, Music & Videos, 628 Tuttle Creek Blvd., is hoping to be wireless-ready by late March.

Although laptops are needed to access the Internet, the service is free.

It decided to offer wireless when the cafe opened, cafe manager Mandy Voss said.

"I think it's good for people because we have a lot of people that bring their computers in, so it'll be nice for them," she said.

Hastings opened at its current location Sept. 18. It recently received the funding from a private donation and is waiting to install the Internet.

Bluestem Bistro, 1219 Moro St., has had wireless internet access for about a year. The service is free for paying customers. The service costs run Bluestem about $40 a month.

Brent Aldrigge, owner of Bluestem Bistro and co-owner of Radina's Coffeehouse & Bakery, said the service is worth it, since college students and faculty take advantage of it.

"It's just another thing we can provide our customers. It's something that goes along with the cafe scene, people enjoying added features to their coffee experience," he said.

On Friday, Radina's, 615 N. Manhattan Ave., made its wireless service available to the public. The service is free for customers. Radina's pays $30 a month plus the cost of a digital receiver.

Panera Bread, 315 Southwind Place, has offered wireless internet since the end of July. It was ready within one month of opening the restaurant, manager Kitty Saberi, said.

Saberi said the decision was in the hands of the corporate office. It was added to help customers.

"It gives them a nice, quiet atmosphere for our customers to work or study," she said.

The biggest concern for most customers is how to protect themselves and their private information from other people on the same network.

Aldrigge said that it was the customer's responsibility to protect themselves.

"It is an unsecure wireless connection. It's up to our customers to have a firewall," he said.

Trevor Wagner, Hardback Cafe corporate supervisor, said that the Hardback Cafe is limiting the access.

"There will be no access to any personal e-mail through a program such as Outlook. Online e-mail access, such as through Hotmail, will be allowed," he said.

"Getting McAfee or Norton and getting firewall and virus protection is our recommendation," Wagner said.

Groups request money from Senate

Campus organizations lobby for travel funds to conferences

Student groups are requesting money from Student Senate tonight.

Six groups want funds for traveling purposes. The Allocations Committee passed the requests.

Black Student Union and United Black Voices are asking for $1,000 each to send 10 people to the Black Student Government Big 12 Conference Feb. 17 to 19 in Boulder, Co.

K-State Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council are asking for $800 each to send eight people to the Mid America Greek Council Association Leadership Conference in Chicago Feb. 16 to 20.

KSU Collegiate 4-H is requesting $1,000 to send 10 people to the National Collegiate 4-H Conference Feb. 10 to 13 in Pittsburg, Penn.

Lastly, Mortar Board is requesting $2,636 to host Shante Moore, who will be speaking Feb. 15 in Forum Hall. Moore is the economic and commercial director for the U.S. Embassy in Qatar. The allocations committee recommends $2,211.60.

Allocation bills go through the Senate frequently, said Hayley Urkevich, student body president. It's standard business.

Also on the agenda, the College of Business Administration Student Council is changing its constitution.

Justin Waggoner, president of the council, said changes are mainly with wording and updating. He said the constitution hasn't been changed since 1994.

Some of the changes include adding a mission statement and making the treasurer the representative on the Allocations Committee, he said.

K-State directory will include customizable information

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association is making a change to K-State's online people directory, which should be in effect by August.

Currently, students can choose to have all their personal information online, or they can choose to have nothing shown on the K-State online people directory.

"When you go to the online site, it's all or nothing," said Hayley Urkevich, student body president.

In order to change their information, students must submit a non-disclosure request form to the Office of the Registrar.

SGA wants to change the white pages so students can decide what personal information will be available online.

"We want to have it so that you can decide what you want online," Urkevich, senior in finance, said.

Kim Freed, academic affairs and university relations chair, said one of the main reasons for the change is safety.

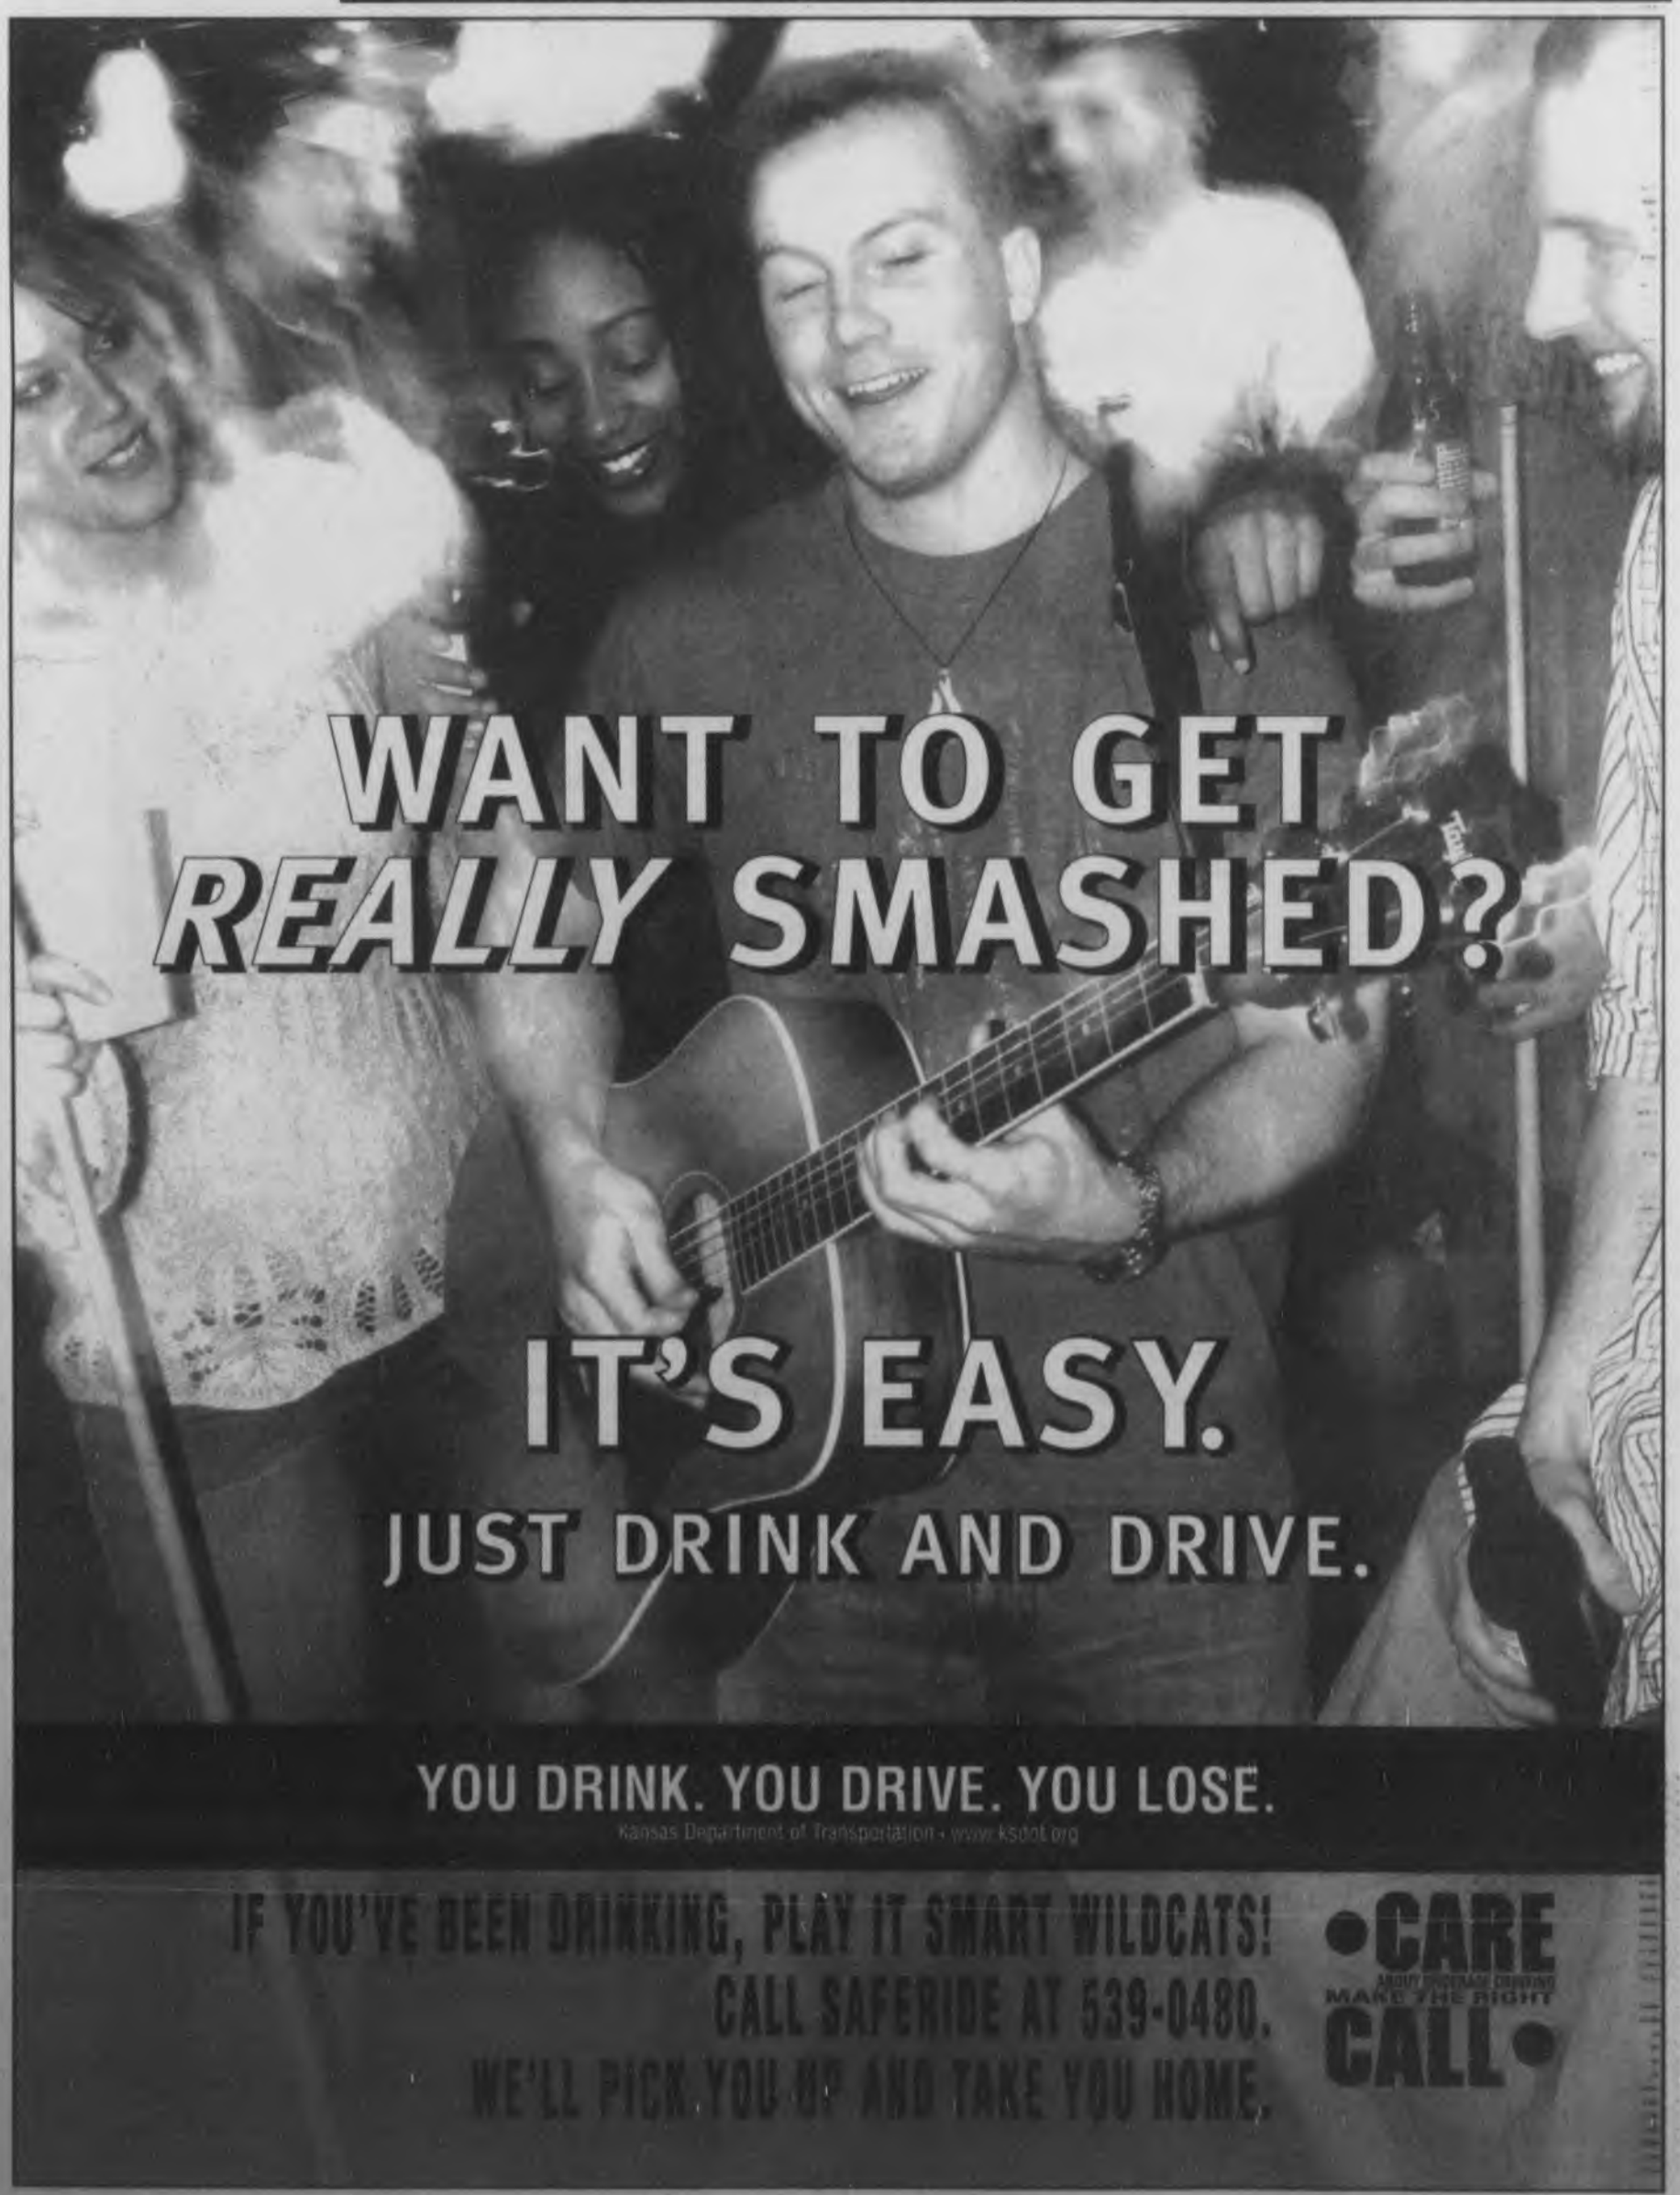
"We want the students' identities to be safer," Freed, senior in kinesiology, said. "I had a friend who didn't go here look up my address and phone number, which it wouldn't be a good thing if it wasn't my friend."

Freed said there were some limitations that prevented SGA from doing what it originally wanted to do.

"Originally, we wanted to make it so that students could basically check exactly what they wanted to show on their information by checking some boxes," Freed said. "We weren't able to do that with the current technology.

"In the next four years, K-State has plans to update their system, so we can implement our plan."

Instead of having total control over their information, students will be able to show only their name and e-mail address so no one will know all of their personal information, she said.



"This way, you will still be able to access student information easily, and students can have privacy without all their information being taken off like it is currently," Freed said.

BUSH | President focuses on Social Security's future in national address

but it won't fix the system."

Charlie Griffin, associate professor of rhetoric and communication in the department of speech, studies the field of criticisms of public addresses. Griffin said Bush's speech was well comprehended, but doesn't know how attainable his points were.

Griffin said the only sustainable argument in Bush's speech was his Social Security reform. He said most State of the Union addresses focus on on what they've done in the past, but that Bush made an excellent point of changes for the future.

"I am skeptical still of the Social Security reform. He will make an effort to reach what needs to be done, but the more I hear about his proposals, the less I believe it," Griffin said.

Bush's last State of the Union address focused intently on the war on terror, something during this speech Bush focused on for only the last minutes.

Since the State of the Union is meant to cover the entirety of the presidential term, Griffin said he believed Bush's speech writers did a great job of unifying the theme for his second term. Griffin said the speech writers might have been working on the speech since as early as June 2004.

"I thought his pace was brisk, it was a very good speech. Bush isn't known as a great speaker, but he had a wonderful text and it was good at dividing the economic, social and foreign policy issues," Griffin said.

Griffin recalled the last State of the Union address, when Bush said the September 11, 2001, attacks happened because those nations were angry with America because it is free. He said Wednesday's address did a wonderful job at pushing the freedom issue to make all American's proud.

"He encouraged human freedoms everywhere. Freedom is an American's most ultimate value," Griffin said.

In the last 15 minutes of Bush's address, he told a story of an Iraqi woman who had voted in Sunday's elections and also the story of a Marine sergeant who was killed in Iraq. Griffin said the strongest part of the address was when the parents of the fallen soldier handed the Iraqi woman their son's dog tags.

"This is where the president was at his most animated and passionate point, the entire Congress was at that point," Griffin said.

FOOD GUIDELINES | Food pyramid, exercise requirements revised are the only guidelines in federal statute and Pearson said they are revised every five years by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services, and an advisory committee made up of the top U.S. scientists, physical therapists, nutritional specialists, doctors and dentists.

"It's important to revise the guidelines, because we need to be updated with new scientific research, new health problems, and the major issues with obesity in our country," said Kansas Association of Family and Consumer Sciences President, Kathryn Roberts.

Mary Higgins, human nutrition specialist for K-State research and extension, said the new guidelines contain 41 key recommendations. The recommendations fall within nine categories: adequate nutrients within calorie needs, weight management, physical activities, food groups to encourage, fats, carbohydrates, sodium and potassium, alcoholic beverages and food safety.

"Increasing the intake of fruits, vegetables and whole wheat products, reducing the consumption of trans-fatty acids and increasing physical exercise are the main revisions made to the guidelines," Higgins said.

Roberts said most of the revisions were expected, but the main difference was the exercise addition.

"I was glad that physical activity was included in the new guidelines," she said. "Encouraging people to exercise is something that needs to be emphasized." The new guidelines state specific amounts of exercise an adult should participate in daily to maintain adequate health. To reduce the risk of chronic disease, 30 minutes is needed. To help maintain a healthy body weight and prevent weight gain, 60 minutes is suggested, and to sustain weight loss, 60 to 90 minutes are recommended.

Pearson said people shouldn't be alarmed about the exercise recommendations, because there are ways to complete them without spending hours in the gym.

"These guidelines are meant to be common-sense advice that people can incorporate into their every day lives," she said. "Moderate exercise could include something as simple as taking the stairs instead of the elevator, or carrying groceries instead of using a cart."

Pearson said the guidelines have received criticism in the past because they were hard to interpret. She said the new ones will be more effective because they were written in clear terms for the American consumer.

"So far people are satisfied with the new guidelines because they are easier to understand," she said.

While Higgins agreed the new guidelines were more specific than the old ones, she said misinterpretation could still exist.

"The government will use the media, provide a consumer brochure that summarizes key findings, attend community health care society meetings to answer questions, and provide information on our Web site," Pearson said.

She also said the government was going to encourage other organizations, such as the American Heart Association, to include the new guidelines in their newsletters.

Even if the information is provided to the public, Higgins said Americans will have a difficult time following the new guidelines.

"People have never followed the guidelines in the past, so I don't know if they will now," Higgins said. "Making a behavior change is difficult. People can know what is good for them, but our behavior is dictated by emotion, availability and accessibility."

Ashley Mathews, senior in nutritional sciences, said she also believed changing routine behavior could be difficult. She said she was aware of the new dietary guidelines because they pertain to her major, but said other individuals probably aren't educated about their existence.

"I think it will be hard to adjust to the new changes, but I will definitely consider the new guidelines and compare them to my lifestyle now," Mathews said. "But others who don't have to directly learn about them might not change their individual life styles."

Derby Dining Center dietician Michelle Netson said educating the public about the new guideline changes was the first step in creating a health conscious society, and the dining centers intend to do just that.

Netson said the dining services would look at new products and recipes that will fit with the new guidelines.

"I see our role as helping students interpret the new guidelines and apply them in their eating patterns," she said. "Our goal is to offer a wide selection of nutritionally balanced meals."

take precautions against influenza this late in the season.

"They are still giving flu shots," Murphy said. "(However) it takes two weeks to receive immunity and full protection after the shot is given."

Lafene still has vaccinations, but students are encouraged to call before they come in because the shot is limited.

There are almost no side effects from the flu vaccine.

College students are at a greater risk for contracting the flu because of the density of people in close quarters.

"Anytime people are in a crowded room, there is an increased risk of coming into contact with the virus," Murphy said.

If students do get sick, they are encouraged to stay home and minimize contact with other people. There is antiviral medication, but it must be taken within 24 to 36 hours.

"If students feel badly, they should take the pill right away," Reppert said.

The flu season can last through April, so students are urged to take precautions to stay healthy.

Rusty's Last Chance is one of the best.

In Sports Illustrated's most recent issue, Rusty's is ranked No. 12 in the nation's best 25 sports bars.

The bars were selected by sending out drinking teams during last year's football season to sports bars across the nation.

"It's great to know they did it without us knowing about it," owner Pete Anderson said. "We weren't putting on a front."

Sports Illustrated described Rusty's as "five interconnected buildings' worth of pure K-State fervor and hospitality. Cheap brew, hickory-smoked barbecue and every weekend, especially after Kansas State games, it's like a big block party."

The article also tells the story of 1998 and 2000 when students tore the goal posts down after K-State beat Nebraska and marched them to Rusty's.

Anderson and his employees were surprised to rank in a sports bar contest.

"We really don't even consider ourselves a sports bar," he said.

Rusty's is in good company, Anderson said. The top bar was The Fours in Boston. McDuffy's in Tempe, Ariz., where K-State played in the Fiesta Bowl in 2004, was ranked No. 5. Kansas City's Chappell's Restaurant and Sports Museum came in No. 10.

GlobalFlyer delayed again to wait for better weather conditions

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Resting in the hangar in Salina, GlobalFlyer will wait for suitable flight weather.

Patrick Rinearson, senior in airway science and member of the flight planning crew, said the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer can take flight no sooner than February 10 due to turbulent weather conditions.

The attempt to fly solo around the world without refueling has been postponed several times since it was originally scheduled for take off in early January.

Rinearson said he and three other K-State-Salina students have been examining a global scale of weather patterns to determine the perfect time to depart.

The students observe the jetstream and determine if there are changes in wind speed or direction.

Any changes in the jetstream causes turbulence, which makes take off difficult, Rinearson said.

Rain or clouds can also cause problems during flight, Rinearson said.

"An airplane flies through the moisture, and if it is near freezing, it will create ice," he said. "Ice is bad because it changes the aerodynamics of the wing."

A cold day with low upper winds is ideal for take off, Rinearson said.

"A cold day makes the aircraft perform better because the air is more dense, so it will take less runway," he said.

Mary Knapp, state climatologist, said later next week could be the perfect window for departure.

"Calmer winds aloft during take off could set it up nicely for an end of the week launch," she said.

However, weather often changes.

"It is difficult to say a week ahead of time, this day we will take off, as the conditions will change very rapidly," she said.

The postponed flights cause some difficulties, but Dennis Kuhlman, dean of the College of Technology and Aviation at K-State-Salina said they are expected.

"Salina is trying to be as flexible as we can," he said.

"We knew when we started this project we would have to be flexible."

Kuhlman said although the students are dedicating a lot of time to the project, it is worth it.

"In life there are opportunities that come along and it's not always convenient, but you can't pass them up," he said.

Former Wildcat in Super Bowl

As a young boy growing up in Smith Center, Kan., Mark Simoneau loved to play football.

"Mark started playing football in the backyard with the neighbors when he was about six," Simoneau's mom, Marcia Simoneau, said.

Simoneau

The classic backyard football story – the story every mother lovingly tells about her son when he was younger, building dreams of playing in the NFL when he grows up.

The difference with Simoneau, a former K-State linebacker, is that his dreams didn't stop at his backyard fence.

His dreams, in fact, are being fulfilled this weekend when the Philadelphia Eagles square off against the New England Patriots in the Super Bowl this Sunday.

"Mark always kind of had the tentative goal to play football," Marcia said. "He grew up watching his older brothers play."

FUTURE SUPERINTENDENT

School board President Walt Pesaresi said Shannon stood out from the other two candidates.

"Like cream rises to the top of milk, Shannon rose to the top of the crowd," he said.

For 16 years, Shannon has served as the superintendent of McPherson USD 418. His salary there is $101,000.

His salary as USD 383's superintendent will be $125,000. Supt. Sharol Little, whose resignation is effective July 1, salary is $140,000.

Michele Jones, communications director for the district, said the reason for decrease has to do with public concerns and the district compared to other districts.

Gonzales confirmed
Alberto Gonzales won Senate confirmation Thursday as attorney general despite Democratic accusations that he helped formulate White House policies that led to overseas prisoner abuse. The vote in was 60-36. This puts the first Hispanic in the position.

100 feared dead
An Afghan passenger jet with more than 100 people on board was missing and fears it had crashed mounted after it failed to land at Kabul's airport or in neighboring Pakistan. Most passengers were believed to be Afghans, but the U.S. Embassy said several Americans were also believed to be on board.

Tort reform
A compromise that would curb class-action lawsuits and achieve one of President Bush's second-term goals survived its first test Thursday when senators foiled attempts to alter the legislation. Many Democrats hope to make the necessary changes to the bill so it might fail. The Senate Judiciary Committee passed the bill.

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | FOOTBALL VS. PUPPIES

Super Bowl XXXIX will kick off at 6:30 p.m. Sunday in Jacksonville, Fla. This year, the New England Patriots will play the Philadelphia Eagles for the Lombardi Trophy.

For those wanting to watch a bowl but don't like football, tune in for "Animal Planet Puppy Bowl" from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday on Animal Planet. Animal Planet is channel 67 for Cox Cable subscribers.

2 | ENTER THE 4TH DIMENSION

"Dichroic Portals" Contemporary Light Sculptures, an exhibit by Ray Howlett, is on display at the Manhattan Arts Center. Howlett is the first artist to use this original art form and was one of the first sculptors to use electric light in art. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 1 to 4 p.m. on Saturdays.

3 | HOME STAND

K-State men and women will both square off in Bramlage Coliseum Saturday. The men will play Colorado at 12:30 p.m., which will be on ESPN+. The women will play Oklahoma State at 5 p.m.

4 | GET OUT

The city of Manhattan owns and maintains 21 parks totaling 1,000 acres. This weekend's temperatures are supposed to get into the upper 50s. So...get outside and do something! It has been cold for a while, so go jogging, play frisbee, reenact your favorite Super Bowl plays or begin training your puppy for next year's Puppy Bowl. Enjoy the weather, because forecasts predict temperatures returning to the 30s.

5 | KNOW WHEN TO HOLD 'EM

Join up to 200 poker players at the Texas Hold 'Em Poker Tournament in the K-State Student Union. As part of After Hours, the tournament will be at 7 tonight in the K & S Ballrooms; registration begins at 6 p.m. Bring two cans of food for entry.

If poker isn't your thing, watch "I Heart Huckabees" at Forum Hall. Times are 8 tonight, 7 & 9:30 p.m. Saturday and 8 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $1 tonight and $2 Saturday and Sunday.

Student Senate questions greeks

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Questions arose about whether two student groups should be registered at Student Senate Thursday night.

K-State Interfraternity Council and K-State Panhellenic Council requested $800 each to send eight members to the Mid-America Greek Council Association Annual Conference.

Senate referred the request, which was in final action, back to the Allocations Committee to settle the issue.

Gayle Spencer, Office of Student Activities and Services coordinator, said she is not sure if the groups should be registered.

If they aren't, they can't receive allocation funds.

To be a student group, all K-State students must be able to be a part of the group. Groups register through OSAS.

With the councils, students have to be in a fraternity or sorority and be elected into the council positions.

Spencer said the groups may have slipped through without OSAS realizing they shouldn't be a group.

"We do need to look at why we registered them as a student group," she said.

"I'm not so sure we were as thorough as we needed to be."

Student Body Vice President Erik Ankrom said the groups should not receive allocation funds.

"Technically, this is not open to anyone," he said.

Senate voted twice to refer the allocation requests to committee.

The first time it failed. Then, after discussion, it was reconsidered and passed.

In other business, three groups received allocation funds for travel.

Senate allocated $1,000 for KSU Collegiate 4-H to send 10 members to the National Collegiate 4-H Conference.

Black Student Union and United Black Voices Gospel Choir are sending 10 members each Feb. 17 -19 to the Big 12 Conference on Black Student Government.

Senate passed the $1,000 each requested. All three motions passed 51-0.

"They've been there many times, and it's a good way to spend money to bring leadership back to the university," Senator Justin Shrauner said.

PILOTS program helps freshmen cope with academics

By Jaci Boydston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is help for those overwhelmed with homework, lecture notes and tests.

If incoming freshmen are confused by the lack of academic structure and guidance at the collegiate level, K-State's PILOTS program, now in its 11th year, provides a structured academic setting designed to help freshmen transition to college life.

Students enrolled in the yearlong PILOTS program take special sections of typical first-year curriculum, like expository writing, public speaking, college algebra, social sciences and university experience, a freshman seminar on campus resources and study skills.

Unlike regular sections of these classes, which could enroll hundreds of students, PILOTS classes are limited to only 60 students, Anita Cortez, program director, said.

"PILOTS is for students who think they might be more successful that first year in a smaller environment," she said.

"The lecture classes they take are smaller in size, so instead of having several hundred students in your class, which can be really intimidating, our largest classes are capped at 60."

The program also requires students to take a lab for two of their classes, often math and social science classes.

In the labs, upper-level undergraduate students who sit in on the courses are available to answer students' questions, help them review class notes and organize assignments, said Mike Lynch, associate vice president for education and personal development.

"The general trend is that the student will do one letter grade better in their lab classes than they would have if they hadn't taken the PILOTS program," Lynch said.

To justify this estimate, Lynch said they compared the grades of PILOTS students with the grades of comparable students who did not participate.

These comparable students have similar academic profiles including ACT scores, high school curriculum and high school GPAs.

Additionally, after six years, the rate of graduation for PILOTS students is nearly double the rate for comparable students, Lynch said.

Cortez said PILOTS classes have the same academic standards as regular classes.

Although most PILOTS students are recommended by their academic advisers during enrollment, many students have requested to be in the program, Lynch said.

Alexandra Lasley, senior in psychology, explains concepts in psychology through the PILOTS program while Arturo Garcia, freshman in open-option listens Thursday afternoon in Bluemont 116. The PILOTS program is a program K-State students enroll in to help them with their classes and earn credit hours.

Sade Jones, freshman in open-option, elected to be in PILOTS to help her make the transition from a small Mississippi high school to a large university.

"I did it because I'm not from here," Jones said.

"It's a big college, and I didn't know anything. I wanted smaller class sizes, because it helps the professors know your name."

TO THE POINT

Politicians shouldn't be swayed

Partisan politics can be ugly.

Worse, it can make our politicians even uglier after they win the election.

The Senate voted 60-36 to confirm Alberto Gonzalez as attorney general. The vote count is logical, given the accusations that Gonzalez knew about and condoned the Abu Ghraib prison abuse.

Only seven Democrats crossed party lines to vote in favor of Gonzalez's confirmation.

Not a single Republican voted against him.

But the fact that all 36 of the dissenting votes came from Democrats does not speak well for to the ability of our representatives to stand up for their principles.

Those senators who believe strongly in their votes should be commended for sticking to their guns. But the strictness of voting by party makes it difficult to believe others weren't swayed by politics.

The United States should set an example of good representative government, especially immediately after the democratic elections in Iraq.

Playing politics with one of the most important Cabinet positions is not a good way to show what our government is supposed to be.

Politics is a serious game of tit-for-tat, and giving-and-getting. It can be complicated, but there needs to be some call for members of Congress to vote the way they truly believe.

Our Congressmen are directly elected to serve their constituents' interests – acting as tools of political parties is unacceptable. interests.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Stand up for yourself

Emotions can't always be trusted in heat of battle

I've never been good at standing up for myself. As soon as someone comes on strong with what they don't like about me, I instantly turn on the apologetic button. "I'm sorry, you're right, I'll change." They win and I lose every time.

ANNIE LEWIS

My hands grab for something to fidget, and my mind races with reasons why they are right. Self-condemnation helps my opponent's case, and I have no hope.

In grade school, I was the easy target because I never fought back. Since I thought everyone else was cooler than I was, my only salvation was to try to find ways to please the crowd.

I had a really strong Christian faith, so my options were limited. My family struggled financially, so I couldn't buy any friends. For the next two years I swore off people. I didn't need friends because I had Jesus.

I got a clue in high school when I realized how fun it is to hang out with real people my own age. Instead of learning how to stand up for myself, I refused to listen to the insults.

That technique was certainly useful to learn before getting to college and being on my own.

I still have my faith, but I have learned a thing or two since high school. I hope the lessons that I learned can either be entertaining or helpful.

NOT EVERYTHING IS MY FAULT

Whenever people yell at me for things that are not my fault, I should not take the blame. If someone treats me angrily, my first reaction was to stop the yelling the quickest way possible by admitting my failure. Wrong move.

It takes two people to have an argument. Maybe this person has an anger problem, or they could have had a terrible day. Whatever the case, my shortcoming is not the only factor in this mess.

EMOTIONS SUCK; DON'T TRUST THEM

The biggest problem is that emotions become involved in arguments. I just need to tell myself to shut up and wait until the irate individual is finished. Then I can look at the situation objectively and find a solution that does not involve me folding completely.

They key word here is "objectivity". That means taking myself out of the situation and looking at both sides equally. If a compromise can be found, hurray! If not, don't cry over it because it is not worth it.

DON'T ASSUME

It's well known that assuming makes an "ass" out of "u" and "me." Don't do it. Even fortune-teller Miss Cleo couldn't guess what's going on in her opponent's mind. There is no way to automatically know the motive behind the other person's outrage. Just to throw a curve into the whole mess, there are people who sound angry while harboring no ill feelings. When they think they are just discussing an issue, I think they are planning my funeral. Plus, if you start yelling at them because you think they are made it will only make the situation worse.

GIRLS ARE NOT THE ONLY ONES TO BLAME

Guys can be just as moody as girls. Yeah, we have our constant ups and downs, but guys can get downright moody for no reason, too. Contrary to common stereotyping, women don't hold all the stock in the unstable emotions department.

I hope you have learned something here. A lot of social eruptions and ruined friendships can be salvaged if you follow my easy guidelines. My self-help books will be released in the fall for a mere $250 each. Hey, I have to pay tuition somehow.

Overcome the underage drinking stigma

I don't know about the rest of you, but I didn't wait until I was 21 to have my first drink of alcohol.

Oh, go ahead and be pious if you must. But I personally wasn't going to wait until I was a junior in college to drink legally.

ABBY HILES

Drinking is forbidden and illegal, and it therefore becomes a major stigma in the life of any high schooler.

So why, if incidences of underage drinking are so common in the United States, is the drinking age not set at 18?

Surprisingly, in the United States it is left up to each individual state to determine the legal drinking age within that state. And of course Kansas set theirs at the picture-perfect age of 21.

Stop. I know what you are thinking; half of the campus isn't of legal drinking age right now. So why not start an aggressive campaign to our state legislature to lower the drinking age, thus giving the right to drink to the thousands of freshmen and sophomores here on campus who rightfully deserve it?

However, there is a catch. If the state doesn't set the legal drinking age at 21, they lose out on Federal Highway Funds.

But is that all there really is to consider when setting the legal drinking age?

Right now, for the most part, college freshman enter into their first year of college at or around the age of 18. They are thrown into an environment of complete freedom, independence from their parents and the world of alcoholic beverages.

Does the government (and parents alike) actually expect these newly free 18-year-olds to abstain from drinking alcohol simply because of a little law, especially when alcohol is so readily at their disposal?

Or how about the thousands of 18-year-olds who decide not to go to college? They go out into the workforce or become members of our armed forces right out of high school. After work or on the weekends, are they expected to not enjoy their free time with their co-workers? They have to wait three years of their lives. Even when they are responsible, consenting adults who can smoke, vote and buy pornography and lottery tickets, they can't drink.

In this country, 18 is considered the age when you become an adult. You are free from your parents and you can fight for your country.

But that country you are fighting for says you can't enjoy a nice beer at the end of the day because they aren't sure that you are ready for it.

I'm not saying I support drinking when it comes to naïve 15- and 16-year-olds who decide to partake in the consumption of alcoholic beverages with their older friends.

No, even I draw the line somewhere.

But if I were a parent and I knew that my child was going to drink, I would much rather have them out with 18-year-olds who were legal and responsible than trying to score wine-coolers and beer from sleazy 25-year-olds hanging around outside of liquor stores.

The legal drinking age of 21 is a joke, and everyone knows it.

So let's take it down to 18 (where it should be) and lessen the stigma of underage drinking.

To the people who just drove by and stared at the two scrawny girls trying to push the 1980 Impala uphill: Thanks for the help.

Binge drinking is a problem on college campuses? Sounds like news to me.

To the girl who almost killed me and apologized in the Fourum: I accept your apology.

It's true that you adapt to the terrain. Of course, after awhile I said, "the hell with it", and took my pants off.

Businesses see increase in TV sales for Super Bowl

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

TV sales reach their peak the week before the Super Bowl.

Sam Meiners, Sears electronics associate, said many consumers come in the week – even the day before – and purchase a big screen TV to watch the game.

Purchasing a big screen TV before the Super Bowl is even more popular than purchasing one during the Christmas season, Meiners said.

"It's larger than Christmas because most people are buying smaller TVs as gifts for others," he said.

Sears sells anywhere from 5 to 10 percent more TVs during the week before the Super Bowl than any other time of the year, Meiners said.

RadioShack Owner Frank Beer said he also sees an increase in the amount of TVs sold.

He said consumers are looking at big screens, but they are also concerned about getting a high definition TV.

There are many common misconceptions when it comes to purchasing a high definition TV, Beer said.

Any high definition TV built after 1985 is capable of receiving high definition signals as long as consumers have a tuner to convert them.

However, the high definition won't be visible on the screen unless it is a high definition monitor, Beer said.

Consumers need to be educated when purchasing a new high definition TV so they can get what they want.

"I would highly suggest consumers to seek out someone to help them understand it," Beer said.

"We do that with our customers all the time and help them find out what their needs are for today and for their future."

Wildcats hope to rebound from loss Saturday

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Megan Mahoney attempts a shot against Iowa State during the first half. The Wildcats will play Oklahoma State tomorrow at Bramlage Coliseum.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On paper, this weekend's matchup at Bramlage Coliseum between No. 15 K-State and Oklahoma State appears to heavily favor the Wildcats.

K-State (16-4, 7-2) sits at third in the Big 12 Conference standings, while Oklahoma State (6-12, 1-7) is last.

Even though the stats point to a K-State win, senior guard Laurie Koehn said the Wildcats are not taking the Cowgirls lightly.

"It's one of those things where we can't think of them as one of the lower teams in the league because they're obviously very dangerous," Koehn said. "They've been playing extremely well."

Indeed, the Cowgirls have played better as of late.

Last Saturday, Oklahoma State lost at home by just two points to then-No. 7 Baylor, the same Baylor team that beat K-State 72-62 in Waco, Texas, on Wednesday.

The Cowgirls suffered another two point loss on Wednesday, this time to Nebraska.

"At some point, they're going to get over the hump, they are going to find a way to beat somebody," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "Our mindset has got to be that we take the floor prepared to be the very best we can be because we don't want it to be us."

Oklahoma State is led by senior guard Nina Stone, the Big 12's seventh-leading scorer, averaging 15.8 points per game.

"I think the last couple years in this league, everyone has known when you line up against Oklahoma State, you better be ready to defend and pay a great deal of attention to Nina Stone," Patterson said.

Saturday against the Cowgirls, freshman guard Kimberly Dietz said the Wildcats will have to play solid defense to shut down Oklahoma State.

"We just really have got to work on our defense and boxing out," Dietz said. "That's our main goal this week."

Staying positive

K-State ready for Colorado

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Usually when a team loses a conference game by 20 points, coaches and players have a hard time finding a positive spin.

Not Coach Jim Wooldridge.

After K-State (13-5, 3-4) lost 77-57 at No. 10 Oklahoma State on Wednesday night, Wooldridge said he was not completely discouraged.

"I don't consider this a step back," Wooldridge said. "I think our guys came in and played hard, played well at times and we just played against a better team tonight."

Wooldridge probably has a point.

As the Wildcats get set to battle Colorado (10-9, 2-6) at 12:30 p.m. on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum, there are several things they can take out of Wednesday night's loss.

Up against their first-ranked opponent of the season – and a team with the nation's longest home court winning streak at 26 games – the Wildcats were right with the Cowboys, trailing by just one with a little more than 16 minutes left until Oklahoma State pulled away.

And what about the play of senior forward Jeremiah Massey?

The reigning Big 12 Player of the Week, took over the first half against the Cowboys, scoring 18 points on 7-of-9 shooting and grabbing seven of his eight total rebounds.

Though Oklahoma State's defense wore him down in the second half, Massey still finished with a game-high 25 points. Last year's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year has now led the Wildcats in scoring in his last four games and has scored over 20 in three of those contests.

Former Wildcat greats to have jerseys retired at halftime

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former K-State basketball greats Bob Boozer, Ernie Barrett and Jack Parr will all have their jerseys hanging from the rafters of Bramlage Coliseum before Saturday's game against Colorado is over.

In a halftime ceremony, the three will become the the Wildcats' first men's basketball players to have their jerseys retired.

Casey Scott, K-State's associate athletic director, said K-State Athletic Director Tim Weiser felt this was long overdue.

"Tim Weiser wanted to rectify this decision for K-State basketball history." Scott said. "Tim wanted to begin this process for our men's team as well."

While it took almost 50 years for K-State to retire his jersey, Parr said even with the wait, it is quite an honor.

"It is really a spectacular honor - a real privilege." Parr said. "It's a real honor to go in with Bob and Ernie. They were great players. It is like we're the three musketeers."

Parr played from 1955-58 while wearing No. 33. He still holds K-State records for most 15 and 20 rebound games in a career.

Parr and Boozer both said their greatest sports moment was beating the Wilt Chamberlin-led Kansas Jayhaks in Lawrence in 1958 to win the final Big 7 Conference title.

Barrett, who is known as "Mr. K-State," sported the No. 22 for K-State throughout the 1947-51 seasons.

In his senior season, Barrett led the Wildcats to the only NCAA Championship game in school history.

Boozer, who is one of K-State's most decorated players, played for K-State from 1957-59, and scored 1,685 points in his three-year career. He averaged 21.9 points per game throughout his career and he still holds K-State men's career records for most double-doubles, 20-point and 30-point games.

Boozer, who wore No. 30 said having his jersey retired is one of the greatest honors of his career - a career which included a gold medal with the U.S. Olympic team in 1960 and an NBA Championship with the Milwaukee Bucks in 1971.

"It's quite an honor. It's an honor to be with Jack and Ernie," Boozer said. "You put this right up there with the gold medal and the championship."

Columnist gives predictions for this year's unofficial holiday: the Super Bowl

In a couple of days, the biggest football game of the year will be played between the New England Patriots and Philadelphia Eagles – yes, that's right, it's the Super Bowl.

MATTHEW GIRARD

Finally, after two weeks of build-up and hype, we will get to see who really is the best team in the National Football League, but in case you absolutely cannot wait until Sunday to know what happens, here is a sneak-peek.

PREGAME

For eight hours before the game, Fox will show viewers their version of the "Most electric Super Bowl pregame show ever." Of course, most of the show has been pre-taped so nothing crazy happens and they don't get any angry mothers calling about their children seeing adult things.

What they won't show you is the "Hardcore" wrestling match between Eagles' wide receivers, Terrell "God healed my ankle" Owens and Freddie "The people's champ" Mitchell.

It will be the ultimate match to finally decide who is the bigger media-hog. Along with an assortment of chairs, ladders and goal-posts being used, Owens will have a desperate housewife in his corner and Mitchell will be stuck with the pudgy Eagles' coach, Andy Reid, in his.

As World Wrestling Entertainment's Jim "JR" Ross calls the action and screams "Oh My God!" 400 times, Owens will take the crown when Reid turns on Mitchell with a belly-flop off a goal-post.

FIRST HALF

The first quarter will go relatively smoothly for both teams as the Eagles and Patriots feel each other out. The Eagles score first with a field-goal, but the Patriots will come back with a Tom Brady touchdown throw.

In the second quarter, Owens will make his dramatic return to the field after his grueling "Hardcore" match, only to have Mitchell come flying out of the stands and to try and regain his title.

As the two brawl back into the tunnel, on the field, the Patriots' dream of a dynasty will slowly slip away.

Quarterback Tom Brady will get hurt and Coach Bill Belichick will be forced to use "jack-of-all-trades" wide receiver Troy Brown as his new quarterback. Belichick will be rewarded for his move when Brown throws himself a pass for a touchdown.

Score: Patriots 14, Eagles 3

HALFTIME

In an effort to avoid any possible surprises, Fox tapped the seemingly harmless and distinguished Sir Paul McCartney for its halftime entertainment.

To Fox's disappointment, Sir Paul will decide to liven up his show by

MBB | K-State announces sellout for Kansas game

For the first time since the 2002-03 season, K-State has sold out a men's basketball game at Bramlage Coliseum.

The K-State athletic department announced Thursday that all tickets have been sold for next Wednesday's "Sunflower State Showdown" with in-state rival Kansas.

Tipoff for the game between the Wildcats and the Jayhawks is set for 8 p.m.

K-State officials also announced that approximately 11,000 tickets have been sold for this Saturday's men's game against the Colorado Buffaloes.

At halftime, K-State will retire the jersey's of former Wildcat greats Bob Boozer, Ernie Barrett and Jack Parr - making them the first men's basketball players in school history to have their jersey's retired.

The Associated Press

NFL | Emmitt Smith to announce retirement

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Emmitt Smith, the NFL's career rushing leader, is retiring after 15 years, according to two sources within the NFL.

Smith

Smith, who starred for the Dallas Cowboys for 13 seasons and spent the last two years with Arizona, will make the announcement at 4 p.m., according to the sources, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

He is expected to sign a one-day contract with Dallas so he can retire as a Cowboy. Dallas owner Jerry Jones will be present at the ceremony.

The 35-year-old Smith ran for 1,822 yards and 164 touchdowns in his career, both NFL records. He rushed for 937 yards and nine touchdowns for the Cardinals this season.

MLB | World Series ball arrives at Fenway Park

BOSTON — The ball used for the final out of the first Boston's first World Series title in 86 years got star treatment when it was brought to Fenway Park on Thursday.

With a nearby meter maid ticketing cars but few fans, if any, looking on, two armored guards carried the ball in a black canvas bag down a red carpet that had been laid out along Yawkey Way and brought it inside the ballpark.

Mientkiewicz

The ball has been the subject of a tussle between the team and its former first baseman, Doug Mientkiewicz, who caught the final out and kept it. While ownership hasn't been resolved, he agreed last week to loan the ball to the Red Sox for at least one year.

NFL | Fisher interested in talking to USC's Chow

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee coach Jeff Fisher wants to talk with Southern California offensive coordinator Norm Chow about the Titans' coordinator job.

Chow

But Fisher had held off talking with college coaches until national signing day passed on Wednesday.

He has interviewed assistant head coach George Henshaw and quarterbacks coach Craig Johnson off his own staff.

Fisher said on radio Thursday morning that he is trying to talk with Chow.

Super party Sunday

How you spice it up can mean success or failure to party

A Super Bowl party, unlike the game between the New England Patriots and the Philadelphia Eagles, won't require countless hours of preparation.

WILL KLUSENER

All that's needed is a little imagination and a team to root for.

The key to a good party is variety. In order to throw a memorable Super Bowl party, take into account three different categories: food, beverages and atmosphere.

A Super Bowl party is essentially a glorified indoor tailgate party, and one of the key ingredients is munchies.

Since there will be a variety of people at the party, and since there will inevitably be strangers, it would be a good idea to plan for omnivores and vegetarians alike.

Now, this isn't rocket science, and a gourmet chef won't be needed to impress the guests.

Remember, this is like a tailgate party, so keep it simple.

Someone will invariably have access to a grill of some type, so grill up some barbeque chicken or beef ribs.

Keep some teriyaki sauce around for those who don't like barbeque.

The guests will remember that their tastes were catered to and will want to come to you party next year (whether or not you want them there is a different story).

If cooking isn't the desired route, order a large party sub or sandwich platter and be sure to get a portion with vegetarian sandwiches.

Relatively inexpensive vegetable platters can also be purchased from the grocer.

Chips are also a must-have on the party table.

One thing that can be counted on is that once everyone has had a plate or three to eat they'll be thirsty.

For those under 21, the local grocer will have a nice selection of fruit juices and sodas to choose from, and the two can be mixed to make a tasty fruit punch.

Non-alcoholic beverages like daiquiris or margaritas can also be mixed and are quite good.

For those who are legally able to consume social lubricant, remember that variety is the key.

More people will have a good time if their drink of choice is on the menu.

"Since there will be a variety of people at the party, and since there will inevitably be strangers, it would be a good idea to plan for omnivores and vegetarians alike."

It's a good idea to keep a couple brands of beer in the fridge or on tap, and should someone desire a rum and Coke or vodka tonic, have it ready to mix up.

Should they thirst for a Merlot or Cabernet Sauvignon, be sure it's eagerly awaiting their arrival at the bar (or kitchen sink).

Brand name beverages don't need to be provided, and an empty wallet doesn't have to result from catering to guests.

Ask the proprietor of the local alcohol distributor and they will be happy to list the brands of booze that offer the best value.

None of this will matter, however, if the party has the air of a funeral.

This is the Super Bowl we're talking about.

It's an occasion almost as joyous as President's Day, so make the most of it.

The best way to do this is to have a party theme.

The number of possible themes is countless, and it only takes a little imagination.

Think of a favorite TV show or a favorite movie.

Tell people to dress up as someone from their favorite profession or their favorite pop star.

Here's an example.

Last year, I attended a party where everyone dressed up as an athlete whose career was cut short by tragic injury.

I went as Joe Theisman (poor guy).

No matter what decision is reached for this year's Super Bowl party, remember to add variety.

Mix up the party table, drink counter and keep it spontaneous.

Throwing the same old boring cliched party is passe.

People will remember if the host is a Crazy Cathy or Deadbeat Darryl.

Songwriter consolidates strengths for best album

Individualistic album still accessible

"C'mon Miracle"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Singer/songwriter is a genre welcomed by all music critics, but a certain amount of trepidation is always present.

In order for a singer/songwriter to survive, he or she must create and maintain a unique voice, writing style and/or musical arrangement within their songs.

For every Elliott Smith or Jeff Buckley emerging on the scene there is a John Mayer or a John Ondrasik (of Five For Fighting) to give naysayers a reason to criticize the genre.

Mirah Yom Tov Zeitlyn was a member of the critically acclaimed lo-fi indie group, The Microphones.

As a solo artist, she had a wildly creative energy that flowed through all of her song lyrics and arrangements, but she lacked the focus to put all of her ideas into a fully cohesive album.

Enter "C'mon Miracle," the album showcasing a more mature Mirah, playing to her strengths, both in her songwriting and in her music.

She works with producer Phil Elvrum who, with his production and instrumentation, helps bring melody and power to even the softest of Mirah's material.

The album opens with "Nobody Has to Stay," a song that begins with a gently strummed guitar to complement Mirah's soft, breathy voice.

The chorus of the song has Mirah scolding Israel for their war-like ways: "You know that it's not right/After all you've been through/You should know better than to become/The wicked ones Almighty God once saved you from."

In two minutes and fifteen seconds, Mirah has created an extremely powerful and relevant song.

"The Light" is a definite album highlight.

It begins with a creeping bass line and electronic sample that grows into a fantastic winding vocal line; then, once the song hits the 90-second mark, it decelerates to a slow, beautifully strummed guitar with equally restrained vocals.

Another album highlight is "We're Both So Sorry."

The song's first half has mysterious horns floating in and out of Mirah's voice and guitar; during the final half of the song, all instruments fall out and a pounding synth line takes over.

It is an excellent example of Mirah's unique style.

The following song, "The Dogs of Buenos Aires," is a light, fun song with a jaunty Latin-flavored flourish.

Halfway through the song an accordion picks up the rhythm and a woman tells a story in Spanish that helps supplement Mirah's story.

"C'mon Miracle" draws to a close with softer, gentler songs that help complement the wild and experimental material before it.

Mirah has proven she can create a work that is as individualistic as she is, while still allowing it to be accessible.

Place Mirah on the side of potentially great singer/songwriters.

Men, women learn roles of marriage early

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Little girls often romanticize the thought of their own wedding day by dressing up and dreaming of a ceremony on a hill while Prince Charming brings his trusty steed to carry her away into the sunset.

If one asks a little boy, however, about his dream for the perfect wedding, he will often turn up his nose at the idea before scampering off to more battles with his G.I. Joe's.

Stacey Blalock Henry, doctoral student in marriage and family therapy, said these ideas are formed because of societal gender roles rather than an inborn behavior.

Blalock Henry thinks the common tradition of the woman being in charge of planning the ceremony places an emphasis in a little girl's mind on the importance of creating a marriage.

"It is traditional for women to plan the wedding," she said.

"It brings a sense of excitement, especially for a young girl with older siblings planning weddings, to plan the ceremony.

"The girl then looks forward to growing older. She looks forward to the chance of someone proposing to her and she begins to become excited for her own wedding."

Thoughts of marriage begin to seriously emerge in late adolescence for girls, around the age of 15 or 16, Blalock Henry said.

Men consider marriage in adolescence, but they don't think about it with any gravity until they are in their mid-twenties.

If the child grows up in a single or double parent household, it doesn't contribute much to whether or not the child will get married, Blalock Henry said.

Dr. L. Susan Williams, associate professor of sociology and criminology specializing in gender and violence, also believes that factors surrounding the child attribute more to the culture's held value of marriage than a psychological factor within the child.

"From an early age, girls are taught to value relationships, while boys are taught to value rough- and tumble-play," Williams said. "Quite early, girls subconsciously shoulder the responsibility of finding and having a relationship."

Girls will get praise for being "good girls" and building connections and relationships with others, while boys are taught to be "the best" and first in line, Williams said.

There also is a lot of societal pressure placed upon girls to get married and find a husband. Some girls even hold the idea that the only reason to come to college is to find a husband, Williams said.

"It is a constant barrage upon women to get married," she said. "Even if you aren't thinking about it, you can't not think about it. The media is inundating women with romanticized images of marriage."

Williams said that it is difficult for women who do not wish to get married to survive in this culture.

"If you never want to get married, you're just like a fish swimming upstream," she said.

"You are going against the current."

Attachment to a strong male also carries over to the business world.

Williams said that the greatest predictor of success for a woman in business is to be linked to a significant male mentor that sponsors the woman and gets her into the right jobs, networks, clubs, etc.

"Ultimately, the vision of a woman attached to a male, married or otherwise, is a large factor in determining a woman's success in this culture," Williams said. "Not surprisingly, we are gendered to meet these conventions."

Lee-Lawrence

Erin Lee, junior in early childhood education, and Zachary Lawrence, graduate student in special education, announce their engagement.
Erin is the daughter of Jim and Celeste Lee, Phoenix, Ariz., and Zachary is the son of Leonard and Gloria Lawrence, Winfield, Kan.

They plan a June 11 wedding in Wichita.

Misak-Walker

Amy Misak, senior in microbiology and pre-dentistry, and Joel Walker, K-State graduate, announce their engagement.

Amy is the daughter of Terry and Becky Misak, Derby, Kan., and Joel is the son of John and Rosie Walker, Anthony, Kan.

They plan a May 28 wedding in Anthony, Kan.

Preparing for marriage more important than wedding

JAMES HURLA

My wife had only a couple of nightmares about planning our wedding last year.

Luckily, the only one that came true was that she would spend the rest of her life waking up next to me.

Despite the endless hours of eccentric male florists and a mildly pushy priest, my wife avoided what is said to be one of the greatest pitfalls for young couples: We were able to maintain our focus on planning our marriage, not just our wedding day.

I spent more time in pre-marital counseling than I did contributing to any other aspect of the wedding.

Laura spent the bulk of her time running around her mother's house in her wedding dress, but also managed to plan every detail of the wedding.

I booked the honeymoon on the Internet and then played video games.

One of the few planning activities that required input from both of us was the pre-marital counseling with the officiants.

Our wedding involved a priest, a minister and a rabbi's son's friend; only the priest walked into a bar, though.

Because of the Catholic-Baptist service, we were blessed with more time than usual for pre-marital counseling – we were able to cover more bases that way.

This setup involved additional hours of training to fulfill the requirements of each religion. In all, we spent more than 20 hours with clergy and counselors, discussing aspects of our marriage such as how often I would have to do the dishes, how many kids we want and how many times per week I would be required to shower.

The answers were four, seven and zero, although not in that order.

But the great thing about these sessions is that they made us look past the fact we had a year of school left, had no jobs, were without insurance and had not begun to understand why she spends hours doing her makeup, and I spend hours in the bathroom reading.

We were forced to focus on the things that would someday become second nature.

In a way, the counseling sessions were our last chance to look at one another and decide, "No, I don't want to wash his/her underwear for the rest of my life."

Now, eight months into our marriage, we are better for those seemingly trite meetings.

At those meetings, we completed questionnaires about who would fulfill which chores around the house, and although we haven't stuck to every projection, just being forced to think about it proved useful in transitioning into being roommates and friends.

However, there is a small problem that arose from the meetings.

On the questionnaire, we agreed our children would be responsible for taking out the trash.

So, if anyone has ideas on how to remove eight months of trash, we're open to suggestions.

James is happily married. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Friends, family can help reduce wedding planning anxiety

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Planning the caterers, flowers, cakes, dresses, tuxedoes and invitations for a wedding causes many couples to have stress.

Megan Brent, a Post-Doctoral Fellow at K-State's Counseling Services, offers many ways to cope with the stress a wedding can present.

"It is very important that the couple maintains a high level of communication throughout the planning process. The bride especially should let the groom know what help she needs from him from the very beginning," she said.

Brent said the groom should remember to be sensitive to the bride's stress and volunteer to help.

"The groom can be a big stress reliever to the bride by asking her what he can do to be helpful," Brent said.

Brent said it was important for couples to spend fun-time together away from their wedding plans, doing activities such as date night once a week.

Couples also can use the conventional methods of stress relief, such as making sure to get enough sleep, exercising regularly, listening to music or getting a massage.

Mark Corrigan, graduate student in animal science, and Anne Benner, communications assistant for the Division of Continuing Education, have been working for almost a year now to plan their April 16 wedding.

Benner said the key to keeping the stress of planning low is not procrastinating.

"You have to book churches and reception sites at least a year in advance, so it is important to start looking early. Once we decided on St. Isidore's Catholic Church, the date was pretty much decided on what weekends they had available," she said.

Another aspect of wedding planning that couples dread is the financial burden.

Corrigan said staying within budget has caused the most worries for Benner and him.

"Sit down first and decide how much you can realistically spend then be strict in sticking to that figure," he said.

Benner said the expenses added up quickly forcing the couple to spend more than they originally intended to.

Despite all this stress there are fun aspects of planning the wedding, like choosing a wedding dress, Benner said.

"Trying on a variety of dresses was my favorite part," Benner said.

She also credits both of their families and her friends, who will serve as bridesmaids, for all the help they have given the couple during the planning process.

K-state's Counseling Services also offers a solution to help with wedding stress.

They have couples therapy in which just one person in the relationship has to attend K-State full time in order to receive the discounted sessions. The first four sessions are free, after that it is $12 per session. The fee is $20 per session after 10 sessions.

Counseling Services encourages couples to come in for a session whether they are planning a wedding, already married or even just dating.

Start your engagement off right with a glamorous announcement celebration

By Lori Seto
WWW.THEKNOT.COM

Think unforgettable when you plan your engagement party. As in, the creme de la creme of celebratory occasions. Lay on the style, the muss, the fuss, for a party to top all parties. Here are five glam ideas to get your wheels turning. Warning: Cash is required.

1. UP, UP, AND AWAY
Rent a hot-air balloon and have a party in midair. Some companies have baskets that hold up to 16 people, or you can rent several balloons with smaller baskets and snap pics of the view and of each other. Awe-inspiring vistas will get people talking and this once-in-a-lifetime experience will forever mark your engagement party in the memories of your guests. Land in a picturesque spot and enjoy a catered champagne brunch.

2. SWIRL, SNIFF, AND SIP
Arrange for a private wine tasting at a local cooking school or winery (be sure hors d'oeuvres are included) or have a guest speaker or local wine maker come to your home to lead the tasting. Use place cards to make sure guests are sipping (not spitting!) with people they don't know for optimal effect.

3. COSTUME BALL COCKTAILS
Throw a themed cocktail party. Ask your guests to dress up as their favorite married celebrities, silver- or small-screen couple. Or, suggest they dress up as a character those celebrities have played. For example, a woman could dress up as Tea Leoni playing Tina, the neurotic grad student in Flirting With Disaster, a man as David Duchovny playing Agent Mulder.

Or, a woman could come as Lorraine Bracco playing the psychologist in The Sopranos and her beau as Edward James Olmos playing a teacher in Stand and Deliver.

4. PENTHOUSE VIEW
Rent a skybox for the big game and enjoy a primo view of your favorite team. Sports, with their glorious saves, infuriating misses, and endless statistics, are a great conversation starter. For those only peripherally interested in the antics of the field, be sure cocktails and passed hors d'oeuvres are in ample supply.

5. STUDIO 54 REDUX
Glam out in your finest duds and trip the light fantastic at a rented nightclub complete with a disco ball, smokin' DJ, strobe lights, cigarette (cigar or candy) girls, theme-dressed waiters, hors d'oeuvres, and drinks.

For example, if you and your mate are both from San Francisco, have the waitstaff dress in retro '30s garb and serve martinis and pan-Asian appetizers. Make sure the DJ plays some oldies but goodies for the older crowd.

SIMONEAU | Former Wildcat to play for Eagles in Super Bowl

Simoneau's brothers, Tim and Jeff, Marcia said, were his biggest influences growing up, along with NFL legends Zach Thomas of the Miami Dolphins, and Mike Singletary of the Chicago Bears.

"Once Mark saw his brothers go off to play football in college, he knew it was something he really wanted to do," Marcia said. "He always thought of the NFL as unrealistic, though."

Smith Center, a small town about two hours north of Manhattan, was quite the football community, Marcia said.

"Smith Center was a safe community where everyone knew each other and cared about each other," Marcia said. "And it was a big football community where everyone would either watch the game or listen to it on the radio."

Once college came around, K-State was Simoneau's first and only choice.

"Mark knew early on that he wanted to go to K-State," Marcia said.

While at K-State, Simoneau played four successful seasons under coach Bill Snyder after redshirting for one year.

In 1999, Simoneau's senior season, he was named Big 12 Defensive Player of the Year, he was a finalist for the prestigious Butkus Award - given annually to the nation's top linebacker - and was a two-time All-American.

In April 2000, Simoneau was drafted by the Atlanta Falcons. He played two years for the Falcons before making the move to Philadelphia in 2003 to play for the Eagles.

The decision, Marcia said, was based upon the Eagles' wanting Simoneau to start at the linebacker position.

"Mark is very happy with the Eagles," Marcia said. "What an awesome opportunity to have achieved and fulfilled."

Now, two days before the Super Bowl, Simoneau, a starting linebacker who has had 260 tackles in his five-year NFL career, has been sidelined since the Eagle's regular-season finale.

However, according to the Eagles' website, Simoneau practiced Feb. 2 and is "probable for the game."

"As far as I know, his ankle injury is doing fairly well," Marcia said. "I believe they are planning for him to play."

While Simoneau has relocated to Philadelphia, and Marcia and husband Jim have since moved to Rosehill, Kan. – a suburb outside of Wichita – to be closer to their kids, they still have fond memories of life in Smith Center.

"It was a great place to raise kids," Marcia said.

Coincidentally, Smith Center has not forgotten about the Simoneau's either, especially Mark.

Members of his hometown, including Jolene Brewer, a cook at Paul's Cafe in Smith Center, said she is proud of Simoneau's success.

"We think it's great and will definitely be watching the game Sunday," Brewer said. "His hometown's rooting for him."

Rusty Wilson in 1989 and was sold to Anderson in 2004. In 1997, it was named to Playboy's Top 100 bars list. In celebration, Wilson gave away 400 copies of the magazine and made t-shirts.

Wilson said the Sports Illustrated ranking is more prestigious.

"It's a way bigger honor," he said. "To be ranked No. 12 is quite an honor for me and for Pete."

Wilson expanded Last Chance in 2000 to include Rusty's Next Door, Manhattan's first non-smoking bar. The Rusty's complex also includes Rusty's Outback with pool tables and darts and Rusty's Other Side, which sells Rusty's merchandise.

"Each bar is unique," Anderson said. "You get some people that just go to Outback and some people just go to Next Door for the no smoking. Each one has a different character and a different crowd."

Anderson said what sold the Sports Illustrated on Rusty's was the game day atmosphere.

"It's one big block party," he said. "We have a unique set-up with the front and back patio."

A celebration will be planned next week.

Rusty's has recently added a local music lineup with 18 and over entry and a dance night on Tuesdays.

"It's by far not the nicest bar in town," Anderson said, "but it's got character."

around the top for superintendent salaries for similar-sized districts.

Shannon's interview on Friday was the first of three. Rod Allen, Coffeyville superintendent, and Craig Fiegel, superintendent in Evergreen Park, Ill., were the other candidates.

More than 300 people attended public meetings for the interviews, and about 200 people returned feedback forms for the candidates, he said.

"It was very evident that in every category and every aspect Dr. Shannon rose to the top," he said.

Pesaresi said Shannon's commitment to education, ability to work with kids and the programs he's implemented at McPherson were admirable.

After being in McPherson for 16 years, it was time to try something different, he said.

"I leave with very mixed emotions," Shannon said. "The excitement and enticement of new challenges and new work counterbalances the sadness of leaving."

BASKETBALL | Buffaloes on 2-game conference losing streak

"We try to get him the ball as much as we can," Wooldridge said. "He's really been very productive over the last month or so."

Despite putting up good numbers once again, Massey said it really did not matter.

"I'm not going to say I'm satisfied, because we didn't come away with the win," Massey said.

Massey and the Wildcats will have a chance to get back on the winning track against a Buffalo team on a two-game slide despite high point production.

Saturday's game could have extra importance for the Wildcats, as three of their next four games will be against ranked teams.

Freshman point guard Clent Stewart said defeating the Buffaloes is a must.

"We've got to buckle up and get ready to go," Stewart said. "Colorado's coming in, and we've got to defend our homecourt, so we've got to get ready for it."

out joints, as stripper poles descend onto the stage. McCartney then busts out his version of "Pimp Juice," as Fox executives look for the quickest way out of the stadium.

SECOND HALF

Eagles quarterback, Donovan McNabb will come out of halftime on fire as he goes after quarterback/wide receiver/cornerback Brown, who will still be tired from playing every snap in the first half.

The Eagles end the third quarter pulling ahead of the Patriots, 17-14.

Patriots offensive coordinator/genius Charlie Weis will begin to call nothing but Hail Mary's. Belichick storms over, asks what is going on and Weis, who was hired by Notre Dame, says "The Lord is calling the plays now."

The Patriots' constant Hail Mary will finally pay off, as New England reaches the Eagles' 30-yard line with three seconds.

Kicker Adam Vinatieri, then will set up for the game tying field-goal. As the ball is snapped, the crazy Irish priest from the Olympics will run onto the field and grab Vinatieri, breaking up the field-goal attempt. Final score: Eagles 17, Patriots 14.

Now, I know you might think I've completely lost it, but I just don't want to have to say I told you so.

Gay marriage ban receives mixed response

By Matthew Schlobohm
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Kansas constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage has passed in both the Kansas House of Representatives and Senate.

In the final action needed for a question on the April 5 ballot, the House adopted a proposed constitutional amendment to ban same-sex marriage and civil unions for gay couples. The vote barely reached the 83-vote requirement, passing 87-36 on Wednesday.

The bill has received mixed reviews from students at K-State.

"Obviously, we were sort of expecting it," said April Chancellor, vice president of the KSU Young Democrats. "Once we heard the results of the Senate, we wrote a letter to the representatives (in the House) to see if some would switch their vote to 'no.'"

Chancellor went on to say that the group received a few replies, but not many.

Both of Manhattan's representatives – Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan and Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan – joined 34 of their colleagues in voting against the bill.

Rachel Olds, President of the KSU College Republicans, said that she is glad that the ban is going to go to a vote. "It's not something that a group of our Legislature should decide in Topeka," she said.

Supporters of the amendment have been waiting for this vote for quite a while. Last year, the bill failed to pass the Kansas Legislature and could not be debated again until this cycle.

"Other states had the opportunity to do this," Olds said. "Last (congressional) session the bill failed and they had to start all over. I think it's about time to vote on this."

But not everyone agrees that this issue should be priority number one for our lawmakers.

"I think that there are far more important issues of concern to us than writing discrimination into the Constitution," said Leigh Fine, president of the KSU Queer-Straight Alliance.

Fine said that a lot of students who are "anti-gay" simply don't know any better. "They just think of some nameless, faceless other," he said. "One of QSA's major goals is to get out and put a face to the problem. It's a lot harder to discriminate against someone who has a face."

These are the states that have adopted amendments banning same-sex marriage to their state constitutions. Kansans will vote on a proposed constitutional amendment on April 5.

Canada may discontinue drug exports

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Canada may no longer be participating in the importation of prescription drugs to the United States.

The importation of prescription drugs from Canada is part of the I-SaveRx program, which provides safe and affordable prescription drugs from other countries to people who don't have access to those services.

Kansas became the fourth state to be added to the program in late November, joining Wisconsin, Missouri and the developer of the program, Illinois.

Ron Riley of Candlewood Healthmart Pharmacy said he does not think the program will have a big effect on any pharmacy's business.

"It won't have a major impact on any one pharmacy, but it may have a negative effect on the program," he said. "I think that it will all work out though; it is business."

According to a press release from Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' office, I-SaveRx provides more than 26 million people in the four states access to lower-cost prescription drugs.

"We must make health care and life-sustaining prescription drugs more affordable for seniors and hardworking Kansans," Sebelius said. "After carefully reviewing the I-SaveRx program, I'm convinced it will help tens of thousands of Kansans safely obtain the medicine they need at prices they can afford."

I-SaveRx provides prescription drugs through a network of approved wholesalers in the United Kingdom, Ireland and Canada. The program has built-in safety measures to ensure

Colorful trend

Bracelets help local organizations raise money for charity

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Each color has a special meaning.

Bracelets ranging in color from yellow to purple have become a fashion trend. The fad began with the yellow "Livestrong" bands created to benefit Lance Armstrong's cancer foundation. Now there are blue and red colors representing political party affiliation.

K-State even has purple bands that say "K-State."

Hibbett Sports in Manhattan Town Center sold the Lance Armstrong bracelets last year. Although it no longer carries the bands, it sold out very quickly, manager John Peterson said.

"We sold 60," Peterson said. "The first box of 30 sold in about a week. The second box sold in a day. People were buying five, six, seven at a time."

Since the success of the bracelets, many charities have used the same idea.

Up 'Til Dawn is selling an orange bracelet to benefit St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn.

"We got the bracelets made to piggyback off the success of the Lance Armstrong bracelets," said Dan Patrick, executive director of Up 'Til Dawn and junior in advertising, public relations and Spanish.

Raising money for charity isn't the only purpose the bracelets serve; wearing them also helps raise awareness for the cause.

Kara Gross, communications director for Up 'Til Dawn and graduate student in accounting, said when people ask her about the bracelets, it gives her an opportunity to tell them about the charity.

There's at least one bracelet that uses the band only for awareness. Ryan Bellassai, freshman in open option, wears one such bracelet along with his yellow "Livestrong" band.

He got his red bracelet with "My Soldier" written on it for free from Manhattanville College in New York.

On its Web site, www.mville.edu, there is a link to the program that allows you to adopt a soldier and write letters to the soldier. According to the Web site, about 80 percent of the soldiers will reply.

Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity had been selling purple K-State bracelets before Up 'Til Dawn began selling theirs. The proceeds from Pike's bands are split between the Ali Kemp Foundation and the American Cancer Society.

With so many bracelets available, it's important to many people to remember their purpose and not just the fashion statement they make, Ballassai said.

"I don't think it's enough to give a dollar to the cancer foundation," he said. "You should give time, money or whatever you can to help."

Kansans could receive refunds for taxes paid on used cars

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Kansas law concerning taxation of the private sale of used automobiles may be repealed within the next month.

The law, passed by the Kansas Legislature during the 2004 session, requires county treasurers to monitor used car transactions between individuals across the state. The treasurer compares the price paid in each sale to the car's estimated value in the National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA) Blue Book. Any car sold for a considerably lower amount than its listed value is assigned a sales tax based on the higher NADA estimate.

"(The law) was designed to protect the state from people who say they bought a car for $5 just to avoid paying sales tax," said Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan.

However, many citizens buying used cars in less-than-mint condition were forced to pay comparatively high sales tax, and they view the law as unfair.

Manhattan resident Theron Jarvis has a used truck for sale, and he disagreed with the current tax system.

"There are so many variables in a car's value," he said. "Just because I'm selling a Dodge Ram doesn't mean it's worth what the (Blue) Book says."

The Kansas Senate voted unanimously to repeal the law in early January. The House of Representatives began to debate the bill last week.

If the new bill is passed, a used vehicle's sales tax would be figured solely on its sale price, stated in an affidavit signed by the

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Super Bowl without controversy

Eliot J. Schechter | EPA
Fireworks explode during Paul McCartney's performance in the halftime show of Super Bowl XXXIX at Alltel Stadium.

McCartney

Sir Paul McCartney promised Super Bowl viewers last week there would be no repeat of last year's infamous Janet Jackson/Justin Timberlake half-time wardrobe incident. The former Beatle entertained millions of people during his half-time entertainment at Super Bowl XXXIX on Sunday. The New England Patriots beat the Philadelphia Eagles, 24-21.

J LO'S ENGAGEMENT ROCK

One year after Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck called it quits, the singer's engagement ring is back in the hands of New York jeweler Harry Winston. The jeweler's spokesperson said the ring's sale price is available only to "serious buyers."

Affleck purchased the 6-carat pink diamond ring in 2002, but the couple called off their wedding in 2004, mainly due to massive media attention.

STATE OF UNION ADDRESS

President George W. Bush pushed his Social Security initiative forward Wednesday during his State of the Union address. Bush expressed concern over the future of Social Security, but said he will work at turning its revenue into private investment accounts for younger Americans. Bush also reassured older citizens, saying their benefits will not be changed.

POPE'S HEALTH IMPROVES

The 84-year-old pope has been in the hospital since Feb. 1, battling the flu.

Because of his illness, the pope will not meet U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice.

The last time the pope canceled an event was September 2003, when he had an intestinal ailment.

CHENEY SAYS NO

Cheney

Vice President Dick Cheney told "Fox News Sunday" that he will not run for presidency in 2008 – no matter what.

Cheney clearly expressed his plans to retire at the end of his current term.

"I've got my plans laid out," Cheney told the news program. "I'm going to serve this president for the next four years, and then I'm out of here."

KANSAS GAY MARRIAGE

The House of Representatives advanced a proposal Thursday that would amend the state constitution to ban gay marriage and same-sex civil unions in Kansas. As a result, the proposal will go on the April 5 ballot, which means Kansas residents will have their say on the issue.

Many Kansans weren't surprised by the action taken by the House because it is considered the more conservative of the Legislature's two chambers. The Senate passed it last month.

NEW SUPERINTENDENT

Shannon

Officials at USD 383 announced Bob Shannon as the school district's new superintendent at Wednesday's school board meeting. Shannon, who is the former superintendent of McPherson public schools, will replace Sharol Little. Shannon's term begins July 1.

GlobalFlyer built for efficiency

Lighter plane will allow for additional fuel storage

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina will sponsor an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

Fast facts

	GlobalFlyer	Boeing 747
Gross weight:	22,000	870,000
Wingspan:	114 feet	212 feet, 2 inches

The GlobalFlyer is no ordinary plane.

Uniquely built for its goal of flying around the globe without stopping to refuel, the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer, which will take off from Salina Municipal Airport with help from K-State-Salina students, differs greatly from passenger planes.

With a 114-foot wingspan, the plane's configuration "is optimized for range and fuel efficiency," according to www.globalflyer.com.

Mike Paul, member of the maintenance crew and junior in aviation maintenance, said the plane flies like a glider.

"It's got a large wingspan, which you don't traditionally use," he said.

A Boeing 747-400, a common commercial aircraft, has a wingspan of 212 feet, 2 inches, and a gross weight of 800,000 to 870,000 pounds, according to www.aircraft-photos.net.

Empty, the GlobalFlyer weighs 3,350 pounds, but it will weigh 22,000 pounds at takeoff.

"There's basically 18,000 pounds of fuel," Paul said.

The amount of fuel carried, which is more than is carried by a passenger plane, makes the GlobalFlyer unlike others.

"When it takes off, this airplane is like a flying gas can," K-State-Salina Dean Dennis Kuhlman said.

The plane's weight will be 83 percent fuel at takeoff, whereas passenger planes are never more than 50 percent fuel, Paul said. However, the fuel is stored in the same areas on the GlobalFlyer as on passenger planes.

Burt Rutan of Scaled Composites designed the plane, removing weight at all possible points, Paul said.

Some tread was removed from the tires, and smaller radios linking pilot Steve Fossett to Mission Control in Salina, Kan., were used.

The plane is crafted from a light-weight, flexible carbon-fiber material instead of the sheet metal used on most planes, said Aaron Grunden, member of the maintenance crew and graduate in airway science and aviation maintenance.

"There's a big weight difference there," Paul said. "That way they could carry more fuel."

Each addition to the plane was carefully considered because each added pound of material required five extra pounds of fuel, Grunden said.

The GlobalFlyer's landing gear also differs from that of a passenger plane. Passenger planes utilize hydraulic pumps that can be used many times, but the GlobalFlyer uses a system that will only be effective three or four times before it needs to be serviced, Paul said.

"It's just ran by air over hydraulic fluid," he said.

However, the lighter landing gear is still sturdy enough to support the plane when it is full of fuel at takeoff, Grunden said.

"A lot of the systems on the aircraft were specifically designed for this aircraft," he said.

Speed for the GlobalFlyer will be slower than those at which passenger planes fly.

Fossett will depend more on favorable winds and a strong jet stream, Grunden said.

Students ring in new year

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Traditional Vietnamese music, red and yellow balloons and celebration for the year of the rooster greeted those walking into the Grand Ballroom of the K-State Student Union Saturday.

About 300 people attended "Rooster talk with Kieu and Guy" to celebrate the Tet, the Vietnamese lunar new year.

"I think the people who attended have a new insight on what our culture is like and how we celebrate," Kieu Nguyen, junior in business administration, said. "They wanted to share our celebration."

The program featured the traditional lion dance, a modern fan dance, a martial arts demonstration, a fashion show and performances by the band "Hatch 'til Dawn."

There was also a movie created by students in the Vietnamese Student Association.

"I liked the movie at the last," Nozomi Matsumiya, junior in biology, said. "They always do it every year."

The program also included interviews with Charles Nguyen, who is the Dean of the College of Engineering at Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., and Phillip Nguyen, who is the president of Apex Inc. in Kansas City.

Charles Nguyen spoke of the struggles of going from Vietnam to Germany and then to the United States.

"I saw discrimination in Germany and the United States," Charles Nguyen said.

He said the discrimination made him work hard to be a better person and be successful.

Charles Nguyen also spoke of academics and politics. He said most Vietnamese strive for academics to be successful in life. Even so, he wants to see Vietnamese-Americans become a part of the government and more involved in politics.

Phillip Nguyen, who is a former president of K-State's Vietnamese Student Association as well as the brother of Kieu Nguyen, spoke of how his life in Vietnam differed from life in America. He came to the United States when he was 16 years old and said in Vietnam, schools are more strict.

"I'm proud because he's my brother and he is very accomplished," Kieu Nguyen said.

Following the show, there was a performance by Johnny Dung as well as a band from Kansas City.

"They had some technical difficulties, but he did an excellent job," Kieu Nguyen

"He had a good variety of music and got the crowd going."

V-Week addresses domestic violence

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Union Program Council is sponsoring events throughout the week in an effort to stop violence against women and girls.

V-Week expands on the national V-Day campaigns that several communities have to bring awareness to violence against females.

Pink shirts and wristbands that say "K-State V-Day 2005" will be on sale throughout the week in the UPC office.

About 90 percent of the money raised during K-State's V-Week will be distributed to the K-State's Women Center and The Crisis Center, Inc., in Manhattan.

The national V-Day beneficiary, The Organization of Women's Freedom in Iraq, will receive the remaining 10 percent.

MONDAY
The Clothesline Project will have T-shirts displaying messages against violence hanging from clotheslines in the K-State Student Union.

TUESDAY
"The Day my God Died," a PBS documentary about females sold into slavery, will be shown at 8 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre.

WEDNESDAY
Campus organizations supporting the cause to stop violence against women will have an exposition from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the Union.

THURSDAY
A non-violence demonstration with signs celebrating women will be from 4:30 to 6 p.m. at the Higinbotham Gate, at the corner of North Manhattan Avenue and Anderson Avenue.

FRIDAY - SUNDAY
An art exhibit and a silent auction with works that show what V-Week means to each artist will be at 6 p.m. Friday in the board room at the K-State Alumni Center.

"The Vagina Monologues" will be shown at 8 p.m. in Forum Hall. Tickets cost $5 and can be purchased in the UPC office on the third floor of the Union.

TO THE POINT

Jerseys should not be retired immediately

On Saturday, K-State honored three of the greatest men's basketball players to ever wear a Wildcat uniform.

Former Wildcat stars Bob Boozer, Jack Parr and Ernie Barrett became the first K-State men's basketball players to have their jerseys retired.

The three played in the glory days of basketball back in the 1940s and 50s and helped build one of the greatest basketball traditions in the nation.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The fact that K-State waited almost 50 years to retire the trio's jerseys is not a problem. By allowing that much time to pass, Boozer, Parr and Barrett's stories became legendary.

However, they were not the first K-State basketball players to be honored.

That distinction belongs to former women's basketball player Nicole Ohlde, who had her jersey retired after her final game at Bramlage Coliseum last season.

There is no question Ohlde was worthy of the honor, but the retirement of her jersey while she was still in a Wildcat uniform was wrong. She played four more games after her jersey was retired.

Instead, K-State needs guidelines for the jersey retirement – a 10 year waiting period – and the retirement of Ohlde's jersey should have been put on hold.

The retirement of the jerseys of Boozer, Parr and Barrett was a step in the right direction. But there need to be guidelines set so that a player like Ohlde – while worthy of the honor – would have to wait, and those who came before could get their due.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Safe sex 101

Sex education should include both abstinence, safe sex methods

JEREMY PARKER

Here's a hypothetical situation: you enroll in a course on hunting safety. When your instructor walks in on the first day, he tells the class that "the only way to truly be safe when hunting is to not hunt. Class dismissed."

Wouldn't that be a foolish way to teach the class, considering that statistically, some of the students are bound to go hunting in the near future?

Now wouldn't it be even more foolish to teach a sex education class that way? Unfortunately, this became the reality for Texas teenagers last summer.

The Texas Board of Education approved the distribution of new abstinence-only textbooks which will be used in nearly every middle school and high school in the state.

Three of the four textbooks exclude contraceptive discussion entirely, while the fourth makes "passing mention" of condoms.

Furthering the absurdity, the Reuters news service reported that one of the texts in question advises teenagers that one way to avoid sexually transmitted diseases is to get plenty of rest, "so he or she can have a clear head about sex and choose abstinence."

The Texas Board of Education's goal of promoting abstinence is admirable, but to do so by eliminating all discussion of safe sex is negligent, irresponsible and naïve.

Teenagers are going to be interested in sex. It's inevitable, like paying taxes or baseball being boring.

Texas switching to a "there's no sex like no sex" approach isn't going to change the fact that, for high schoolers, "being a virgin" ranks toward the very bottom of the "List of Things Guaranteed to Impress Your Peers" (just barely edging out "driving 16 hours to see Weird Al").

The most troubling thing of all is that much of this was brought on by staggering misconceptions that many parents harbor of modern-day health classes.

Many assume that teaching a sex-ed curriculum that actually contains frank information about sex will automatically lead to Blumpkinpalooza at the local junior high.

They also think that classes that include the practical application of contraceptives don't teach abstinence. This couldn't be more wrong.

Every sexed class since the beginning of time has taught that abstinence is the only foolproof method of birth control and that there are risks involved with having sex.

It's not like abstinence education is some revolutionary new approach that we've never tried before. It's been going on since sex-ed began, and every person on the planet knows that it's the only way to truly prevent pregnancy and STDs.

And yes, some people listen. But many don't, and we should cut our losses and start educating safety.

I personally feel that the best approach to sexed is the one they've been using in Manhattan for years. A little abstinence talk here, a little contraceptive talk there, and then it's on to the childbirth videos and disturbingly graphic STD slides (I still can't eat cauliflower, even though it's been seven years).

There's no doubt that America would be much better off if every high school student waited to have sex until marriage.

But the reality is that this is never going to happen, regardless of which angle we take in classes.

That's why eliminating healthy discussion about contraceptives will be detrimental to Texas teenagers. Those who forego abstinence will be left in the dark about STD and pregnancy prevention techniques, and that would be a complete calamity.

Because, honestly, does the world really need any more Texans?

Teachers should show failure of condoms, emotional effects of sex

ANNIE LEWIS

Two weeks ago, I wrote about the torture women go through when they have to choose between abortion and carrying a baby full-term. Put all that weight on a 15-year-old girl's shoulders, and you have a serious tragedy.

Not only does a young girl have more social concerns than a college student, but not finishing high school is more detrimental than dropping out of college.

U.S. presidents have tried to solve the dilemma of teen pregnancy for years. George W. Bush is the first to invest millions of dollars in a fresh approach to sex education: teaching students not to have sex. Abstaining from sex is 100 percent foolproof. If the sperm and egg don't meet, a baby will not be created.

Giving a teenager the choice of condoms and birth control is like giving a diabetic a mostly sugar-free chocolate bar. According to an FDA study in 2003, condoms have an 11 percent failure rate, and contraception is not infallible.

Furthermore, it is well known that condoms and birth control do not prevent sexually transmitted diseases. Do you think a diabetic would eat a candy bar if it was 20 percent full of sugar? No, that diabetic would be playing Russian roulette.

Promiscuity with a false sense of protection is the reason for high pregnancy and STD rates in our country. Teenagers think that since they are on birth control or using condoms, they can do whatever they want without consequences. A sense of invincibility leads juveniles to take risks.

Abstinence-only education puts their priorities straight. If parents are not going to teach their kids about sex, schools have to take responsibility. Instead of teaching ways to avoid trouble while having sex, let's teach young minds the safest tool of all – abstinence.

Teaching students the unreliability of condoms and birth control provides the truth needed to make correct decisions. It's all about wording. Instead of saying condoms are 85 percent effective, educators should say they are 15 percent fallible.

The abstinence-only program in Ohio mentions birth control, but only as a minor detail. Instead of pushing its effectiveness, the curriculum teaches the safest way of all – abstinence. This only makes sense when considering the age group.

For adolescents, there are many more consequences to sex than just the physical ones. Young people need to be educated about them as much as they need to be know about road hazards in drivers education.

The main opposition is by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif.. The Jan. 2 Columbus Dispatch reported that Waxman felt abstinence-only education was teaching misinformation and stereotypes as well as undervaluing the effectiveness of condoms.

Waxman's report itself was misleading. Valerie Huber, abstinence education coordinator for the Ohio Department of Health, said the report stated pregnancy without intercourse was unlikely but not impossible. Also, Huber said claiming it taught gender stereotypes was incorrect. The curriculum states that men and women look at relationships differently.

This makes sense to me. When I was in high school, it was very difficult to find a guy who wanted a serious relationship. Most of the guys I knew were more into the "here and now" of satisfying sexual cravings.

Guys do look at relationships differently, especially as teenagers. People tend to forget that we are dealing with teenagers here, not seasoned adults.

Teaching teens the dangers of sex instead of ways to have sex and avoid the consequences is the correct choice for the federal government to make. Students ought to know full well what they are jumping into when they jump into bed.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

To the person who contradicted my "I am god of Mario Tennis" comment: bring it on.

I am the god of Mario Kart, Mario Tennis and Mario Golf. I challenge anybody to take me on.

Most people are either dead or retired when they get a clock in a plaza named after them. I wonder which one's coming first?

Speaking of binge drinking: Super Bowl, here I come.

Dear Tri-Delts: please stop calling the fourum in order to better your horrible reputations.

While diversity should be celebrated, it's a joke to think that it can be taught in a classroom.

Grant Reichert wins the argument hands-down on diversity. Way to go, Grant.

No. 12 is the 11th loser.

Grant Reichert: how 'bout you stop wasting paper, because nobody's listening anymore.

I'm really liking the new Bosco clock tower, but I'm a little confused. Would someone please show me where the clock is?

About the girl who just called in about the clock tower: I definitely heard her practice what she was gonna say four times before she said it.

Is there any way I can get an 8.5 x 11 picture of Lacey Storer? She's absolutely gorgeous.

You can always tell who everyone is jealous of, because they talk about them in the Fourum.

I just saw a bunch of white guys in a Saturn listening to "Whoomp, There It Is!" That's just wrong.

Cushier tissue

Princeton students lobby for softer toilet paper

By Danny Shea
THE DAILY PRINCETONIAN (PRINCETON U.)

When asked, early in her freshman year, what she missed most about life at home, Becky Quintal '07 couldn't think of her parents or home-cooked food. Instead, she instinctively blurted, "Good toilet paper."

As Becky points out, the low quality of the toilet tissue on campus means that a routine trip to the bathroom down the hall could lead to a "disgusting and unfortunate situation."

Building Services' decision to stock bathrooms with one-ply toilet paper forces Princeton undergrads to fold over or face the often ugly consequences. After a failed pilot program in 1998, which brought two-ply to the students of one lucky dorm in an attempt to test the fiscal feasibility of thicker tissue, the University has come down behind one-ply.

It seems that the costs of the two-ply coupled with the associated increases in clogged toilets led the department to decide in favor of maintaining a one-ply system.

But many students, citing a host of unnecessary university expenditures and a per-capita endowment unparalleled by peer institutions, reject this argument.

"This is Princeton," said Kean Tonetti '06. "We have a garden that's worth over a million dollars and the best we can do is one-ply? I don't think so."

Another student noted that, for the amount of money his parents send Princeton every year, quality of life issues such as toilet paper should be taken seriously.

Still others doubt the logic of Building Services' theory. "If we had two-ply, I'd use half as much," freshman Rachel Crane said.

A growing number of students, like Julie Bruno '07, are taking matters into their own hands – or, rather, trying to ensure that their hands remain matter-free. The sophomore returned to campus after a weekend at home toting a 12-pack of Charmin Ultra. "Seriously, it's ridiculous that we don't have two-ply," Julie says.

Maybe Julie should have gone to Yale. Building officials there instituted a change to two-ply in 1999 in response to a push from the Yale College Council.

The same thing went down at Harvard the year before, after a column calling for the cushier tissue ran in The Crimson. The Undergraduate Council took up the cause. But here at Princeton, the administration hasn't caught up with a student body increasingly in favor of an amendment to the toilet paper policy.

If things like this affected our US News ranking, or if cushier toilet paper could be proven to effectively lower our grades, maybe Nassau Hall and West College would take notice. As it is, the administration seems to be comfortable turning a blind eye to a problem that plagues so many undergraduates.

But if the student body actually committed to getting two-ply toilet paper in bathroom stalls, we can bypass the administration and achieve this through the University of Student Government.

As it was at Harvard and Yale, the student government would seem to be the logical avenue for addressing this problem.

And while the USG hasn't debated the tissue issue since 1999, student representatives show at least some receptiveness to reviving this as an important concern.

"You know, I too buy my own toilet paper and bring it with me to the bathroom," said USG Vice President Jesse Creed '07. "And I definitely think the redness and soreness that one-ply toilet paper causes harms the University's academic environment."

If USG President Leslie Bernard Joseph wants to create a day of community service, he should be willing to support a policy that would serve our community daily. If nothing is done, then potential candidates for future USG office should note: when searching for a campaign issue that resonates, all you have to do is start at the bottom.

Excluding intelligent design is unscientific

Dear editor,

Wednesday's Collegian featured the semi-annual op/ed piece on evolution and the stupidity of Kansans and anyone who believes in Intelligent Design.

David Liang builds up an extremely weak version of Design Theory, ridicules it and completely tears it down. .

I felt compelled to respond because I feel he has misrepresented design theory on several accounts. I would like to point out a few errors in his column.

Throughout the column, he makes it clear that no legitimate scientist would believe or even consider such a thing.

However, in 2001, 100 scientists published an advertisement in The Weekly Standard called "A Scientific Dissent from Darwinism."

The director of the Center for Computational Quantum Chemistry signed it. Biologists, chemists, biochemists, astrophysicists, molecular and cellular biologists, zoologists and geologists from some of the most prestigious universities in the world were among the 100 brave enough to risk their professional reputation in the name of design.

Are they not legitimate scientists?

David claims that if design were true, he and all others working in the science departments would be out of a job. Why?

Just because there is a Creator who designed the molecular machines that know how to put amino acids in the correct order so that the life-giving proteins that they study can function properly, does that mean that we should not study and learn as much as possible about them?

Finally, David espouses a belief in the Big-Bang Theory and implies that design theorists do not believe in the Big Bang. He obviously has not read any of their research or studies.

I have yet to read one who holds strongly to a young-Earth view of the world. They also could not agree more with the theory of the big bang. To them, the "Big Bang" that created the universe sounds a lot like Genesis: "God said, 'Let there be light!'"

To conclude, I am not saying that we should do away with evolution as a theory or do away with teaching it. It organizes the known world very well and is currently the lens through which science of all types is taught.

However, Darwinian naturalism is being seriously challenged by scientists.

To write off Intelligent Design as "pseudo-science" and to not consider all of its challenges to the naturalistic world view would be unscientific.

Environmentalists will have to choose between sight pollution, greenhouse gases

Dear editor,

I am all in favor of discussion of controversial issues such as wind energy; however, the points in the column by Jesse Manning are lacking in debate value.

The first point states that wind energy is unreliable.

The generation of energy is variable, but the system is not unreliable.

This is not news to anyone familiar with wind energy. Wind energy is not claimed to be a solution to our energy needs, but a source that can be utilized when available, leaving flexible systems such as coal and nuclear energy to meet varying demand.

Concern is brought forth about exporting the energy. Where would the economic benefit be in growing only enough wheat for Kansas's bread consumption, or building airplanes for sale only within the state?

The export of valuable resources is a key component of the state's economy.

The economics of wind energy are improving with advances in technology.

The incentives in place are little different than programs subsidizing other industries. The benefits received from a wind industry would offset the incentives provided by taxpayers.

Landowners have the right to develop or not develop their property; a bond system could be put in place for future cleanup, as is the current practice in the oil and gas industry.

The environmental arguments presented are the most difficult to accept.

However, even those concerned with the environment will have to someday prioritize additional greenhouse gases versus sound or sight "pollution."

As the saying goes, you can't have your cake and eat it, too.

Wildcat loss difficult to explain

JOSH WITT

I'm writing this almost 24 hours after the K-State men's basketball team's 70-60 loss to Colorado at Bramlage Coliseum, and I'm still at a loss for words.

How could this happen?

How could this Wildcat team on the rise not show up against a sub-par opponent on the day that Wildcat legends Bob Boozer, Ernie Barrett and Jack Parr had their jerseys retired?

It makes no sense.

Oh sure, the cynics probably feel vindicated.

"See, I told you they weren't that good. I told you these are the same old Wildcats that we've seen fall short over the past decade," they say.

I don't want to believe them. I don't want to admit that K-State isn't really progressing like we thought.

But after Saturday's performance in front of a home crowd of 10,949, it's hard to think positive. The Wildcats laid a big-time egg.

Up by 10 points with 8:15 left in the first half behind the surprising efforts of sophomores Tyler Hughes and Lance Harris, this game appeared to have all the makings of a blowout.

All the Wildcats needed was to keep up the solid defense and get the "big three" (Jeremiah Massey, Cartier Martin and Fred Peete) a little more involved in the offense, and it'd be smooth sailing from there.

Well, those two things didn't happen.

Though they ended up shooting just 43 percent from the floor, the Buffaloes got way too many open looks beyond the arc. The trio of Marcus Hall, Richard Roby and Chris Copeland knocked down a combined 10 treys.

The K-State defense allowed Colorado's Andy Osborn to hit the biggest outside shot of the game with 3:12 left. After K-State cut the Buffaloes' lead to 58-54, Osborn – whose sole purpose in life is to camp out in three-point land – found himself open and buried a three.

From there, we saw the effort we should have seen all game, as the Wildcats stole the ball multiple times and grabbed several offensive boards. But, it was too little too late.

As for the "big three," sure, Massey ended up with 17 points and Peete had 11, but many of those points didn't come until the tail end of the contest. Martin was 0-of-7 and scoreless.

Game over.

It is inexcusable to lose a game like Saturday's.

If you want to make a move in the Big 12 Conference, you win at home – especially against a team with a worse record.

If you want to continue to breathe life into your program, you win when you retire the jerseys of three of your school's legends.

The Wildcats failed on both accounts Saturday.

Before the Colorado loss, there was a considerable buzz around the program and the possibility of having a .500 conference record heading into Wednesday's game against Kansas. That buzz took a significant hit at the hands of the Buffaloes.

Yes, there is still hope for progress and post-season play beyond the Big 12 Tournament.

The Wildcats could pull off a few upsets the rest of the way. They could take this embarrassing loss to heart and bounce back with a remarkable win against the Jayhawks.

But I'm tired of looking ahead. I'm tired of thinking what could be.

As thousands of unsatisfied fans left Bramlage after the loss, one couldn't help but notice the man who looked more dejected than anyone.

Director of Athletics Tim Weiser made his way off the floor, his head down the whole way into the tunnel.

There's no way to sugar-coat this one. A day that should have provided the K-State men's basketball program with "Big Mo" gave them nothing but a big "L."

Even with greatness and tradition in the air at Bramlage Coliseum Saturday, the K-State Wildcats couldn't hold on to an early lead, losing to the Colorado Buffaloes 70-60.

On a day when K-State honored former greats Jack Parr, Ernie Barrett and Bob Boozer by retiring their jerseys, the Wildcats fell to the Buffaloes in front of a crowd of 10,949.

In the first half, the Wildcats (13-6, 3-5) built a 10-point lead over the Buffaloes (11-9, 3-6) behind the three-point shooting of sophomore guard Lance Harris and sophomore forward Tyler Hughes' presence on the inside.

Harris scored 13 of his career-high 18 points in the first half and was 3-of-4 from beyond the arc, while Hughes added nine points on 3-of-3 shooting before the Buffaloes clawed their way back into the game.

"We had a little offense off of Tyler, and Lance made some shots, but that dried up as the game went on," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

With under six minutes left in the half, the Buffaloes would catch fire as senior guard Marcus Hall and freshman guard Richard Roby combined to hit 3-of-5 three-pointers to eventually tie the game at 34-34 at halftime.

Colorado would take advantage of K-State's ineffective offense in the second half and lead by as many as nine.

K-State women's bench outscores OSU by 20 points

It was a game of runs from opposite directions for No. 15 K-State.

Saturday night against Oklahoma State, the Wildcats fell behind 10-3 in the first few minutes of the game, but closed out the Cowgirls with a 13-4 run in the final four minutes of the game to secure their 23rd-straight Big 12 Conference win at Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday night, 66-55.

Trailing by seven points nearly five minutes into the game, the Wildcat bench took over.

Led by the backups, K-State (17-4, 8-2) went on a 9-1 run to take its first lead of the game. Twiggy McIntyre hit a 3-pointer, and Brie Madden scored six of her bench-leading 10 points to put the Wildcats up by one.

"I think we all came out playing hard and having confidence, but I think Brie (Madden) played awesome," said Kimberly Dietz, who played a career-high 24 minutes and finished with six points.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said the play of the bench won the game for the Wildcats.

"They put us in position to be competitive," Patterson said of her bench players. "They played extremely well, they were very productive, and without them, I don't know

Legends honored with jersey retirements

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite K-State's 70-60 loss to Colorado, Saturday was still a special day for the men's basketball program.

During a halftime ceremony at Bramlage Coliseum, the jerseys of former Wildcat legends Ernie Barrett, Bob Boozer and Jack Parr were retired.

Barrett, Boozer and Parr became the first men's basketball players to have their numbers lifted up to the Bramlage rafters.

"Being here and being part of this is a real privilege and a real opportunity," said Parr prior to the game. "I'm very gratified and humbled by it."

The ceremony was filled with emotion – and a little humor – as the trio that helped put K-State basketball on the map from the late 40s to late 50s was honored.

Each legend was preceded by a video highlight reel of his career before giving a short speech.

Barrett, an All-American shooting guard who led the 1950-51 Wildcats to the national championship game, thanked Director of Athletics Tim Weiser for his role in initiating the jersey retirements.

Parr followed, and the former center, whose career from 1955-58 produced the school's top two rebounding per game averages, summed up his speech with a classic line.

"Thanks for the memories."

NFL | Patriots win Super Bowl 24-21; Branch MVP

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) - The Patriots won their third Super Bowl in four years with a dominant second half Sunday, wearing down the Philadelphia Eagles 24-21.

Branch

With MVP Deion Branch tying a Super Bowl record for receptions with 11, Brady efficiently running the offense and Rodney Harrison sparking a smothering defense, the Patriots won their ninth successive postseason game. That ties the record of Vince Lombardi's Packers of the 1960s, and there's hardly any better company a team can keep.

The difference once again was an Adam Vinatieri field goal, this one a 22-yarder with 8:40 to go. New England won its other two Super Bowls by the margin of Vinatieri's kicks.

NFL | Raven's running back Lewis reports to prison

BALTIMORE — Baltimore Ravens running back Jamal Lewis reported to federal prison camp in Florida on Friday to serve a four-month sentence for using a cell phone to try to set up a cocaine deal, a U.S. Bureau of Prisons spokesman said.

Lewis

Dan Dunne, the prisons spokesman, said Lewis reported to Federal Prison Camp, Pensacola on Saufley Field at about 11:40 a.m.

The minimum-security facility holds up to 536 inmates, who live in three dormitories with double bunk beds. Many inmates in the facility are drug offenders. The prison is surrounded by perimeter security.

MLB | Conseco implicates McGwire for steroid use

After months of talking about naming names in a tell-all book, retired slugger Jose Conseco is about to do just that.

The New York Daily News published details of the former slugger's book, which is still in the editing stages, in Sunday's edition.

Conseco

Conseco writes that he personally injected Mark McGwire with the drug and that he saw McGwire and Jason Giambi inject each other, according to the paper.

McGwire, who has long denied steroid use, said in a statement to the paper: "I have always told the truth and I am saddened that I continue to face this line of questioning. With regard to this book, I am reserving comment until I have the chance to review its contents myself."

Golf | Parry outlasts O'Hern to win Heineken Classic

MELBOURNE, Australia — Australia's Craig Parry ended Ernie Els' three-year hold on the Heineken Classic title Sunday, holing a 12-foot birdie putt on the fourth hole of a playoff with countryman Nick O'Hern.

After Parry made his birdie putt on the fourth extra hole, the 18th, O'Hern missed a 10-foot birdie attempt to end the tournament at historic Royal Melbourne.

Parry made par-saving putts on the first three playoff holes — the 18th twice and then the 17th, while O'Hern helped keep the playoff going by missing birdie putts inside 10 feet on the two opening holes, again the 18th.

how this game would have gone. Their minutes and contributions were absolutely critical."

The Wildcats' bench outscored Oklahoma State (6-13, 1-8), 24-4.

Up by four points at the half, the Wildcat lead did not last long. The Cowgirls started the second half on a 9-2 run and took their first lead since the 14-minute mark of the first half on Nina Stone's 3-pointer, then extended their lead to three on another basket by Stone.

Stone finished with a game-high 17 points for Oklahoma State.

Kendra Wecker scored her first field goal of the game with 16 minutes to play to pull the Wildcats to within a point, and a minute later, Madden's layup put K-State ahead.

The Cowgirls tied the game briefly at 40-40 on Stone's 3-pointer, but Wecker came back and gave the Wildcats the lead for good on her third field goal of the game.

Oklahoma State pulled to within two points with four minutes to play; but, led by their core starters, the Wildcats went on a 13-4 run to close out the game.

"They were aggressive from the very beginning," Wecker said.

"We were making some bad decisions on offense, and they were defending the ball and knocking down jump shots on the other end. In the second half especially, the game got close, and we came back and took control."

Wecker recorded her 45th double-double of her career, scoring 10 of her 11 points in the second half and pulling down 11 rebounds.

in the second half, and we didn't."

The Wildcats were unable to find any rhythm on offense, shooting just 25 percent from the floor, 3-of-17 from behind the three-point line and were held scoreless for close to six minutes in the second half.

"We put up a lot of 3-pointers," senior forward Jeremiah Massey said. "I mean, we are a good three-point shooting team, but I think we took too many."

Wooldridge said Colorado's zone defense was a factor in the lack of offense for the Wildcats.

"They went to that zone, and we couldn't get either the ball to drop for us from the perimeter and not enough inside shots, and the combination just got us out of synch," he said. "They dared us to shoot it. We didn't use the dribble much, and at times we missed an inside pass, but if we would have made some shots and made that defense come out a bit more, then we would have had better opportunities to get inside."

Despite the offensive struggles, Massey kept the Wildcats in the game by scoring 11 of his 17 points in the second half and helped K-State to get to within four points.

"I didn't expect this at all," Massey said. "We came out and played sluggish, and they just jumped on us, and we weren't able to get the lead back at the end. We felt we would be able to run over them all game, but they stopped our offense, and they ended up scoring more points than us."

K-State's loss was the first time this season the Wildcats have lost back-to-back games. It's the fifth straight game in which K-State has not been able to break the 65-point barrier.

Wooldridge said the home loss puts the Wildcats into a difficult situation.

"You've got to protect your home floor, and we didn't do that today," Wooldridge said. "Because of it, we put ourselves in a bind as we finish the second half of the Big 12 Conference season."

K-State track wins 5 events

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's track and field team won five event titles Saturday at the Sevigne Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Neb.

Cost, who earned Big 12 Athlete of the Week last week, won with a toss of 69-2. Cost hasn't lost a weight throw event yet this year and he has won 19-of-24 throughout his career.

"It (Big 12 Athlete of the Week) feels real good." Cost said. "Track doesn't get a lot of coverage, so to have something like that printed in the paper feels real good. It's just a nice honor."

Heller stayed undefeated for her career, as she had a throw of 63-0 on Saturday.

"I didn't expect it," Heller said of being undefeated throughout her career. "I had never thrown in high school. It's something I picked up while in college."

The three other Wildcats to win at the invitational were sophomore Shunte Thomas, junior Christian Smith and senior Erik Sproll.

Thomas won the women's 400-meter dash for the third straight meet with a time of 53.44 seconds, which was a fast enough time to provisionally qualify for the NCAA Indoor Championships. In K-State history, only Belinda Hope's time of 53.27 at the 1995 NCAA Championships is faster than Thomas's.

Smith won the men's mile in a time of 4:04.63. It was only the third time Smith had competed this season and the first time he had run the mile. His time was the eighth fastest in K-State history and it also was a NCAA provisional qualifying mark.

Sproll also qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships on Saturday in the men's 800-meter with a time of 1:49.93. The time was a new career best for Sproll and the third-fastest time in school history.

Senior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle came in second in the women's 800-meter run with a time of 2:08.86, which was good enough for a NCAA provisional qualifying mark. The San Lorenzo, Puerto Rico, native currently holds the K-State record for the women's 800 (2:07.22), which she set last year at the Big 12 Championships.

said Parr, quoting legendary comedian Bob Hope.

The most animated speech came from Boozer – a two-time, first-team all-American who owns K-State's record for career and single-season scoring averages at 21.9 and 25.6, respectively.

Boozer joked with Barrett that his 1958-59 team that went 25-2 but lost in the Midwest Regional Finals was better than Barrett's team that advanced to the national championship game and finished with a 25-4 record.

The Omaha, Neb., native then received some of the biggest ovations of the day when he spoke highly of current K-State head coach, Jim Wooldridge, and told head football coach Bill Snyder to "keep putting it to the Cornhuskers."

The halftime ceremony ended as Barrett's No. 22, Boozer's No. 30 and Parr's No. 33 jerseys were raised to the rafters while the K-State alma mater played and fans sang in unison.

Barrett – or "Mr. K-State," as he is widely known – whose career since his playing days has included roles as K-State Director of Athletics and his current position as Associate Athletic Director of Development, said he was proud that he could be a part of the day's ceremonies and the program's tradition.

"It's really exciting," Barrett said. "It's unbelievable, too. I've been around the university all my life, practically, and just take a lot of pride in this place. To see this happen to me is hard to believe. It really is."

Ivan Kagan, construction worker from Metro Tile, located in Kansas City, Mo., finishes the tile work inside the new Pier 1 Imports store at Seth Child Commons last month. Pier 1 Imports is one of many stores new to the Seth Child Commons area.

The Seth Child Commons area is rapidly developing.

Famous Dave's Barbecue is opening today, with Pier 1 Imports to follow. Arby's Roast Beef and Baskin-Robbins are also expanding.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the intersection of Kansas Highway 18 and Fort Riley Boulevard is a main reason for building in that area.

"It's one of the major traffic interchanges in the city, and businesses like to be where there is lots of traffic and plenty of exposure," Butler said.

Famous Dave's already has restaurants in Topeka and Kansas City. It is owned by Concord DQ, which also owns the local Applebee's, said Robert Marshall, vice president of Concord DQ.

"We operate another restaurant in Manhattan, and we're very comfortable," Marshall said. "We've had a lot of success. This is our first Famous Dave's restaurant, and we are looking forward to opening it."

Pier 1 Imports is moving from Manhattan Town Center. It will close the store on Saturday and open the new store Feb. 25.

The two weeks the store will be closed will be used to move the current merchandise to the new store. It also has to get a new shipment order to the new store.

Brent Schultz, manager of Pier 1 Imports, said the store is moving to attract more customers.

"We will be attracting more people because they realize that we are here," he said.

Panera Bread opened in late July. Jason Riordan, media relations director for Panera Bread, said the opening of Famous Dave's will help business.

"The more people that come to the area, the more it will help everybody," Riordan said.

Arby's will be located directly north of Pier 1 Imports. Despite the new restaurant, manager Blaise Kroenke said the Arby's at 1115 Bluemont Ave. location will remain open.

Baskin-Robbins will open in the area. It is still under construction and an opening date was not released. The Baskin-Robbins, 1201 Westloop Plaza, will remain open.

The building in which Baskin-Robbins will be located will hold other undisclosed businesses.

Other businesses already open in the area are Target, Sally Beauty Supply, Great Clips For Hair, Manhattan Floral, E B Games, Capitol Federal Savings, the Sprint Store, T2 Wireless and Alltel.

Bo Conrad, developer for Seth Child Commons, said more businesses are looking to build there.

"We have lots of stuff going on, and I would expect some announcements in the next month or two," Conrad said.

Bush's budget reaches $2.5 trillion, to be presented to Congress today

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush's $2.5 trillion budget is shaping up as his most austere, trying to restrain spending across a wide swath of government from popular farm subsidies to poor people's health programs.

Vice President Dick Cheney on Sunday defended the plan against Democratic criticism that Bush had to seek steep cuts in scores of federal programs because he is unwilling to roll back first-term tax cuts that opponents contend primarily benefited the wealthy.

The budget's submission to Congress on Monday will set off months of intense debate. Lawmakers from both parties can be expected to vigorously fight to protect their favorite programs.

"This is the tightest budget that has been submitted since we got here," Cheney told "Fox News Sunday."

"It is a fair, reasonable, responsible, serious piece of effort.

"It's not something we have done with a meat ax, nor are we suddenly turning our backs on the most needy people in our society."

The president, who campaigned for re-election on a pledge to cut the deficit in half by 2009, is targeting 150 government programs for either outright elimination or sharp cutbacks.

Bush will propose spending $2.5 trillion in the budget year that begins Oct. 1. For the current year, he is estimating the budget deficit will reach a record $427 billion. That compares with last year's $412 billion deficit and is the third straight year the Bush administration will have set, in dollar terms, a deficit high.

The five-year projections in the budget will show the deficit declining to about $230 billion in 2009, when a new president takes office.

Those projections do not take into account some big-ticket items: the military costs incurred in Iraq and Afghanistan, the price of making Bush's first term tax cuts permanent, or the transition costs for his No. 1 domestic priority, overhauling Social Security.

Sen. Kent Conrad, the top Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee, said Bush's budget "talks about the next five years of reducing deficits, but what that hides is what happens after that five-year window.

The cost of everything he advocates explodes."

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., praised the administration's willingness to tackle the deficit.

"I'm glad the president is coming over with a very austere budget. I hope we in Congress will have the courage to support it," he told ABC's "This Week."

Joshua Bolten, Bush's budget director, told The Associated Press that when the budget is released, the administration will provide some estimates of the cost in increased government borrowing for the president's proposal to allow younger workers to set up private savings accounts.

But he said the administration cannot provide total cost figures for the Social Security overhaul because all the elements of the plan have yet to be decided upon.

Cheney would not confirm estimates the overhaul could cost $4.5 trillion in government borrowing over 20 years.

Bush's budget will restrain the growth in discretionary programs to less than 2.3 percent.

But because defense and homeland security are set for increases above that amount, the rest of government programs will see outright cuts or small gains far below the rate of inflation.

One of the biggest battles is certain to occur in the area of payments and other assistance to farmers, which the administration wants to trim by $587 million in 2006.

Riley County sees inmate increase

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Within the numbers we have we have problems with gender and custody, and so we're still short for maximum and medium security facilities."

Roger Werholtz
SECRETARY OF CORRECTIONS

Plans are in the works to expand Ellsworth Correctional Facility and the Riley County Jail.

Although prison population is down in Kansas, Riley County has seen some increase.

The Riley County Jail is at higher population than what was estimated when it was first built, said Capt. Jeff Hooper, commander of the Riley County Correction Division.

He said the jail has seen an increase in female population and higher risk population.

The jail's capacity is now 97, which includes 69 beds for men and 18 for women, with an extra open living area pod for 30 inmates, but the jail needs more lockdown individual cells because of the increase in higher risk threats.

"We need more of the traditional lock down cells because some of these high-risk inmates get violent and we need to isolate them," Hooper said.

"So the law board presented this problem to the county, because that's who is responsible for expansion.

"As of now, we're still working on it. The farthest we've gone is giving tours to potential contractors," he said.

The average inmate population in the jail for 2004 was 63.1 inmates, but in January the average population was 71.3, Hooper said.

He said the population tends to fluctuate, but the biggest problem is when the jail reaches its capacity.

The increase in population the jail isn't quite explainable, Hooper said.

"There are so many factors, including new sentencing guidelines," Hooper said.

"Some inmates are having longer terms, but there are several factors, but I'd hate to speculate as to what exactly it is.

"All we know is that we need to come up with a solution and start fixing it," he said.

Despite a recent decline in inmates, the proposed expansion at Ellsworth is necessary, said Roger Werholtz, secretary of corrections. He said of the three security threats – maximum, medium and minimum threats – the state of Kansas is low on maximum and medium facilities.

"Within the numbers we have, we have problems with gender and custody, and so we're still short for maximum and medium security facilities," Werholtz said.

"We obviously can't take a maximum security inmate and put them in a minimum security bed, nor a woman in a man's facility."

Currently, there are 16 inmates leased to the Limestone Correctional Facility in Texas due to the shortage of beds, and Werholtz said he's intent on bringing those inmates back to Kansas.

The current decline could be for any number of reasons, Werholtz said. He said they could be day-to-day fluctuations or fewer crimes being committed.

No matter what the reason, Kansas needs to be prepared, because it takes two years or more to build any sort of facility to house inmates, Werholtz said.

He said part of what makes the decisions difficult for expansions is the Kansas Department of Corrections estimates there will be 1,000 extra inmates in the next 10 years.

"Even though we have a short-term decline, we're looking at the long term, and we need to plan two to three years ahead and make sure we have the right kind of space," Werholtz said.

The Ellsworth expansion would be for a minimum security facility, which seems backwards, but the expansion will free up beds from the medium security facility at Ellsworth, he said.

"Ellsworth has no outside, minimum security facility, so we have 50 to 60 minimum security inmates in medium security beds," Werholtz said.

"Kansas uses a lot of the minimum security prisoners for labor and maintenance, and by having that on the outside, we can put more medium security inmates inside. It's the cheapest way we can get more beds."

He said the expansion is needed for space, and in the meantime, the state of Kansas can analyze new data for future actions.

Currently there are 144 beds in the minimum security building inside the gate and the proposal is for a 100-bed dorm outside of it, said Jina Murrell, public information officer at Ellsworth.

She said the 48 current minimum-security inmates can be moved outside and the 144 bed building can be used for medium security inmates.

"The local communities would benefit substantially because we have contributed a lot with our current work force but that would increase with the expansion," Murrell said.

"Our inmates have done a number of projects, including a bicycle refurbishing project where they fix up bikes and redistribute them in third-world countries since they can't redistribute them here."

Over the past fiscal year, there were 71 inmates contributing 96,679 hours of work for community service projects in the Ellsworth area, Murrell said.

At the current $5.15 per hour minimum wage, that's $497,896.85.

Murrell said the proposal is in its infancy, and a decision on the expansion won't be reached until sometime in April or May.

22 Iraqi police killed after insurgents attack station

By Jason Keyser
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Insurgents attacked a police station south of Baghdad under cover of darkness Sunday, killing 22 Iraqi police and soldiers, police said. Gunmen seized four Egyptians technicians in Baghdad in the second kidnapping of foreigners in the Iraqi capital within a week.

Elsewhere, one U.S. soldier from Task Force Baghdad was killed and two others were wounded Sunday afternoon in a roadside bombing north of the capital, the U.S. command said. No further details were released.

Fourteen attackers also died in the clash that broke out about 10:30 p.m. in Mahawil, 50 miles south of Baghdad, police Capt. Muthana Khalid Ali said. The dead included five Iraqi national guardsmen and 17 policemen, he said.

Earlier Sunday, the multinational command said two Iraqi national guard soldiers were killed and three more injured in a rebel ambush in the same area.

Two rockets also exploded near Baghdad International Airport, and a third slammed into an Iraqi national guard building in a western suburb. No casualties were reported.

The attacks were the latest sign that insurgents are stepping up attacks against Iraq's fledgling security forces, which the United States hopes can assume a greater role in fighting the rebels once a newly elected government takes office.

The latest attacks and kidnappings raise new concerns about security following a brief downturn in violence after the Jan. 30 elections, when Iraqis chose a new National Assembly in the first nationwide balloting since the fall of Saddam Hussein in April 2003.

A final tally is expected by Thursday, but initial returns point to a landslide by Shiite Muslim candidates endorsed by their clerics. Shiites are believed to comprise about 60 percent of Iraq's 26 million people.

On the other hand, many Sunni Arabs, estimated at 20 percent of the population and the core of the insurgency, are believed to have stayed home, either out of fear of rebel reprisal or because of a boycott call by Sunni clerics.

The four Egyptians were seized early Sunday. They worked for Iraqna, a subsidiary of the Egyptian firm Orascom Telecommunications, which operates the mobile phone network in Baghdad and central Iraq.

CIA director establishes leadership team today

By Katherine Pfleger Shrader
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Monday is day one of a new era at the Central Intelligence Agency as Director Porter Goss, on the job for four months, finally gets his leadership team in place.

The time since Goss' swearing-in has proven rocky for an agency still reeling from its failure to warn of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks and its flawed prewar intelligence on Iraq's weapons.

More than a dozen senior officials have left since Goss arrived. The messy details of some internal battles have seeped into the news.

Critics have complained that Goss, a former Republican congressman who served as chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, politicized the agency by hiring GOP aides.

Goss's allies say wholesale changes were essential after the intelligence failures of Sept. 11 and Iraq.

"You couldn't expect anybody to have the same leadership in place and improve the operation of the agency," said Sen. Saxby Chambliss, R-Ga:, a Goss friend and member of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

"While it's been very controversial, Porter had to make some change of people, who were good people and individually they were nice people, but the job wasn't getting done," Chambliss said.

Among the new hires, Goss is making 30-year CIA veteran John Kringen the head of the Directorate of Intelligence, the agency's analysis division.

That move on Monday means Goss will have in place all the division chiefs he has chosen.

Goss kept one holdover from the seven-year tenure of former CIA Director George Tenet – science and technology director Donald Kerr.

Rumsfeld says troops need more time

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said Sunday he does not know when the United States will have trained enough Iraqis so they can adequately secure the country and begin replacing American troops now helping provide protection.

"It's interesting to me that some people think they know that, because it's not knowable," Rumsfeld said.

Discussing the two resignation letters he wrote President Bush at the height of the Abu Ghraib prisoner abuse scandal last year, Rumsfeld said he believed he still could be an effective Pentagon chief but wanted the president to make that call.

"I told him I really thought he ought to carefully consider it. But he made a conscious decision, and life goes on, and here we are," Rumsfeld told ABC's "This Week."

With speculation heating up about a possible U.S. attack against Iran to derail its nuclear capability, Rumsfeld was asked if there were U.S. military operations going on in the country now. "Not to my knowledge," he replied.

The training of Iraqi security forces is one of the factors influencing the continued presence of American troops, which grew by 15,000 to 150,000 ahead of the Jan. 30 elections in Iraq.

Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has told Congress that only one-third of Iraq's 136,000 trained security forces are capable of engaging combat with insurgents across the country.

Rumsfeld said Sunday there are too many unknown factors to be able to say when Iraqis will be able to handle internal security.

Competitive drinking

LEFT: Dusty Taylor, senior in mechanical engineering, plays beer pong with friends at his house Saturday evening. Beer pong is one of the many drinking games students play.

ABOVE: "Screw the Dealer" is a drinking card game that makes the players guess which card the dealer has. If they get it right, then the dealer drinks. If they get it wrong, then they have to drink.

Students say drinking games spice up partying

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drink! Drink! Drink!

If you are a college student who has been to a house party or has just sat around with a bunch of beers in hands, you have heard these words shouted in your direction while finishing your sixth drink of the night.

Most likely you are in the middle of one of the many drinking games.

"I like drinking games because they are fun and a great way to meet people," said Jessica Pratt, freshman in advertising.

Sipping on a drink is a nice way to experience a party, but drinking games can make the night more exciting, said Ryan Shipley, freshman in civil engineering.

"When you are just sitting around and watching TV, it's better to just sip your drink, but drinking games are better when you want to have fun," he said.

Ryan Aikens, junior in electrical engineering, agreed.

"Both are good, but drinking games bring a good 'happiness aura' to the party," Aikens said.

Some of the most common drinking games played are Presidents and Assholes (P&A), Screw the Dealer, Quarters and Circle of Death, according to www.barmeister.com/games.

"I like Circle of Death because it guarantees four waterfalls," Aikens said.

CIRCLE OF DEATH

First, arrange the cards in a circle on the table.

Everyone sits in a circle around the cards, and the first person draws a card.

- Black or red cards: drink whatever number is on the card. If the card is red, assign the number to a person, or can split it up, and assign different players.
- Drawing a jack means you can create a rule everyone has to follow. Common rules include:

The Little Green Man – an imaginary man is on the rim of each cup, and every time you take a drink, you must remove the man and then replace him once finished.

The "sir" rule – whenever you take a drink you must address the person who made the rule to give you permission to drink.

The "nickname" rule – each player is assigned a nickname and any time that player is addressed his or her nickname must be used.

- Queens are questions; the player who drew the card begins by asking a question to another player who must then ask another question to another player and so on. The string of questions ends when someone does not answer with a question or there is a long pause by a player to think of a question.
- Kings are categories: a player names a category, and the following player must name something that is related to that category. The line ends when a person cannot think of an answer or pauses too long.
- Aces are waterfalls. Waterfalls begin with one person who drinks until they cannot drink anymore, then they choose a direction to follow in the circle.

The next player continues to drink until they decide to finish and pass to the next player.

EDWARD 40-HANDS

Players have one 40-ounce beverage duct taped to each hand. The player must finish both drinks before they are allowed to remove the bottles from their hands.

This includes going to the bathroom.

"You can have people help you," Aikens said. "If you have a girlfriend, you're fine, but if you don't, you are pretty much screwed unless you have a really good friend."

Aikens gives this advice concerning Edward 40-hands: "make sure you go to the bathroom before you play."

PRESIDENTS & ASSHOLES

Deal out all the cards. The person to the left of the dealer starts.

The object of the game is to get rid of all your cards. When starting, you can lay down any card or cards with the same face value. The person following you must lay down a card of equal or greater value.

They must also use the same amount of cards as you did. If you lay down two 9's then they would have to lay down two of something equal or greater.

If the player lays down the same card as the previous player, then the next player is skipped and must drink.

If you can't play any cards, you must be skipped and drink. Cards are cleared if everyone skips or a 2 is played.

Play continues like this until all the cards have been played.

There is a ranking system, which is as follows: president, vice president, secretary and asshole. Whoever goes out first becomes the new president for the next game; the second person becomes the vice president, etc.

For the following rounds, anyone who ranks higher then you can tell you to drink.

The asshole must always deal and clear the cards. The asshole must give the two best cards in his hand to the president. The president gives the two worst cards in in his hand to the asshole.

If the president remains president for three consecutive rounds they can create special rules, such as the word "drink" cannot be used. If rules are broken, the offender must drink.

SCREW THE DEALER

You should play this game with at least 3 people.

First, you select someone to be the dealer. After the cards are shuffled, the dealer shows everyone the bottom card.

Going clockwise, someone starts by guessing what the card will be. If the guess is incorrect, the dealer says if it is higher or lower than the card guessed.

After his or her second try, the dealer lays that card out on the floor for everyone to see. Then it is the next person's turn.

If the person guessing gets it correct on the first try, the dealer has to drink 10 drinks; if they guess it on the second try, the dealer has to drink five. If the person doesn't guess it, they have to drink the difference of the card on the second try.

After the dealer makes three people drink in a row, he can pass the deck.

The game is called "Screw the Dealer" because towards the end of the game, when there are few cards remaining, everyone will be able to guess which card it is going to be, and the dealer will have to drink 10 every time.

Remember, we all know what the bottom card is, too!

QUARTERS

Quarters can be played sitting around a table with any number of players.

The shooter tries to bounce a quarter off the table and into a glass. If the quarter goes into the glass, the shooter chooses a person at the table to consume. The amount or size of the drink should be decided first.

The shooter's turn is over when he does not make the quarter in the cup. Play precedes the next shooter.

Jon Kalodimos, junior in physics, left, and Zach Thompson, senior in architecture, taunt their opponents after a made shot during a game of beer pong Saturday evening at a house party. Beer pong is a popular game where players have to make a ping pong into a cup of beer that their opponent will then drink.

CELEB NEWS

Bowl ads test limits

There were plenty of tried-and-true techniques used in this year's Super Bowl ads — talking animals, Clydesdale horses, celebrity cameos. But then came Gladys Knight as a rugby player, an airborne '72 Impala and a "Mama's Boy" action figure who was somehow plugging anti-perspirant.

If last year's flatulent horses and crotch-biting dogs tested the limits of good taste, a number of this year's crop tested the limits of credulity.

Granted, this is where the advertising industry makes big plays, and takes big chances.

Advertisers expect to get a bang for each one of the 2.4 million bucks that they splash out for a 30-second spot, the most expensive TV ad time by far. But with an audience of nearly 90 million, plenty of companies think it's worth it.

Jackson attracts media

There was a sinking feeling last week when CNN, Fox News Channel and MSNBC all trained their cameras on a California street to catch Michael Jackson returning from a lunch break during jury selection at his molestation trial. Is this what the next few months are going to be like?

Jackson

Many in television insist not. While they expect Jackson's upcoming trial to be newsworthy, they don't see it becoming a national obsession, and don't expect to cover it as such.

Lee speaks to students

Filmmaker Spike Lee told a crowd of college students that they should try to find a career that will make them happy, not necessarily one that will make them rich.

Lee

"Hopefully, you'll be able to find a career path that you love and be able to make a living out of that," Lee told about 1,000 Miami University students Thursday.

BTK case used as teaching tool

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The BTK serial killer investigation is being used as a teaching tool for college criminal justice programs around the country.

"It's a very compelling case," said Volkan Topalli, an assistant professor in the criminal justice department at Georgia State University in Atlanta. "There's a lot of material to work with."

Topalli will touch on the case next semester during the serial-murder portion of his course on aggression and violence.

BTK – which stands for "Bind, Torture, Kill" – has been linked to eight unsolved murders in Wichita from 1974 through 1986. The killer resurfaced last year with letters to Wichita media and police.

At Nebraska Wesleyan University in Lincoln, students in a master's-level forensics class are tackling the case much like Wichita authorities have been since BTK first surfaced.

One student, Jackie Hoehner, 43, is trying to recreate the crime scene and the layout of the home where the serial killer struck first, strangling four members of the Otero family in 1974.

"It is extra exciting," she said, "because of the way he has resurfaced."

One of the key mysteries, she said, is what happened to BTK during all the years he wasn't communicating publicly. Her theory: he moved away, then returned.

Jeri Myers, a forensic science coordinator at Nebraska Wesleyan, said her students treat the BTK case as if they were professionals solving the mystery.

Her students learn what they can about the initial investigation; they analyze communications and look for similarities to create a suspect profile.

Brian Withrow, an assistant professor of criminal justice at Wichita State University, said he understands educators' interest to present the case in the classroom. He heard about the case 24 years ago in an undergraduate class in Texas, long before BTK gained national attention.

He said serial murder doesn't usually get much attention in criminology courses because it's so rare and most criminal justice students will never face a serial-murder case in their careers.

Withrow said his students are fascinated by the case and when there is a new BTK development, such as the killer's message to Wichita TV station KAKE last week, his students want to talk about it, even if it's not the scheduled topic.

the safety of the patients.

Doctors must fax the prescriptions and patient information to the clearinghouse, then a scan is done using the same drug interaction software that most retail pharmacies use. If it passes this test, it is given to an American network physician who will dispense the medication and review and rewrite the prescription for a local network pharmacy. The pharmacy then performs a final safety check to comply with local laws and safety regulations.

According to a press release, senior citizens have the greatest need for the program.

Nicole Corcoran, spokesperson for Gov. Sebelius, said they have been assured by Illinois that with Canada stopping imports, I-SaveRx will still have more than enough support from the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Corcoran said the Canadian health minister issued a statement that Canada could not maintain the supply for the entire United States.

"Canada has also gotten pressure from pharmaceutical manufacturers not to ship to the United States, and in some cases, threatened by pharmaceutical manufacturers that they would cut off supply to Canadian pharmacies," Corcoran said.

Corcoran said she does not think that Canada stopping imports will create a problem. There have been no negative incidents with the program and the outlook for the future is a positive one.

"We are trying to make medicine safe and affordable," Corcoran said. "People shouldn't have to choose between buying medicine and paying the rent or buying groceries."

Michael Polzin, spokesperson for Walgreens, said the program has not been used by very many people.

"It is more of a media story, and it has not had a significant effect," Polzin said. "I think the effect for it has already passed."

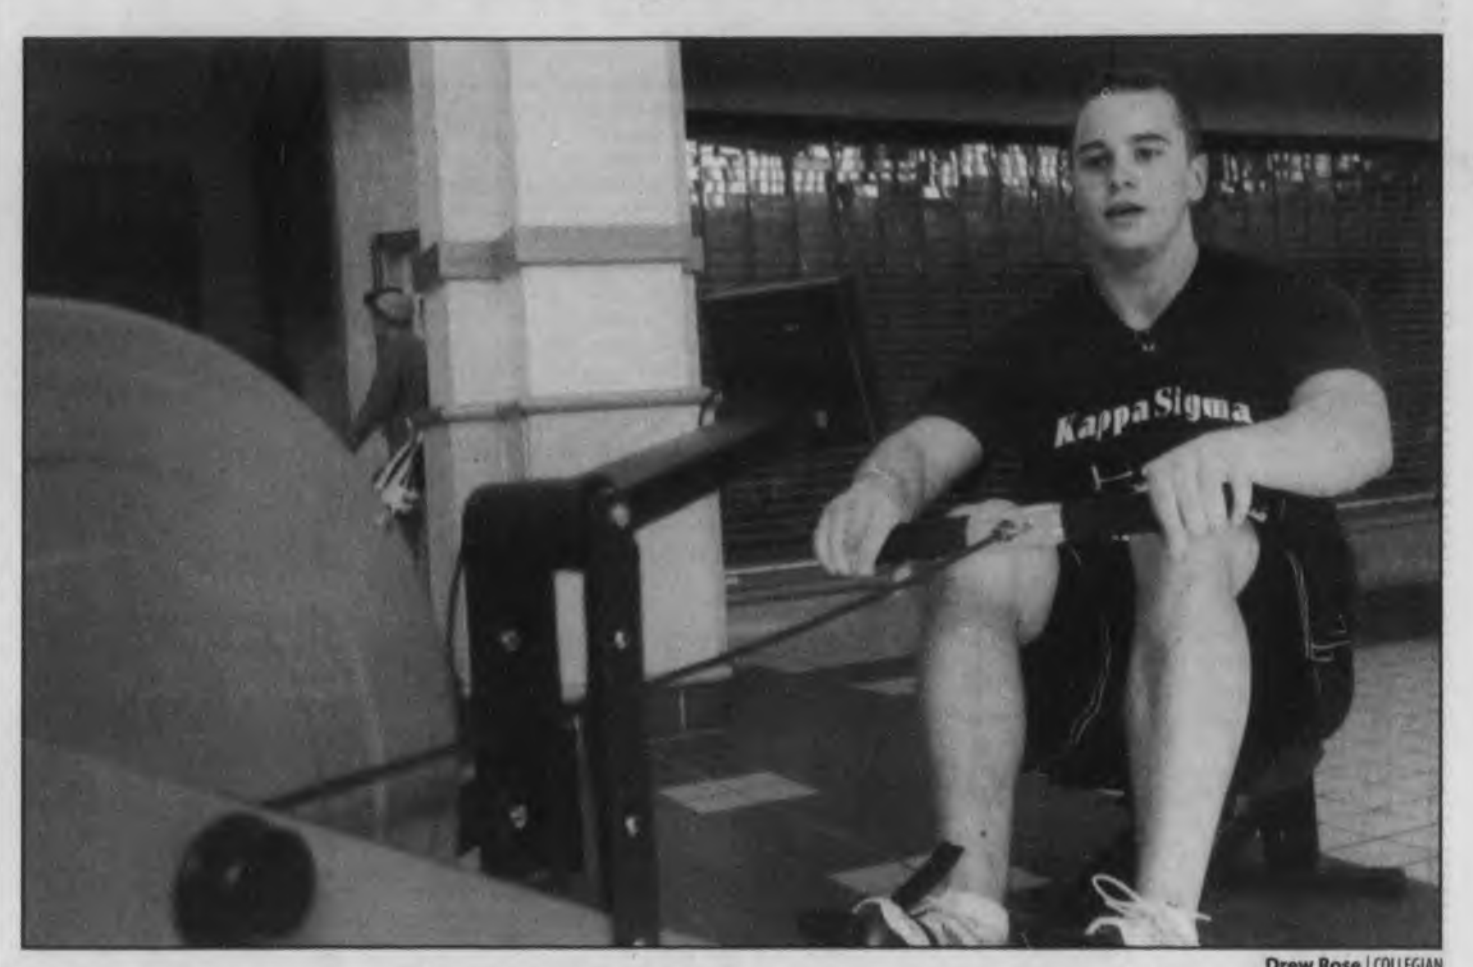
buyer and seller.

The passage of this bill would be good news to individuals selling their own vehicles, but local used-car dealerships anticipate little change if the new bill is adopted. Keith Vogts, owner of Southside Auto Sales, said the new bill probably would not affect his business, since dealerships were never subject to the same system of sales tax as private sellers.



"The current law penalizes people buying higher mileage vehicles privately," Vogts said. "(But) at a dealership, people pay tax based on the sticker price."

A proposed provision in the bill could also allow those who paid the higher tax rate beginning July 1, 2004, to apply for refunds.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said she has received many telephone calls from constituents frustrated with the current sales tax appraisal system.

"I hope that the refund passes," Carlin said. "People were being asked to pay unfair rates."

Sociology department head dies from cancer Monday

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leonard E. Bloomquist, associate professor and head of the sociology department, died of cancer Monday morning.

Gerad Middendorf, assistant professor in sociology, said Bloomquist's battle with cancer has been ongoing since fall 2004.

"I would say he was extremely generous and student-centered. He put students and interns first. He stood out," Middendorf said.

His funeral arrangements are being handled by Yorgensen-Meloan-Londeen Funeral Home.

Bloomquist's wake is at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Seven Dolors Catholic Church and a mass is at 10:30 a.m. Friday at Seven Dolors Catholic Church.

Dana Britton, associate professor of sociology, said she first noticed Bloomquist's attention to students when she started at K-State.

"When I first arrived, he was the graduate coordinator.

"He paid special care and attention to the graduate program, making sure they were taken care of. He took an interest in their lives and projects," Britton said.

Britton said that since Bloomquist's cancer diagnosis, the faculty in the department had been hoping for the best, but were aware of the tragic fate ahead of Bloomquist.

DEPARTMENT HEAD

"We are scrambling to make sure we can do the best to make the work continue. That's what he would want," Britton said.

Betsy Cauble, associate professor of social work, is the acting head for the department.

Britton said Bloomquist will be missed by all in the department.

"Len was a fine sociologist who was very committed to welfare of students," Britton said.

Middendorf said Bloomquist's dedication will be missed in the department.

SGA election deadline nears

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The filing deadline for Student Governing Association elections is less than two weeks away, but many candidates have filed.

Seven people have filed to run for student senator and seven have filed to be on college councils, David McCandless, elections commissioner, said.

There are 60 senate spots that are divided between the different colleges, based on enrollment, he said. Representative seats will be calculated after the 20th school day of the semester, which is Wednesday.

ELECTIONS 2005
The election filing deadline for Student Governing Association positions is 4 p.m. Feb. 18.

Each college has a set number of available seats for its college council, which is 10 to 15 for most, he said.

The deadline is 4 p.m. Feb. 18. Applications should be turned into the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union.

McCandless said students rarely file until right before the deadline.

"It really is because people don't think to file 'til the last minute," he said.

The Human Ecology and Education colleges have trouble filling senator positions, McCandless said.

Most councils need more people every year. Competition usually only exists in the Business Administration and Education colleges.

State-owned casino proposal in Kansas Legislature

By Marcus Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bright lights, big money and lots of tourism.

That's what could be in store for Kansas if several casino proposals are accepted by lawmakers. This could also affect the proposed casino in Junction City, which was previously rejected.

There is a proposal for a 260,000 square foot casino outside Wichita. Also, Kansans for Economic Growth proposed an 80,000 square foot casino in Galena, in southeast Kansas.

These plans were inspired by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' 2004 Gaming Compact which would allow Kansas to have five state-owned casinos. This compact was made between Sebelius and two Indian nations – the Kickapoo and the Sac and Fox.

These casinos could bring in annual revenue of more than $50 million each.

However, Sebelius' proposal has not been submitted to the legislature because of the new proposals in Park City and Galena.

"The governor is not opposed to casinos in the state but does not have a bill for it," said Matt All, Sebelius' chief counsel.

As for a casino in Geary County, officials are ready to re-propose a casino if the option arises.

"We still hope to have the opportunity to present it to the legislature," Rod Barnes, Junction City city manager, said.

Overcoming shame

Rape victim finds courage

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Guilt, anger and shame ran deep within Melissa after she was raped.

Melissa, whose last name has been withheld for her safety, lost her virginity when she was raped the day after her 14th birthday. The attacker was her boyfriend – they'd only been dating three weeks.

"I was in eighth grade. He was a freshman, and he was really, really popular," she said. "I didn't tell anyone but my best friend."

Although Melissa knew what he had done was wrong, she didn't report it to the police. She didn't even tell her parents because her guilt was so overwhelming.

"I was just disgusted with myself," she said. "I was completely lost. I felt completely guilty. I felt like a slut. I had no self respect."

After being raped, Melissa's behavior became more careless and she started skipping school.

"I never smoke, drank, did anything. I planned on being a virgin until I was married," she said. "But after I was raped I started running away. I became an alcoholic. I smoked and fought with my parents."

Melissa was raped a second time when she was 17 and someone slipped something into her drink at a party.

While she was being raped, Melissa said she could see what was going on but she couldn't make her body do anything to physically stop the attacker because of the drugs.

"I had never met the guy before, and I have never seen him since," she said. "I tried to press charges, but they couldn't detect the drug in my blood."

Melissa said she didn't tell her mother about being raped until nearly a year after the second rape. After finding out, Melissa's parents sent her to a state hospital.

"I had a counselor and a psychiatrist," she said. "I was suicidal so they institutionalized me for three days."

Melissa hated being in the hospital during her grief, but realized she needed to get better. She felt like she didn't belong with the other patients in the facility.

"It really snapped me into gear because I didn't want to end up like those people," she said.

However, the repercussions of the experiences still affect Melissa today.

"I definitely have more issues when it comes to sex and relationships," she said. "My trust level towards guys that I can sense have that capability is absolute slim to none."

What has kept Melissa strong however is the good male relationships she has had since, she said.

"I do have guy friends that have really been there for me," she said. "Meeting my now ex-boyfriend who treated me better than I've ever been treated also helped."

Melissa's life changed after talking with her counselor.

"My friends changed. I had a self-realization. I got really religious," she said.

Melissa said her message to other rape victims is to not be scared.

"Absolutely don't feel guilty. It's the last thing in the world a girl should do," she said. "Feel betrayed, feel angry – those are healthy feelings. It's so important not to brush it under the rug and wait until it comes back."

Sarah Wesch, psychology intern with K-State Counseling Services, said it is important for a rape victim to realize it's not her fault.

"I think that's the biggest barrier that they think that they themselves contributed to the problem," she said.

Although victims of rape should know it's not their fault, they can be prepared for an attack by learning self

College adds diversity assistant

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Business Administration's newly appointed dean's assistant for diversity credited her new position to her experience and passion for a diverse culture within the college.

Dawne Martin has demonstrated her commitment to diversity through her leadership of the college's faculty diversity committee, her development of the college's diversity lecture series and her instrumental involvement in establishing the Multicultural Business Student Association, Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration, said in a news release.

Martin said she wants to use her position to change some things in the college.

"There's a couple of things I want to do," Martin said.

"First, I want to do a good job of educating students in multiculture competencies. Then I want to bring the opportunity for more exposure to people for under-represented groups."

She has been the chair of the College of Business Administration Diversity Committee since 1999.

Hui Xue, diversity committee member, said Martin has done a tremendous job with the diversity committee, and said she will do well as the dean's assistant.

"She organized meetings well and coordinates for the committee members," Xue said.

"Every time she has a meeting, she prepares everything early and prepares the materials very well."

Although she did a lot of the work to receive her position, Martin said she wouldn't be where she is today without the diversity committee members as well as her education.

Martin received her bachelor degree in marketing from Colorado State University in 1976. She received her masters in marketing at Colorado State and her doctorate at the University of Colorado in 1989.

Prior to coming to K-State, Martin rebuilt the Colorado Small Business Development Center where she worked with ethnic chambers of commerce with counseling and training.

Martin came to K-State in 1998 because she wanted to teach again.

"It was a wonderful opportunity," Martin said.

"I loved the school. I was out of teaching and academics for a while."

Pilot to meet physical, mental challenges

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina will sponsor an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

While he attempts to break a new world record by making a solo non-stop flight around the globe, GlobalFlyer pilot Steve Fossett will experience several forms of physical and mental stress due to the extreme environment in which he will be working in and the duration of the flight.

Fossett will be in the GlobalFlyer for roughly 70 hours without the convenience of a landing. Because of this, Steve will be forced to perform everyday tasks at an altitude of 39,000 feet.

Because the GlobalFlyer needs to be as light as possible, the cockpit is going to be small and cramped, said Ken Barnard, professor in aviation.

"It's very close quarters and there's not a lot of room to move around," he said.

Since Fossett will reside in this atmosphere for 70 hours, he will have to do simple exercises to keep his blood flowing, Barnard said. Fossett needs energy on the flight, which will be provided through protein bars.

Along with the tight quarters, Fossett will have to deal with extremely cold temperatures. Barnard said the air temperature will be around -10 degrees Fahrenheit.

However, the GlobalFlyer is designed to allow heat from the engine of the plane to warm the inside of the cockpit.

Once the plane reaches its final altitude before descent, the engine will idle down, allowing the plane to glide using as little fuel as possible.

When this happens, the only heat in the plane will be from the small heater, which will keep the temperature at a survivable level.

On a shorter flight, the comfort of the cockpit would not be of extreme importance. However, the pilot must be comfortable if he is going to last more than three days.

Barnard said Fossett will be able to sleep once the plane has reached its cruising altitude during scheduled 30 minute power naps. He said that the plane will have two autopilots, so if one fails, the other will take over.

A camera will be trained on the instrument panel in the cockpit, so individuals at ground control in Salina, Kan. will be able to monitor the progress of the flight and wake Fossett up if something goes wrong.

Along with sleep, Fossett will perform everyday tasks in the plane, including going to the bathroom.

Barnard said Fossett will be able to urinate through a tube which will drain the waste into the plane's exhaust, and to defecate into a collection bag, which can be changed.

With all the physical stress that Fossett will experience, he will also experience mental stress, especially during takeoff and landing.

"One thing this flight has in common with any flight in aviation is that the most dangerous part is takeoff and landing," Barnard said.

Fast facts
GlobalFlyer

- The GlobalFlyer mission will take about 70 hours to complete.
- The plane will fly at an altitude of 39,000 feet.
- The temperature of the air in the plane will be about -10 degrees Fahrenheit.
- The GlobalFlyer mission status is red through Feb. 12, meaning the plane will take off no sooner than Feb. 13.
- For more information about the GlobalFlyer, go to www.globalflyer.com.

The plane will be loaded with nearly 18,000 pounds of fuel, more than five times the weight of the plane, making the takeoff even more difficult.

Other critical times during the flight will be when the plane enters the jet stream, when it reaches its cruising altitude and when it lands.

At the landing, Fossett will have been in the air nearly four days, and must be in top physical and mental condition, Barnard said.

At the time of landing, Fossett will have gone with almost no sleep for 70 hours, delaying his reaction time and possibly affecting his reasoning, said the Medical Director of Lafene Health Center, Jay Reppert.

"In general, the longer you are awake, the more error prone you are," he said.

The GlobalFlyer was designed with a world record flight in mind, but the plane cannot fly itself. Barnard said the pilot will have to undergo extreme mental and physical stress for the flight to be successful.

"There are a lot of parameters that have to come together," he said.

TO THE POINT

State owned casinos good for Kansans

A bill proposing state-owned casinos was defeated last year by the Kansas Legislature. Legislation introduced last week calls for new casinos and thousands of slot machines to be available in Kansas.

The Kansas Speedway and the Village West district make up Kansas' number one tourist destination, but visitors wanting to gamble have to go elsewhere. Building a privately-managed, state-owned casino in Village West would allow more money to stay in Kansas – money that would go directly to the state.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The state would only receive a percentage of the casino profits, but continuing fiscal trouble for Kansas makes state-owned and Kansas Lottery regulated casinos an attractive revenue generator. The enormous monetary potential offers a way to solve lack of funding for public schools.

Casinos also offer new tourist destinations for those visiting Kansas. Visitors not only gamble at casinos; they eat at our restaurants, shop in our stores, sleep in our hotels and pay sales tax.

Job creation remains the best incentives to open new casinos. Thousands of temporary construction jobs would be created as well as more permanent jobs.

Moral considerations should be put aside in order to fund important programs for our state.

Those who wish to gamble will find a way to do so; it is only common sense for Kansas to provide gambling services and make money from doing so.

Legal pretending

Attorney general displays multiple personalities in attempt to legislate

Say what you will about conservatives, especially those in this state, but they do accomplish something each week: they give me something to write about.

SCOTT SEEL

Honestly, were it not for these ultra-right-wing neo-cons, I would have to resort to various other means of extortion in order to receive my $17.50 each week.

This week is no different, with the fodder being provided by everyone's favorite attorney general, Phill (pronounced Phyl-l-l-l) Kline.

Now, as you may have guessed, I didn't vote for Mr. Kline.

I haven't decided if it was because he let his law license expire like 20 times, or his almost inexplicable lack of actual, real-life legal experience prior to running for the position of the state's head prosecutor.

Maybe it was the unconfirmed rumors that he got his law degree from the University of Phoenix Online instead of the University of Kansas like it says on his bio.

Whatever the reason, I proudly cast my vote for Chris Biggs in 2002.

Last Tuesday, Phill-with-two-Ls put the finishing touches on proving my decision to be prudent.

You see, much like he did on the campaign trail where he vowed to put an end to legal and safe abortions in Kansas through his unbridled legislative power as the attorney general, Phill has decided to flex his bulging muscles once again.

On Feb. 1, Kline held a press conference on the floor of the Kansas House of Representatives chamber, right smack in the heart of the legislative branch, and laid out several planks in his legislative agenda.

Kline went out of his way to have his press conference on the floor of the House rather than in his office, which is housed in a completely separate building nearly two blocks away.

Apparently the decor of the House chambers matched Kline's tie better than the drab colors that coat the walls of his office.

The press conference essentially focused on giving pedophiles the needle and proving that Kline is a bigger man than Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, but the actual context of this legislative agenda wasn't really what concerned me.

According to his own Web site, it says Kline, as attorney general, is "...entrusted with several responsibilities including: criminal investigation and prosecution, administration of crime victims assistance and compensation programs, administration of the State Child Death Review Board, consumer protection, coordination of the statewide D.A.R.E. program, investigation and prosecution of Medicaid fraud and abuse, issuance of legal opinions, and representation of the state and its employees in litigation."

It seems the good counselor neglected to read his own job description, because it says nothing in there about lobbying for legislation that is in line with his political agenda.

Let me be blunt, Phill; your job is not to advocate policy. That's why we have a governor and 165 legislators.

Rather, your job is to enforce the laws of this state – and here's the kicker – enforce them as they are written, not as they would be written in your little right-wing fantasy world.

Conservatives in this state have been griping and moaning for weeks about activist judges, how about activist attorney generals?

I can forgive you for the lack of courtroom experience and general legal knowledge.

I can get over the law license lapses and even the possibility, however remote, that your law degree is fake, but what I can't get over is you playing make-believe and pretending it says Representative Kline on your name tag.

If you want to be a legislator, then run for that office. Until then, shut up and do your job.

Scott is a senior in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

'Fair and balanced' is a matter of viewers' perspectives

"If you look for truth, you may find comfort in the end; if you look for comfort you will not get either comfort or truth."
– C.S. Lewis

JESSE MANNING

The above quote likely refers to Christian apologetics, but in the spirit of this column, I'm going twist it towards my own designs. I think C.S. Lewis was ahead of his time, referring to the wonderful world of media bias.

We're consistently warned of bias in the mainstream media. It's well-known that network news is a bastion of liberalism and major daily newspapers like the New York Times are staffed only by Bush-hating, anti-Republican leftists. We know this because conservative sources tell us so.

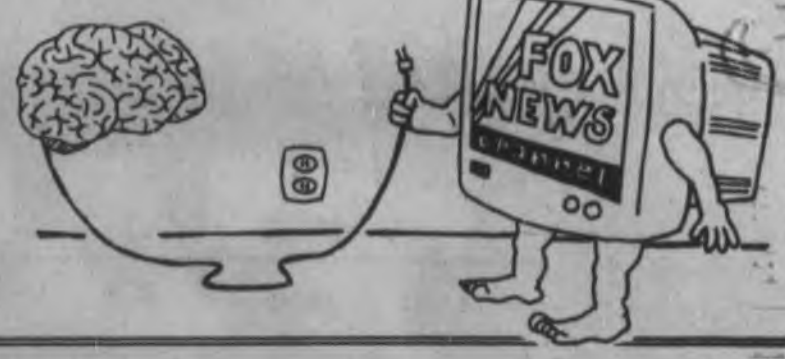
For conservatives, it's as if we're always on the defense against an overpowering liberal media blowing in from the coasts. We'll take refuge in the sensible talk-radio shows of Rush Limbaugh, Neal Boortz and the ever-harping Dr. Laura, where dissent is muted. Fox News is a breath of fresh air. Never mind Fox's overpowering ratings; the opinions of the little guy in flyover country aren't being heard. Conservative media thrives on that image.

I'm speaking of my fellow conservatives in generalities, but has it occurred to any of us that we're only seeing and hearing what we want to? Conservatives choose news sources like Fox because they're more ideologically comforting. If the news agrees with me, it must be right.

Fox News journalists like Jim Angle and Chris Wallace dispute allegations of a right-wing bias. During the Republican National Convention, Wallace told USA Today, "the only marching order I've had is to do the best news show I can, and there's never been a single eyebrow raised about what we've done."

Wallace is probably correct in that the correspondents do the best, most unbiased job they possibly can. But Fox News is far more opinion-oriented. With shows like "The O'Reilly Factor" and "Hannity and Colmes" dominating its time slots, Fox is known for opinions.

It seems that Bill O'Reilly invites guests on his show for no other purpose than to make them listen to him.



In his Jan. 17 op/ed piece for the New York Times, William Safire admits an overall liberal bias in journalism. But he makes a good case for it: "Clean government needs a snooping adversary, not a cheerleader; the Outs need help from the press to hold the Ins accountable." Today's liberal bias was undeniably anti-Clinton just a few short years ago.

Bias, liberal and conservative, exists in most media sources. As a conservative, I strive to recognize my own biases and attempt to balance them with sources that challenge my beliefs. These efforts benefit me far more than safe refuge within some ideological stronghold listening only to views that conform to my own.

Bill O'Reilly is fine so long as he is balanced by someone able to stand toe-to-toe with him. I grudgingly watched "Fahrenheit 9/11" and subsequently balanced it with Dave Kopel's 59-point analysis of mistakes from the movie. Biased sources need balance in order for us to analyze their credibility.

It takes more than a slogan to be fair and balanced. Instead of demanding media neutrality, we should embrace a variety of sources and challenge ourselves to find the truth.

The reason the Eagles won the toss was cause the kid didn't know how to flip the coin.

I like beer and commercials at the Super Bowl.

Hey D-Chi, thanks for the guitars.

I don't know which is more worthless: the Puppy Bowl on Animal Planet or Paul McCartney's Super Bowl halftime show.

My roommate thinks the Puppy Bowl is badass.

Who let the goats out?

Halftime sucks.

I thought Coach B was suspect till I saw the ref on the Puppy Bowl.

The Puppy Bowl on Animal Planet totally rocked Paul McCartney's world.

Polar Bear Plunge to benefit Special Olympics at noon Saturday

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everyone has a chance to take a dip in Tuttle Creek Lake on Saturday.

Those wanting to do so must collect a minimum of $75 in pledges from family, friends or other donors.

This event, the 2005 Polar Bear Plunge, is presented by the Kansas Law Enforcement Torch Run. The money raised will go to Special Olympics Kansas.

Everyone who raises the minimum $75 will receive a sweatshirt. The prizes continue to an ear band for raising $150, a towel for raising $250 and a robe for raising $500, according to the event's Web site, www.kansastorchrun.org.

Both individuals and teams can enter. There will be contests for other prizes between both individuals and teams, said Sonia Gregoire, Riley County Police Department detective.

The contests include best individual costume and best team costumes, Tim Schrag, member of the K-State Police, said.

"A lot of the people like to wear all kinds of things," he said.

There are other ways to motivate someone who doesn't want to plunge to help collect money, Schrag said.

"Some companies get the boss to plunge for the employees," he said. "They have to get up enough money to see the boss take the plunge."

Gregoire said people should take part in this event because it is a non-profit cause.

"It's a way for us to help athletes in the Special Olympics better themselves in their sports," she said.

30 killed in Iraq; Kurdish ticket moves to 2nd

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – A Kurdish ticket pulled into second place ahead of U.S.-backed Prime Minister Ayad Allawi's candidates in Iraq's national election after votes were released Monday from the Kurdish self-governing area of the north. Insurgents struck Iraq's security forces with suicide bombs and mortar fire, killing more than 30 people.

First election returns from the Sunni heartland confirmed on Monday that many Sunnis stayed away from the ballot box, leaving the field to Shiite and Kurdish candidates. A Shiite-dominated ticket backed by the Shiite clergy leads among the 111 candidate lists, with a final tally of last week's election for a 275-member National Assembly expected by week's end.

Allawi, who favors strong ties with the United States, had hoped to emerge as a compromise choice for prime minister, but the Shiite cleric-backed ticket said they want one of their own for the top job.

Kurds, estimated at 15-20 percent of the population, gave most of their votes to a joint ticket made up of the two major Kurdish parties, which was in second with about 24 percent of the votes reported as of Monday. One of the Kurdish leaders, Jalal Talabani, has announced his candidacy for the presidency.

Allawi's ticket trailed with about 13 percent of the vote, while the Shiite ticket leading with about half the votes. Shiites comprise about 60 percent of Iraq's 26 million people.

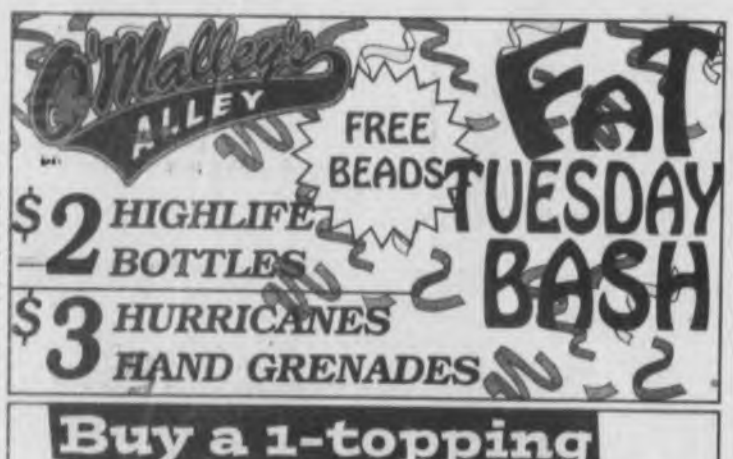
Monday's attacks were the latest sign that insurgents are stepping up attacks against Iraq's security forces, which the United States hopes can assume a greater role once a newly elected government takes office.

The bombings and kidnappings have shattered a brief downturn in violence after the Jan. 30 elections, the first nationwide balloting since the fall of Saddam Hussein in April 2003.

U.S. troops manning a checkpoint discovered four Egyptian technicians who had been kidnapped the day before in Baghdad, an Egyptian diplomat said.

The four were freed and some arrests were made, he added.

Israeli, Palestinian cease-fire in near future



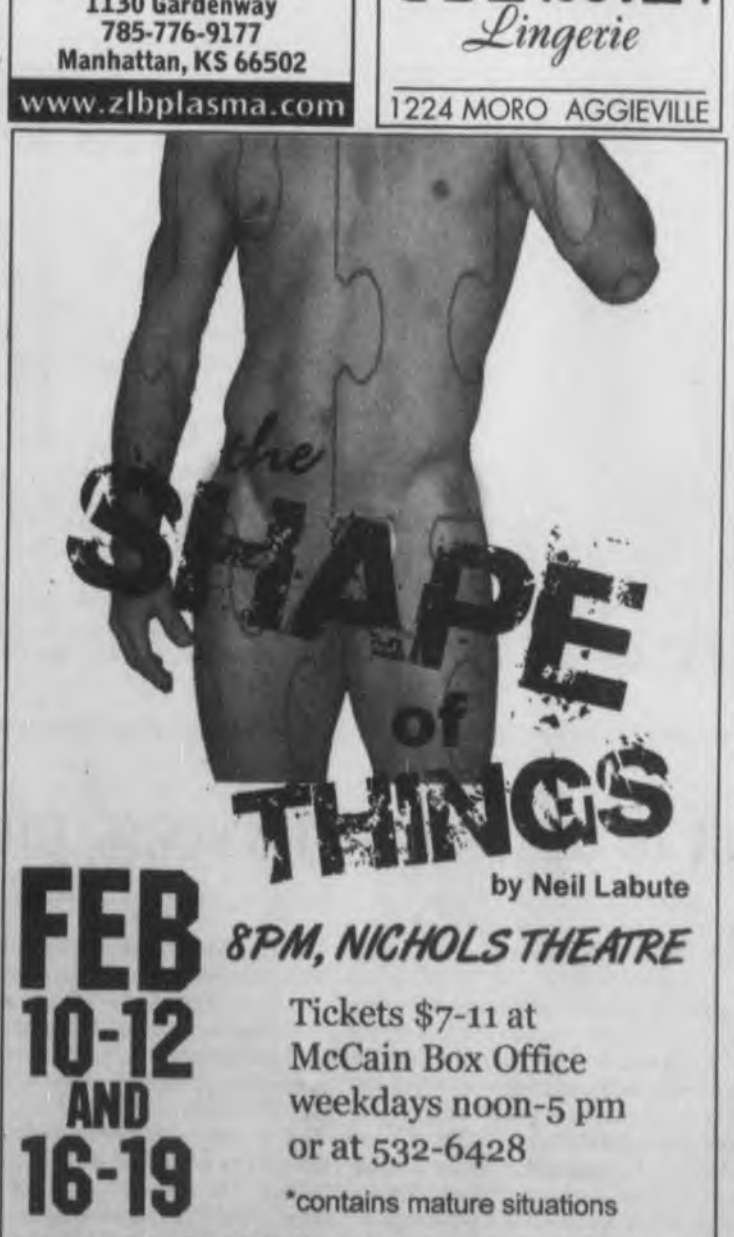
By Salah Nasrawi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHARM EL-SHEIK, Egypt – Israeli and Palestinian leaders said they will declare a formal end to more than four years of fighting during a summit Tuesday – a breakthrough in Mideast peacemaking. Both sides also accepted invitations to meet separately with President Bush.

The cease-fire deal, finalized during last-minute preparations Monday on the eve of the summit, was the clearest indication yet of momentum following Yasser Arafat's death and the election of a new Palestinian leader.

"The most important thing at the summit will be a mutual declaration of cessation of violence against each other," said Saeb Erekat, a Palestinian negotiator.

He said the agreement includes the establishment of joint committees – one to determine criteria for the release of Palestinian prisoners, and the other to oversee the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Palestinian cities on the West Bank.



Having fun with the Huskers

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Well, K-State's football recruiting season ended almost a week ago and with the Super Bowl over (sorry, Mark Simoneau; I really wanted you and the Eagles to win), I am left to sit through the seemingly endless days of February and March, waiting for that next football season – spring football.

Honestly, could there be a worse two-month stretch for K-State football fans?

After the 4-7 season the Wildcats came up with this last year, it seems like the new K-State football season is thousands of miles away, and I'm stuck trying to get there on a stationary bike.

There is little to do during these next few months for the fans like me who love K-State football.

But cheer up, because I have a solution.

Go to a fansite of a K-State opponent school and pick a good fight with the locals online.

If you haven't discovered the wonderful world of college football Internet message boards, I highly suggest you try it.

Some of the fans that patrol these boards are so rabidly passionate about their team, they will bite onto any bait you toss their way and chew on the fatty morsels for hours, sometimes days, even months.

It seems as if some make it their sole purpose in life to defend their school's honor against any naysayers who dare speak wrongly about their university.

Nebraska fans are the best targets, as they provide the most entertainment in the shortest amount of time.

They are, of course, the self-proclaimed "best fans in the nation," and they have a tendency to repeat this mantra several thousand times daily.

How else are they supposed to make themselves feel better? They have Bill Callahan as their coach, for crying out loud.

A good way to throw the Husker nation into a hissy-fit is to go to one of their message boards, type in a message that says something to the effect of "Nebraska is headed downhill with Callahan as head coach, and K-State will dominate the Huskers from this day forth."

Tack on a "K-State fans are better than Nebraska fans" for good measure, and sit back and enjoy the show.

This will throw the entire state of Nebraska into an uproar, as their whole lives are centered around Husker football.

Within five minutes, every Husker fan with a computer – all 23 of them – will have told you a minimum of six times of the tradition of Nebraska football, how Callahan – as soon as he learns to coach – will be the next Tom Osborne, that K-State will forever be inferior to Nebraska, and the fact that the Wildcats have won three straight in the series against the Huskers and five of the last seven overall means nothing, only the 50 years before actually matters.

Then, lurking K-State fans will join the noble fight, as the battle of the Internet bloggers begins.

It is a glorious thing to watch.

Grown men and women, children and teens, the young and the old, getting into online arguments with opposing fans, all boldly upholding the good name of their dear alma mater.

Within hours, you will have an all-out online brawl between the two sides.

Records will be compared, scores from past games will be tossed around like candy and each side will become more stubborn in its efforts to prove the other side wrong.

The ensuing war of words could potentially last until March 30, when K-State officially begins spring practice.

The hours of nonstop entertainment should hold you over until that time.

If it doesn't, I suggest popping in the "Decade of Dominance" DVD and reminiscing with your buddies about the great K-State teams of yore.

Either way, just keep telling yourself, "2004 didn't happen."

Giving her best

Dietz becoming a factor for K-State

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To hear her talk, Kimberly Dietz sounds like every other freshman athlete who just wants to say and do the right things.

"I'm just doing my best whenever I get on the court," Dietz said.

During Saturday night's 66-55 win over Oklahoma State, Dietz's best meant good things for No. 15 K-State.

The freshman guard from Boulder, Colo., was the first player off Coach Deb Patterson's bench, and in the process, Dietz played a career-high 24 minutes against the Cowgirls.

With the added time on the court, Dietz notched her first game with multiple 3-pointers – she went 2-of-4 from behind the arc – dished out three assists and came away with one steal.

"Kimberly has been coming off the bench and stepping up," senior forward Megan Mahoney said. "I think she's playing confidently and she's hit some big shots for us. That's great for us, especially at this point in the season, to be able to have some depth from her."

Perhaps the biggest shot of Dietz's career came late in the second half against the Cowgirls.

With the Wildcats leading Oklahoma State 47-45 in a sloppy and sluggish game for both sides, Dietz came off a screen at the top of the key and drained a three to give the Wildcats their biggest lead of the half at five points.

The three also sparked an 18-8 K-State run that iced the game for the Wildcats.

Dietz down played the shot.

"It was pretty good. With the screens, we just executed the play so well, and it just happened to go in," she said.

The fact that Dietz played more minutes and contributed points off the bench continued a recent trend – a trend that has Dietz becoming a vital cog in the machine that is this season's K-State women's basketball team.

Last Wednesday against Baylor, Dietz went into the game to provide a spark for the Wildcats, who were struggling as a team against the 8th-ranked Bears.

In 13 minutes of action, Dietz scored five points and had two steals.

Her 3-pointer drew K-State to within four points late in the game.

Even though the Wildcats eventually lost 72-62, Dietz's effort did not go unnoticed by her teammates or her coach.

"Dietz, she just needs to be able to get into the flow of the game, and once she is, she's hot – she's nonstop," sophomore guard Claire Coggins said. "She is smart, especially for her age, which really impresses me."

Patterson said Dietz's play in practice has translated into increased time on the court and consequently, increased productivity.

"Kimberly Dietz has shown she's really got a good tempo and feel for the game right now. I think, probably at practice, she has taken really big steps in beginning to understand how to defend at this level," Patterson said. "These last three games, she's come in and has proven that she's beginning to

Tennis team suffers 1st shut-out

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's tennis suffered its first shut-out of the season and its second straight loss, as the team fell to Ole Miss 7-0 Sunday in Oxford, Miss.

K-State has never beaten the Rebels in the history of the tennis program, and, like the last couple of years, failed to break the streak. Despite the deflating loss, head coach Steve Bietau thought his squad's effort was competitive.

"Our team played well in doubles, particularly in one and two," he said. "Both were very good matches, very competitive matches, and I think there was a sense that we played well and should be able to compete."

The only win for the Wildcats was a 9-7 doubles win over Ilona Somers and Mimi Renaudin by K-State's Jessica Simosa and Judith Diaz. The Wildcats dropped their other two doubles matches, and were subsequently shut out in singles to close the match.

Bietau said he could sense when the momentum switched away from the Wildcats for good.

"We played very solid tennis through most of the doubles and through part of the singles matches, particularly number one," he said. "We had a chance at number two to win the first set and when that didn't happen the momentum in the match really swung in their direction and we just never recovered from that."

K-State played Ole Miss short-handed without its No. 4 singles player Olga Klimova, who sustained a leg injury late in her singles match against BYU. Without Klimova, Bietau said his squad is very young and is going to require patience this season.

"We've had a serious loss with Olga Klimova being out," he said. "We've played two good teams and come up short, and we've got a bunch of young players. I've thought from the beginning that this group was going to take some patience and we're going to have to work with them and see what we can do. Nobody likes to lose."

Jayhawks off to best start in 3 years, prepare for Cats

By Doug Tucker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE, Kan. – Halfway through the Big 12 season, No. 3 Kansas has a perfect conference record and a nine-man rotation just like coach Bill Self had wanted.

The Jayhawks (18-1, 8-0) are off to their best start since the 2002 team reeled off an unbeaten 16-0 conference mark, when this year's seniors were freshmen.

But the second half of the conference season shapes up as much tougher than the first for Kansas, starting with Wednesday night's game at an improved K-State.

Kansas will also have road games against No. 25 Texas Tech and No. 16 Oklahoma in the next two weeks, as well as a home game against No. 10 Oklahoma State. And there's the always-tough trip to Missouri at the end of the regular season, a trip that has previously spoiled an unblemished conference record for Kansas.

"It's a small lead at halftime," Self said Monday. "We're happy that we're on top, and all those things. The first half is important, but it's not nearly as important as the second half."

So far, the Jayhawks have managed to win at Iowa State, Colorado, Baylor and Nebraska.

"The places in the second half we have to go to are quite a bit tougher than the places we've been, and that's not to say the places we've been are easy," Self said. "But you've got (upcoming) rival games at Missouri and K-State. And Texas

AFL | Bishop sets arena league rushing record

Former K-State quarterback Michael Bishop made his way into the Arena Football League record books with a 100-yard rushing game against the Colorado Crush on Saturday.

Bishop

Bishop, who plays for the Grand Rapids Rampage, became the first player in AFL history to rush for 100 yards or more in the team's 72-56 loss in Denver.

The Rampage's 122 rushing yards is second all-time in AFL history.

Only needing six rushes for the 100 yards and two touchdowns, the former Heisman runner up also threw for 258 yards and four touchdowns and two 2-point conversions.

NFL | Several Wildcats to participate in NFL combine

Five K-State seniors will participate in the 2005 National Football League combine from Feb. 23 through March 1 in Indianapolis.

Sproles

Sproles is coming off earning Offensive MVP honors as a member of the North squad in the 2005 Senior Bowl.

Also slated to take part in the combine are wide receiver Tony Madison, defensive end Kevin Huntley, defensive back Cedrick Williams and place kicker Joe Rheem.

MLB | Tigers do it again; sign Ordonez to contract

The Detroit Tigers started their offseason by landing one All-Star free agent, then had to wait three months to nab another.

Ordonez

After Carl Pavano and Steve Finley spurned the Tigers' offers, Detroit on Monday added outfielder Magglio Ordonez to go with closer Troy Percival, who joined the team in November.

For the second straight year, Detroit added a marquee player about two weeks before the start of spring training.

First, Ivan Rodriguez. Now, Ordonez.

Ordonez, the last remaining premier free agent of the offseason, and the Tigers agreed to a $75 million, five-year contract, a deal with two option years that could raise the total to $105 million over seven seasons.

Light shines on contemporary art

Art, science partner for vibrant light sculpture display at Manhattan Arts Center; show runs through Feb. 19

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Science and art generally are not often seen together.

Ray Howlett uses both to make the vibrant light sculptures featured at the Manhattan Arts Center.

"Dichroic Portals," Howlett's contemporary light sculpture exhibit, will be on display until Feb. 19.

"What inspires me is science and art," Howlett said. "Not many artists can do both."

The second artist devoted to dichroism, light interference, in art, and the first to incorporate dichroism in light sculptures, Howlett said he owes his success to experimentation.

"It all goes back to the push and pull of space in the photography process," Howlett said. "After I started experimenting more and I started to use mirrors and the light bounced around. But the key word to being an artist is you have to be willing to experiment."

In the 1970s, there were several artists who worked with glass and light, and Howlett's light sculptures feel like a throwback to that period in time, Carole Chelz, coordinator, said.

"He uses a lot of physics in his art with the light and the reflections and refraction," Chelz said.

"What inspires me is science and art. Not many artists can do both."

Ray Howlett
ARTIST

"It's more than art, it's what he does with the physics of the medium. It's the way your eye looks at it, too, because it changes when you move," she said.

Chelz said Howlett is the first light artist the center has had in the 10 years it has had shows. She said there will be another light artist soon.

People are generally surprised by the art, Chelz said.

"First off, our gallery is dark and people don't expect that," Chelz said. "But I put chairs in front of the art so people can kind of zone out looking at it. I think Ray wants people to look at it and kind of get an experience from it, not just glance at it and go on."

The response to this exclusive art form has been great, said Brady Miller, program and marketing director for the center.

"A lot of people look at our galleries in between other events (such as concerts and plays)," Miller said. "And we have had to rush people out of the galleries after intermissions so they can see the events they came to see.

"Traffic during the daytime has been great, too. We've had several schools come in and other groups as well."

Howlett had a nontraditional application to have his art exhibited, Miller said.

"Generally we have artists send in samples with an application and we'll check out their portfolio or slides and pick things out," Miller said.

"But Ray was driving through the area and had one of his pieces with us and said, 'Hey, can I show you something?' We plugged it in and right off told him to fill out an application because we were really interested in his art."

Live album offers energetic performances

"The Tigers Have Spoken"
Album review by Jessica Grant

Fans of Loretta Lynn's phenomenal 2004 release "Van Lear Rose" will love the newest album from alternative country musician Neko Case.

Case, the red-headed bombshell most noted for her work with the Corn Sisters and the New Pornographers, just released "The Tigers Have Spoken," her most upbeat record to date.

"The Tigers Have Spoken" is a vibrant live album that features tracks from performances in Chicago and Toronto, and captures the energetic dynamic of Case and her traveling band, the Sadies.

For existing fans used to Case's usually soulful and dark solo albums, "Tigers" may be something of a welcome change. Sure, the subject matter may tackle broken hearts, dead bodies and unrequited love, but this time the buoyancy of a live show allows the listener to feel somewhat removed from the more depressing subject matter.

"Tigers" is the perfect whiskey drinking album that blurs the lines between pop, country and rock 'n' roll. Unlike most musicians who usually stick to their most recently released songs for live shows, Case employs everything from original tunes to covers in a delightful manner.

In fact, the only tunes from her most recent release, "Blacklisted," are "Favorite" and the title track.

Case channels Loretta Lynn's sultry voice for a cover of Lynn's "Rated X." The song has a country twang that blends flawlessly with a lighthearted sixties pop feel.

Two other notable covers would be the back-to-back pairing of Buffy Sainte-Marie's "Soulful Shade of Blue" and Catherine Irwin's "Hex." The songs come early and offset one another perfectly.

The Sadies get to show off their musical prowess with a cover of the Shangri-La's "Train from Kansas City." Case turns this break-up song into a cheerful tune complete with jaunty guitars and a feverish tambourine.

The two best tracks on "The Tigers" are the title track and the gospel-infused "This Little Light."

"This Little Light" is a gospel-infused take on the church classic that is complete with some banjo and steel guitar action. The biggest problem with this song is the length. Like the album, this song probably could have been much longer.

"Tigers" is only 35 minutes long, which makes the listener feel somewhat cheated after basking in the palpable energy of the band. It is like going to a vigorous concert and leaving after the first set. It just feels hollow somehow.

It almost makes one wonder if the album was some kind of flag from Case's label Anti; a flag that reads "Fickle music fans, don't forget about Neko Case while she is working on her next studio album."

While it was probably not necessary for Anti to release a Case live album, I do not think that too many people will have complaints with an album like "Tigers."

Super Bowl ratings drop

The New England Patriots' third Super Bowl win in four years delivered a 43.4 household rating/63 share for Fox on Sunday night, down 2 percent in ratings from last year, when the Patriots' win over the Carolina Panthers delivered a 44.2/63 for CBS.

But Fox's ratings were a record for the network, and 2 percent better than the averages of the previous five Super Bowls. Sunday night's peak of 46.5/64 was from 10-10:15 p.m., after the Eagles scored a touchdown and were making a final-second drive against New England.

The Super Bowl host city of Jacksonville, Fla., averaged a 58.9/77 share to make it the highest-rated local market, more than even Boston (53.1/78) or Philadelphia (56.0/77). Fox said it was the highest local rating for a Super Bowl host city.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Until a partnership from the Internal Revenue Service office in Topeka ended two years ago, K–State students could get free tax advice from volunteers with Beta Alpha Psi, an accounting student organization.

Jo Lyle, faculty adviser for the group, said that it had to quit offering the service because the IRS would no longer train the volunteers.

Now students are forced to fill out their own tax forms or rely on a professional. Depending on how many forms they have to file, students should consider getting professional assistance.

Gary Edwards, a certified public accountant in Manhattan, said it depends on how much paper work they will have, and how complicated it will be. He believes that if all a student has to do is file a few forms, it's easier to do it themselves.

"There's no reason to pay someone if they can do it themselves," he said.

However, due to the complicated nature of filing returns, Sharon Daniels, office manager at Manhattan's H&R Block, believes it is "too complicated to just do yourself."

Jody Portuese with Bluestem Financial agreed, and said that students should consult a professional.

The next major decision students must make when filling out their returns is whether they will file with their family or by themselves. Either way, it is critical that students communicate with their parents on how they will be filing.

Edwards said one of the biggest mistakes students can make is filing for themselves while their parents still claim them as dependents.

Jim Gordon, a partner with Sink, Gillmore, and Gordon LLP, said that in order to evaluate whether or not students should file independently, they should calculate both ways, and choose which gives them the bigger return.

Also, students must be aware of all the credits available to them, and plan ahead when choosing which one they will use. Edwards said that it is important to choose which credit will give the most returns over time, not one that will give immediate returns.

Finally, if a student decides to file their own, they have the option of sending in their forms, filing online or TeleFiling. Each has its own advantages, but many professionals use e-file, which allows people to immediately file their returns online. Daniels recommends that individuals e-file.

"E-filing is much more accurate, it is much faster if you are getting a refund, and it is safer," she said.

Daniels said that it is safer because there is no chance of the Post Office misplacing the form, and there is no chance of error at the IRS.

No matter how students files their returns, it is important that they understand what forms they must fill out, as they are all different, Portuese said.

"If they have bought a house or are married or have children, then their returns are obviously substantially different," she said.

It is also critical that students take great care when filing, Edwards said. He said that if students file too early, they may miss important credits, but if they do it too late, they will rush through and make mistakes. However, Edwards said almost any mistake a person makes can be fixed.

"There is nothing that will get you thrown in jail," Edwards said.

Alcohol-related deaths down; younger drivers at higher risk

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Alcohol kills more people than all other illegal drugs combined, but the numbers have been decreasing, according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

Starla Bocanegra, director of the Regional Prevention Center of northeast Kansas, said alcohol kills five times more people than any other illegal drug.

"The numbers are decreasing a little, but it is still a lot, and it is not moving very fast," she said.

Bocanegra said alcohol-related are down from 85,000 to 76,000 in the past three years, according to the American Medical Association.

Ann Bradley, spokeswoman for the NIAAA, said alcohol contributes to alcoholism, alcohol dependence, poisoning, organ diseases and damage to cognitive thinking.

"Because alcohol is diffused through the body and bloodstream, it can affect almost every organ in the body," she said.

Moderate alcohol consumption can have some benefits , such as reduced risk of heart attacks or strokes.

"However, with every benefit there can be a risk," Bradley said.

Many people experience the consequences of drinking alcohol.

About 1,900 people under the age of 21 die each year from alcohol-related crashes, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Drivers younger than 21 are more susceptible to alcohol-related impairments than older drivers, according to the NIAAA.

Alcohol interacts with depression and stress and can contribute to suicide, the third leading cause of deaths for young people ages 14 to 25.

Sexual assault and high-risk sex are also consequences that many people must deal with. Alcohol can increase the likelihood of rape or assault, as well as the risk of contracting HIV or other STDs.

Underage drinking has become a concern, Bradley said.

"There should be many more programs in the years to come," she said. "America is finally looking into the problem."

The brain is not completely developed until the age of 21, so for adolescent drinkers the effects are long term, Bradley said.

"This results in underdeveloped mechanisms in the brain, such as memory," she said.

Many organizations are taking preventative measures to reduce the problem. Programs such as SADD, Students Against Destructive Decisions, and MADD, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, focus on decreasing alcohol-related fatalities.

Emily Flemming, assistant director for Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, said that AODES is a good educational resource for K-State students.

Located in English/Counseling Services Building 214, the program provides handouts, does presentations and tries to answer any questions that a student may have about alcohol.

"If students have any questions or concerns about alcohol they can come in. For example, you can come in if you are concerned about friends that may be drinking too much," she said.

Tom Groneman, director of the Alcohol Beverage Control for Kansas, said the organization's purpose is to regulate all alcohol in Kansas and make sure that all taxes are paid. ABC monitors anywhere liquor is sold in the state of Kansas.

Occasionally, ABC sends in underage people who attempt to make a controlled purchase of alcohol. Additionally, "Cops in Shops" is an operation in which a police officer observes whether an illegal sale is made.

Anyone between the ages of 18 and 20 caught with alcohol will be given a minor in possession citation or could be taken to the local police department and a criminal charge could be brought.

ABC generally looks at large events, such as Country Stampede, or large festivals. They occasionally visit college campuses, such as K-State or University of Kansas.

"Anywhere there could be a large concentration of youth or where the local law enforcement might need assistance is where we tend to concentrate," Groneman said.

DIETZ | Freshman contributes understand a defensive concept."

When adjusting to big-time collegiate basketball, most freshmen have a period of time when they sit back and learn the game from the older, more experienced players.

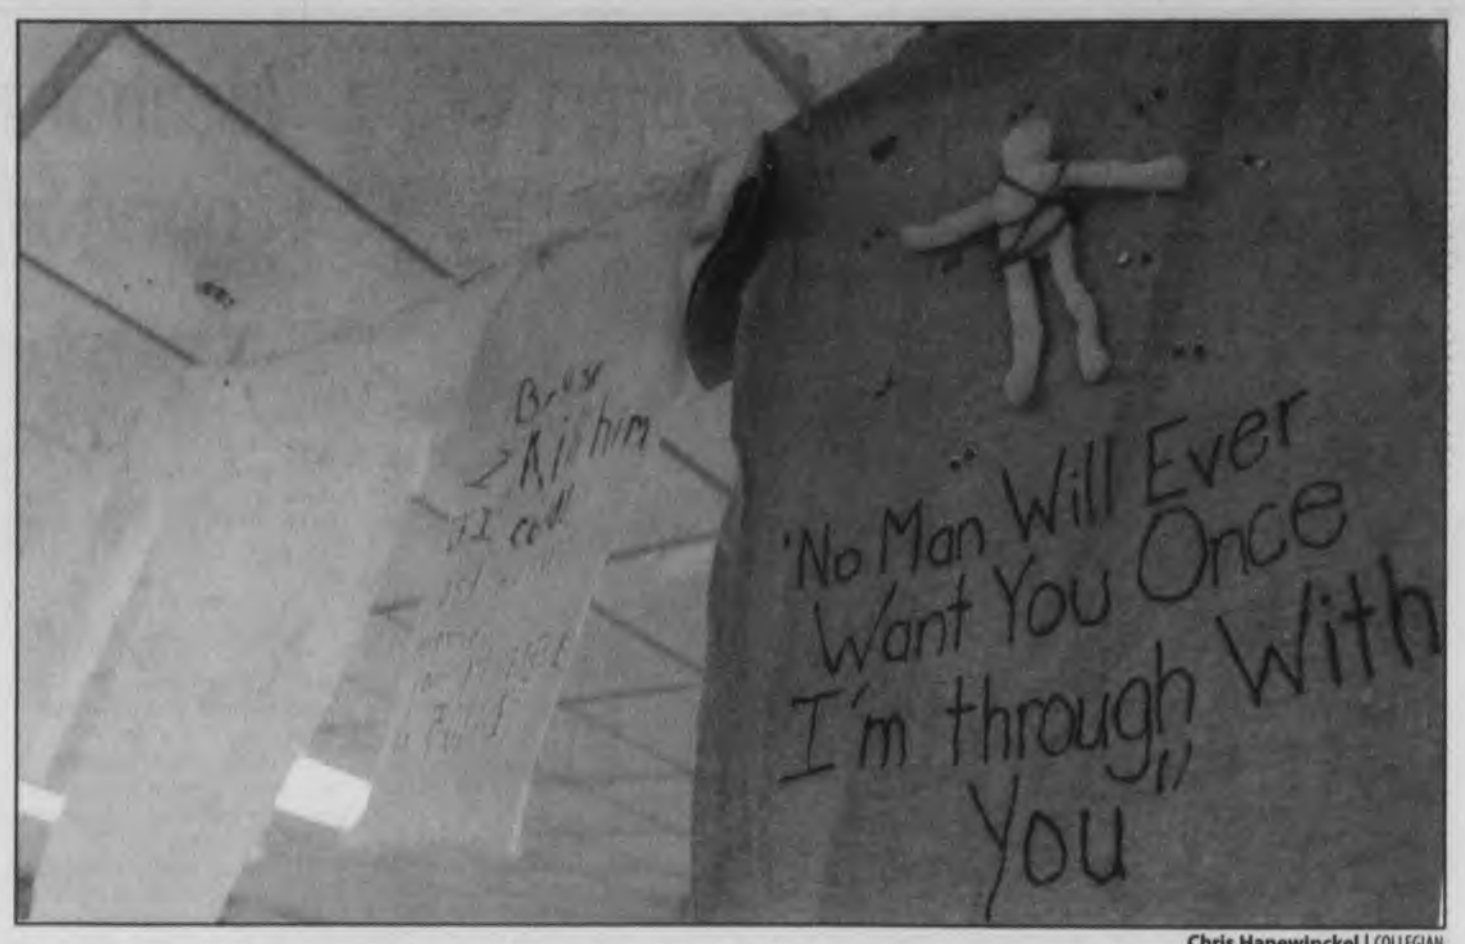
For Dietz, that time came and went during her first game in a Wildcat uniform.

In K-State's first game against Wyoming, Dietz played 13 minutes, but scored no points and had two turnovers with just one assist.

"It's a totally different ballgame," Dietz said of the collegiate game. "Every team we match up against can be so hard. It's definitely a big shock."

Dietz followed her performance against Wyoming with a five-point effort against Pepperdine, which set in motion her season of ups and downs.

She played just two minutes and had one turnover during K-State's 77-56 home loss to Liberty on Dec. 4, but she scored a career-high nine points and grabbed four rebounds against Saint Joseph's less than a month later.



Fast forward to Saturday night against the Cowgirls, and it was clear Dietz had started to figure it all out.

"I think I am getting used to all the intensity and the college level now," she said. "I think I did pretty well coming off the bench and playing my hardest and playing good on defense and just being aggressive."

It is that kind of attitude and dedication that has Patterson excited about what the future holds in store for Dietz and the Wildcats.

"It shows a lot of maturity when a freshman begins to take steps at this stage in the season," Patterson said. "What you have oftentimes with young people like Kimberly, who may not have been getting a lot of experience and court time, they kind of shut down. They just begin to go through the motions and put it in cruise control, but Kimberly Dietz has proven that she's in it for the long haul.

"At this point, Kimberly has had that window of opportunity – she's stepping up."

defense, Wesch said.

"Even the way you walk, making sure you are not looking down, can help," she said.

"You should be looking side to side and swinging your arms. You should look confident."

Mary Todd, assistant director of the K-State Women's Center, said the road to rape recovery can be different for everyone.

"Recovery is enhanced for many through therapy, pressing charges, speaking out, writing about the trauma event and finding individual paths," she said. "Anger, sadness, anxiety, fear and trust issues can be successfully addressed with a counselor.

While Melissa eventually healed both physically and mentally, her outlook on life has altered.

"I feel more empowered now that I was able to deal with something like that and be able to move on with my life and say, 'You didn't get the best of me,'" she said.

"I let it control me for too long."

KANSAS | Jayhawks confident for K-State game, won 21 straight

Tech may be playing better than anybody in our league right now."

The Jayhawks have won 21 in a row at K-State, a streak that astonishes fans on both sides but leaves the Kansas players unimpressed.

"We're not worried about the streak. We know they're going to give us their best shot in their home building," guard Jeff Hawkins said.

There may be fewer players seeing significant playing time in the second half.

In Saturday's 78-65 victory at Nebraska, Self shortened his rotation for the second straight game. Four of the starters logged at least 30 minutes.

Instead of freshmen Russell Robinson and Darnell Jackson off the bench, Self opted for Hawkins, a fourth-year junior, and junior Moulaye Niang – two veterans who offer valuable experience.

In December and January, Self tinkered some with the lineup. But now he's about ready to go with a nine-man rotation the rest of the way.

"I think it will help us," Self said. "I think guys play better when they know who they're playing with and they're used to playing with certain guys. We thought we'd do this all along. We tested the waters a lot. Certainly, this is where we've ended up."

The nine could change, especially when freshmen Alex Galindo and C.J. Giles return from injuries, possibly this week.

ELECTION | Deadline nears

In the past, candidates would be disqualified for not turning in their expense reports, and are elected to an SGA position through write-in ballots. Expense reports contain all expenditures for a candidate's campaign, McCandless said.

Disqualifications and winning on a write-in will not be allowed this year, though.

Sarah Laib, chair of the Senate Operations Committee, said all that is required of candidates is to attend a meeting and fill out an expense report.

Senators propose $415 million for schools

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Senate committee Tuesday proposed a $415 million school funding package aimed at satisfying a Kansas Supreme Court order to increase funding for elementary and secondary education.

The plan would phase in the full increase over three years.

It would increase spending in its first year by $125 million, using existing state revenues and tapping $80 million in cash reserves. The committee identified no funding source for the second and third years of the plan.

The package, drafted mainly by Republicans on the Education Committee, was the first proposal unveiled this session designed to meet an April 12 deadline set by the Kansas Supreme Court for improving school funding.

While the proposal would increase aid to all school districts, it also would provide new dollars for bilingual education, special education and programs for at-risk children, following suggestions offered by the court in its Jan. 3 order to the legislature.

The plan would give districts authority to raise local property taxes to supplement the state dollars.

"I believe this plan will improve education for Kansas," said committee Chairwoman Jean Schodorf, R-Wichita.

Last year, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius proposed increasing sales and income taxes to allow the state to phase the plan – a $310 million package increase in annual spending – in over three years.

Sebelius spokeswoman Nicole Corcoran said the governor is pleased to see a Senate plan but added, "We all need to know about the funding strategy."

Kansas spends $2.7 billion in state aid to its 301 school districts. The proposed increase would be the largest infusion of state dollars since the current finance law was rewritten in 1992.

Under the plan, a $400-per-

IDs will no longer use Social Security numbers

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is getting a head start on adapting to Kansas law, more than a year before it is mandatory.

The Kansas Legislature passed a bill in May 2004 that restricts the use of Social Security numbers. A mass e-mail was sent to K-State students Tuesday afternoon explaining the future of identification cards.

Students are not required to get new IDs, but if an ID needs replacement after June 1, Social Security numbers will not appear on the face of the card, nor will Social Security numbers register on the IDs magnetic strip.

The entire system must be switched by June 30, 2006.

Craig Johnson, assistant director of operations for the K-State ID Center, said the removal of Social Security numbers from IDs has been looked at as a possibility since the law was first discussed in the Legislature.

Johnson said some costs will be associated with removing the numbers from the cards and magnetic strips, but the K-State administration is in charge of footing that bill. Therefore, no cost will be incurred by students beyond the normal $15 replacement cost for IDs.

"The logistics we still have to work out, and the process will take time. There are several things we have to get ready, but there's no earth-shattering changes,"

Internet attack shuts down K-State network

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Internet was attacked Monday night by an unknown source.

A denial of service attack was launched at one of K-State's network computers, Harvard Townsend, Computing and Network Services director, said.

He said CNS followed its outlined procedures for such an attack.

"We contacted upstream, which is Great Plains Network in Kansas City," Townsend said. "We called them to block it upstream, and then they'd block it and call upstream to block it until it stops. Then, whoever was doing it gives up, or we can pinpoint where it's coming from."

The Internet was down for about one and a half to two hours, Josh Ballard, CNS Network Technologies assistant, said. Ballard said he was paged when one of the systems went down due to the attack.

When the system went down, CNS technicians monitored the nature of traffic and concluded it was an attack, Ballard said.

"Everyone should know what the purpose of the attack was," Ballard, senior in computer science, said. "It was not to yield any information, it wasn't like they were trying to take anyone's personal information. They were trying to prevent us from providing our service. They were trying to overwhelm our system. They weren't hacking for any personal information."

Ballard said this was the first attack of this scale that he has seen in the four years he has worked for CNS. He said there are several

Chinese New Year's celebration lasts 15 days, includes food, family

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It looks just like any other family gathering. People scramble in the kitchen, trying to get all of the dishes ready for the meal.

Kids watch traditional holiday programs on TV while snacking before dinner.

But this isn't a delayed Christmas celebration; instead, it's a celebration of the Chinese New Year.

Donghai Wang, professor of biological and agricultural engineering, said the Chinese people celebrate their New Year in a way very similar to American holidays.

"We like eating and getting together with friends," Wang said.

Eating is a big part of the holiday. Xiu Xing Sun, Wang's sister and owner of Happy Valley Chinese Restaurant, was busily preparing about 10 dishes for their meal. Sun said she spent half a day getting everything together.

Traditional Chinese food includes boiled dumplings filled with pork and vegetables, fished cooked whole with the bones still inside and cold beef and noodle dishes.

Sticky rice cake, or nian gao, is the traditional dessert with a little bit of superstition attached. Jian Li, research assistant for Grain Industry and Science, said eating nian gao will bring prosperity to your family.

"Every year the kids will get taller and taller and your family will have better and better health and wealth," Li said.

Sun said in China, the meal for a big family would most likely be more elaborate and have more variety of dishes. Li said that Chinese women do the cooking for the celebration, which can take a lot of time.

"The housewife has to prepare lots of food, and usually it would start weeks and weeks ago," Li said. "It like the turkey for Thanksgiving, it takes a lot of time."

Li said celebrating the Chinese New Year with her husband and Loyal fans camp-out for front row seats at tonight's KU basketball game

Tyler Mills, freshman in mass communications, left, and Aaron Mills, junior in landscape design, camp in the Recreational Complex parking lot Tuesday evening.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While K-State is notorious for its die-hard fans, two students may have topped them all.

Brothers Aaron Mills, junior in landscape design, and Tyler Mills, freshman in mass communication, camped out Tuesday night despite the cold weather, hoping to be first in line for tickets to tonight's basketball game against KU.

Armed with a tent, sleeping bags and hot cocoa, the boys set up camp in the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot, but were forced to move to the Peters Recreation Complex parking lot.

"We were camping by Bramlage, but the Bramlage people called the police, and they told us to move," Aaron Mills said.

A few other fans who were also camping out for tickets left when the police came.

"I think it's strange they don't want students camping out," Tyler Mills said. "I guess they think we'll vandalize the place, but you'd think they would be proud."

K-State Police said Bramlage asked the boys and a few other campers to move so that they could plow the snow. They are allowed to come back at 6 a.m.

The boys said they decided to camp out Tuesday morning, before there was much snow. They faced an eight-degree wind chill and three inches of snow.

The boys said the idea came from their uncle, who always gave them a hard time about not having any school spirit.

"We called him tonight, and he said we were crazy," Aaron Mills said.

Still, the boys don't think they are the most serious K-State fans.

"Maybe we're the most idiotic fans," Tyler Mills said.

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

National UFO Center reports 148 visitors

Illustrations by Brandon Brewster | COLLEGIAN

AMES, Iowa – If the National UFO Reporting Center is correct, aliens visited the United States 148 times in January.

Once again, a scientific space advancement has stirred up debate over the existence of extraterrestrial beings.

January marked the landing of the European Space Agency's Huygens probe on the creamy, mud-like surface of Titan, Saturn's largest moon.

Guillermo Gonzalez, assistant professor of physics and astronomy at Iowa State University, said Titan is not suitable for life, even though it shares similarities with Earth.

"It's too cold for Titan to have carbon dioxide in gas form, and it's too cold on Titan to have water as a liquid or as a gas," he said. "Titan is much, much colder than Earth ever was, so that means most things that are liquids or gases in Earth's atmosphere or oceans today are in solid form on Titan."

Gonzalez said there was a time when he believed in extraterrestrial life and UFO sightings, but it was during his years as a graduate student that he started to see things differently.

"I just started looking into all the factors you need to have life, especially complex life, on a planet," he said. "When you start listing all the factors and multiplying them out, it turns out that the probabilities become very small very quickly."

But Steven Kawaler, professor of physics and astronomy at Iowa State, said the idea that intelligent life is common in the universe is something he finds very difficult to ignore.

"Given what we've learned over the last 200 years about the development of life on Earth – chemistry, biochemistry, astronomy and so on – it looks like the process that produces life on Earth is a fairly common process," he said.

Although Gonzalez said he is confident that Earth is the only planet in our galaxy able to sustain life, the possibility of extraterrestrial intelligence existing outside of our galaxy is something he cannot deny.

"I'm not ready to say that we're alone just because we don't know the probability as well enough," he said.

Kawaler, however, said that since we have not proven this galaxy gives life only to humans, it is still open for debate.

"If you wanted to say we are the only intelligent, technologically capable civilization in the galaxy, the only way you could deal with that is to prove it wrong," he said. "And to prove it wrong you have to find another intelligent, technologically capable civilization in the galaxy. That hasn't happened yet, but people are looking."

MARKETING SPACE

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. – If a man is able to sell his forehead as advertising space for $37,000, roommates Darren Braun and Shane Goodman thought they could easily sell their dorm room window as well.

"It was a Seinfeld moment. We thought, 'Hey, we can do that!' " Braun, freshman in science, said.

Unfortunately for the duo, their scheme did not fly with Pennsylvania State University officials.

Last weekend, Braun and Goodman, freshman in engineering, posted their window space on eBay, hoping to auction off their dorm room window in Pennypacker Hall as advertising space for a month.

"The location is prime," Braun said. "Our window looks out at the Bryce Jordan Center and Beaver Stadium. (We figured) whatever you want, we'll put up as long as it's tasteful."

Soon after their post, the roommates received an e-mail message from a man claiming to be the advertising manager of local bar and strip club The End Zone. Braun said the e-mail offered the boys an unspecified but "decent" amount of money for their window space.

Larry Nagle, owner and chief executive of The End Zone, said no such e-mail was sent. He said the message was most likely a hoax, since all advertising contracts must pass through him, and he was unaware of the offer.

Braun has since put his car up for advertising space, agreeing to place the ad anywhere on his Saturn that the bidder specifies.

Treaster, Hart to run as presidential ticket

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Andrew Treaster and David Hart announced Tuesday their candidacy for student body president and vice president. The pair plan to address issues such as parking and academic accountability.

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Andrew Treaster is giving it a second try – but this time it's as student body president.

Treaster, senior in political science and economics, and David Hart, senior in accounting and finance, announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president Tuesday morning in front of about 60 supporters outside the Bosco Student Plaza despite snow and cold temperatures.

The announcement comes close to one year after Treaster ran for vice president alongside Ben Procter.

"Last year I was tired at the end of the campaign and didn't really think about running," Treaster said.

By November, though, Treaster said he changed his mind and asked Hart to help him improve K-State through his presidential campaign.

ELECTIONS 2005

The election filing deadline for Student Governing Association positions is 4 p.m. Feb. 18.

The pair are running on the campaign platform of "accountable leadership."

"Our goals are mutually inclusive. We want to be a united voice," Treaster said.

And to become a united voice, the pair created four components under their platform: Senate accountability, academic accountability, tuition accountability and parking accountability.

For Senate accountability, Treaster and Hart said they want more students involved in Student Senate through a general assembly. In addition, the pair wants to create a Diversity Programming Council standing committee.

"We want to give more outlets for students to get involved in Senate," Hart said. "We want to provide an arena for them and meet one-on-one with college senators."

Second, the pair want more academic accountability by making enhancements to the university-wide honors program. Instead of randomly picking an honors committee like this year, Treaster said he and Hart want to interview and select applicants to provide more cohesiveness.

Treaster and Hart said they also want to find a long-term solution for tuition accountability – namely beyond the next three years.

"For a long-term plan, there needs to be give-and-take with us going to the administration," Treaster said. "We need to find a medium, because we really want to emphasize a student's right to an affordable education."

Lastly, the pair want to maintain parking accountability by taking steps toward the construction of an on-campus parking garage. Hart said K-State administration has indicated the parking garage can happen, but students are needed to push the ongoing issue.

"We're going to take individuals to keep administration on task with this issue," Hart said. "It's been dragging along and people are getting frustrated."

Treaster said while he and Hart's campaign goals may not be the easiest, they are feasible and can happen.

"The thing that sets us apart is that we want to be leaders with students, not leaders of students," he said.

GPS technology to help track flight

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tracking the path of the GlobalFlyer will be eased by the use of Global Positioning System technology.

Found in vehicles and aircraft, GPS will be mounted into the GlobalFlyer to determine its location based on readings from a system of satellites, Rick Chubb, Geographic Information Systems application development manager, said.

"Knowing the locations of four or more satellites above it can determine its own position relative to those satellites," Chubb said.

Seth Short, member of the GlobalFlyer mission control team and senior in aviation, said they are using the GPS system because it is the most current technology.

"It's a very lightweight system," he said, "a good option for flight tracking."

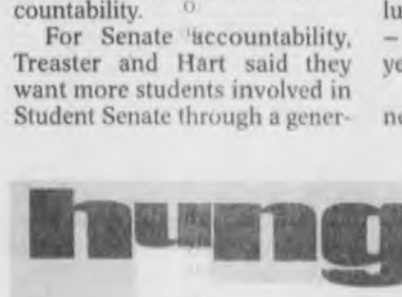
Short, along with the other members of the mission control team, will monitor the plane's position during the flight with the GPS information on the computer.

"We will not only be able to see where it is at, we will also see other aircraft in relation to the plane," he said. "There will also be a textual version that we can look at the latitude and longitude."

GPS works in all weather conditions and it is very unlikely that the system will fail, Chubb said.

"It is possible that they could get out of range of the number of satellites that are needed," he said. "I think they will always be in range, though."

GlobalFlyer



K-State-Salina will sponsor an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

TO THE POINT

City should be responsible for lighting issues

The intersections along Manhattan Avenue have been poorly lit for years, making it dangerous for students and Manhattan residents alike to cross the street at night.

The number of accidents involving pedestrians in this area is high, and the city should have taken care of the problem by providing better lighting long ago.

The City of Manhattan should be responsible for paying the cost of safer streets and sidewalks, rather than taking advantage of the city/university fund to pay for the new street lights on Manhattan Avenue.

The city/university fund is generated by the sales tax from campus sales, which is then used for projects planned by the city and the university to beautify and benefit both the campus and the university.

Since the crosswalks on Manhattan Avenue are used by many residents as well as students, the city should cover the cost of the light installation. The funds should be left for better use, such as maintenance of sidewalks that lead to campus, especially during winter weather. The fund could also be used to keep the parking lots clear after winter storms, instead of minimizing parking spaces, which is already a problem.

Rather than funding basic safety measures, the city/university fund should be used to complete projects that will benefit K-State students and the university as well as the city.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

It's your money

Social Security system robbing America, needs privatization

JONAS HOGG

Few people realize that 7.5 percent of their paycheck is taken every month and another 7.5 percent contributed by their employer to Social Security. That's 15 percent that should be going into your pocket.

There seems to be a lot of buzz lately about how to fix the double-S. There is only one problem with everyone's logic: that money is mine. Mine! Mine! Mine! The money I work for and earn with my own toil belongs to me. What I choose to do with it is my own concern. If I choose to be responsible and save and invest, then I will provide for my own social security. If I choose to fritter it all away on useless garbage, then I have earned the right to work until I drop dead.

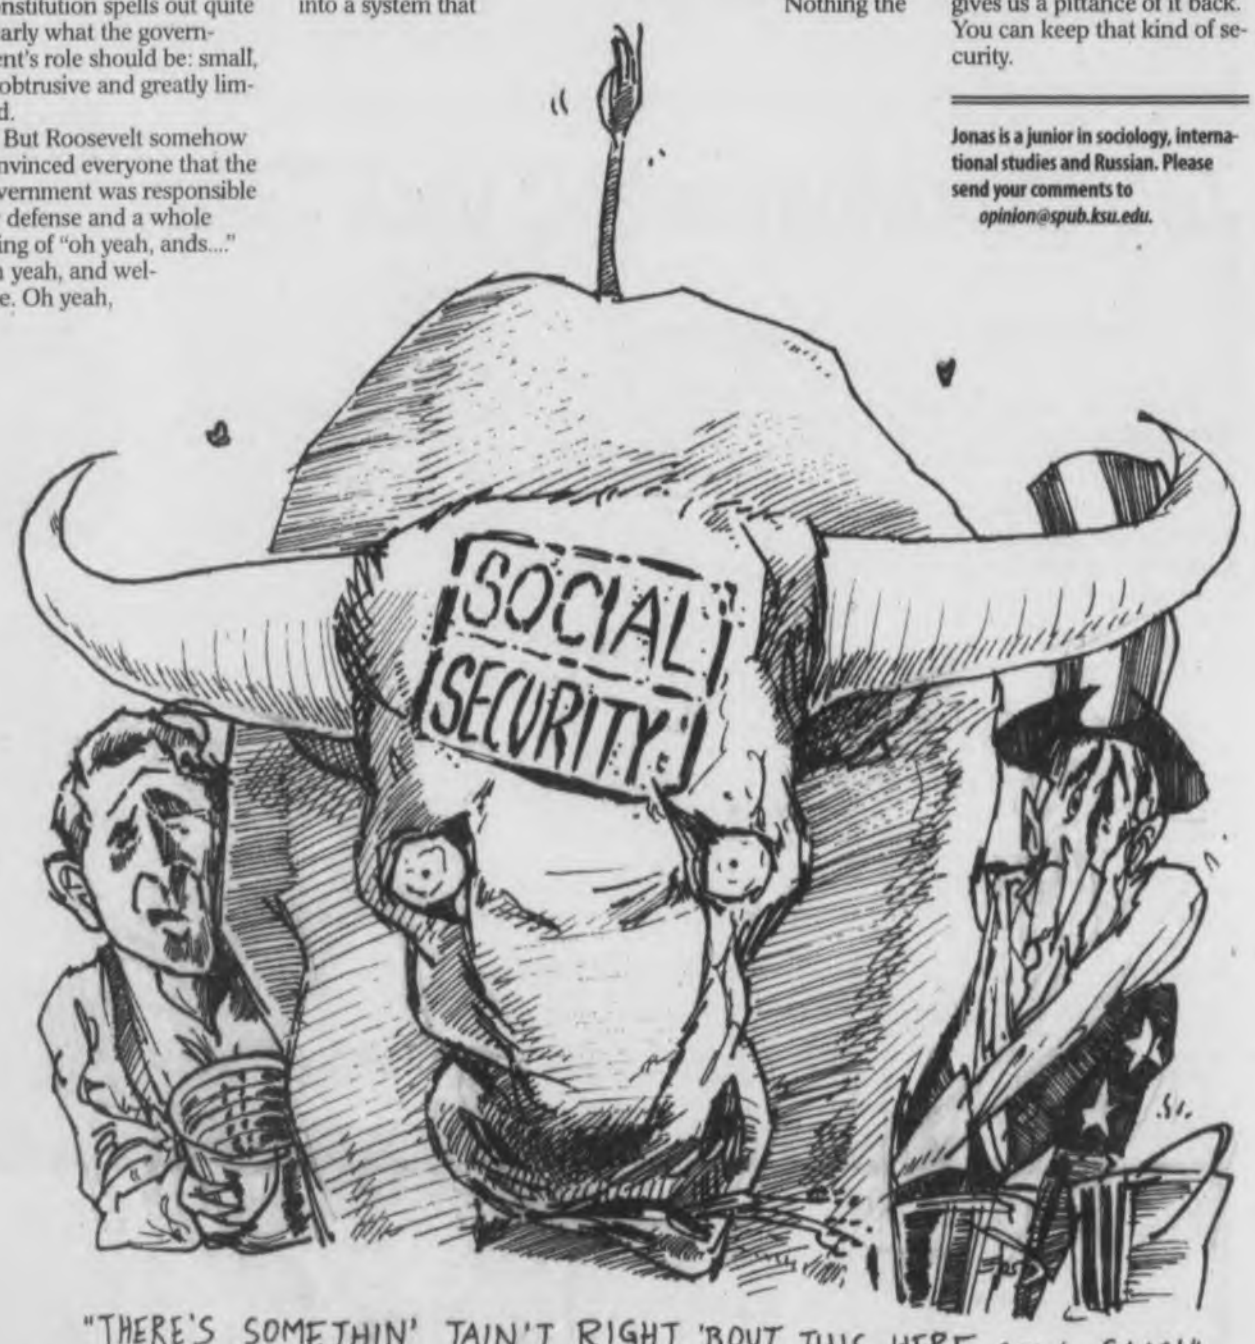
While President Bush's plan seems to be about an inch in the right direction, there is about another mile to go. And there shouldn't be reforms or fixes or any other such nonsense about the government telling me what to do with my money at the end. At the end of that mile should be total abolition of the socialist program that has been stealing from the American people for the last 70 years.

Republicans and Democrats alike are resisting attempts to privatize Social Security. Here's why: every month they get even more money on top of income tax, Medicare, Medicaid and whatever other egregious insult to workers they can dream up.

If you think that 15 percent goes to a piggy bank somewhere and waits for you and your old age, think again. Bureaucrats on both sides of the aisle have been raiding the Social Security fund for many years now. How do you think Bill Clinton achieved his praised balanced budget? Let me assure you it wasn't by trimming the government to a reasonable level. A long line of people have enjoyed skimming even more cream off the top of the workers' milk.

This scam was cooked up by our fabulous, term limit-inducing, socialist leader Franklin Roosevelt. The Constitution spells out quite clearly what the government's role should be: small, unobtrusive and greatly limited.

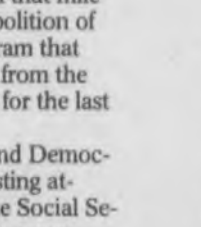
But Roosevelt somehow convinced everyone that the government was responsible for defense and a whole string of "oh yeah, ands...." Oh yeah, and welfare. Oh yeah, and Social Security. Oh yeah, and finding jobs for people. The list goes on and on.



Government is inefficient. Anything it does it inevitably fouls up, so that eventually all these entitlements come crashing to the ground. Socialist – ahem – Social Security will likely go broke before most of the students at this school ever get a dime. We will spend our lives paying into a system that Baby Boomers and Generation X will suck dry. By the time we reach our golden years, the Social Security fund will consist of nothing but dust and decades' worth of politicians' good intentions.

The whole program is a lame duck. More legislation might be able to shore up this institution for a while longer, but nothing will make it work well.

Nothing the government concocts will ever produce the returns and profits people can make investing even in low risk ventures. If people took their futures into their own hands, if 15 percent of every paycheck went into stocks, bonds, funds and other investments, then the majority of Americans would be able to retire comfortably.



Instead we have Social Security which takes from us what is rightfully ours and gives us a pittance of it back. You can keep that kind of security.

Manure has the potential to be sold as fertilizer

JULIA STOSKOPF

Two months ago, more than 12,000 cattle caused an environmental disaster 20 miles west of Lincoln, Neb. There wasn't a stampede or outbreak of mad cow disease, but a pile of cow manure 100 feet long, 30 feet high and 50 feet wide that spontaneously combusted.

The Nebraska Department of Environment Quality has informed Midwest Feeding Company owner David Dickinson that his pile of poop is violating the state's clean air laws.

The feedlot currently holds an average of 12,000 cows at a time, each eating 25 pounds of food per day, resulting in 54 tons of manure every 24 hours.

And with burning manure comes the smell. As reported on CNN.com, Dickinson said, "To me, it just smells like smoke," but this comes from a man who makes a living off of animals.

Personally, manure does not scare me. I grew up around mud and muck on my parents' farm, but somehow the smell of over 2,000 tons of burning manure doesn't sound very appealing.

At the present time, the majority of people involved with the smoldering dung believe that the fire started when decomposing manure ignited its own gases, so no solution presented will prove effective in this case.

Smothering the fire with fresh manure only adds fuel – and fresh odor – to the fire. Spreading the fire has proven ineffective as the smaller piles also begin to catch on fire. Instead of one gigantic mound of manure, the result would be dozens of little clumps of bovine bonfire.

No one can figure out how to stop it from turning into a continuously-erupting volcano.

While Poop Palace may be one state away, remind me again how many feedlots there are in Kansas?

Congratulations to every town or city in Kansas that has a feedlot. You are now at risk to become the next capital of flaming cow chips.

I have just one question for Mr. Dickinson: Why didn't you sell your "black gold" as fertilizer?

Since Midwest Feeding has an infinite supply of manure, why not spend some extra money in order to make some?

Gardeners and farmers around the world spend hundreds of dollars every year on fertilizer, so package your manure as "organic fertilizer" and make a profit.

Why would you choose to keep a gigantic mound of manure that could be utilized more efficiently? Unless the workers and the owners enjoy the fragrance, there is really no reason to keep that much manure around.

The cost of converting your operation would be simple. All you'd need are sacks, labor to shovel the "natural" fertilizer in and a sign for advertising – how fancy depends on the owner's desire.

The profits could be much higher. According to the AGGRAND Organic Fertilizer Web site, the average cost of a quart of organic fertilizer is around $2 to cover 1,000 square feet. While the conversion from quarts to tons boggles the mind of this columnist – I was never very good at math – just think of the amount of quart-bottles of fertilizer 2,000 tons could make.

While no one understands how exactly this aromatic event began, it is important that someone figure out how to stop it.

I'm confident that spontaneous manure combustion is about as rare as the legendary human equivalent, but that doesn't mean that it will never happen again.

Let the crap combustion experts gather round the fire and share tales, – and hopefully explanations, – of this magnificent mound of smoldering manure.

Maybe then feedlots across the nation can take in a big whiff of confidence that their manure will be safe from ignition and ready for sale.

I just saw a 200-pound kid in a diaper inhaling a box of Cheez-Its.

Am I the only one who just saw that on the back of the Collegian you can buy shirts that say "I Love Vaginas"?

Can someone tell me why Gumby's is resorting to gay porn for their advertising concepts?

I think that Gumby's ad was a little risqué. What's next, full frontal nudity?

Facilities crews clear sidewalks after snowfall

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Snow causes much hard work and stress for many who have to deal with cleaning up after the ground is blanketed with white powder.

The decision that determines whether or not classes are cancelled rests on a group of several university officials. Class cancellation is based on the conditions around campus. The safety of students and faculty is of the utmost importance, Mary Knapp, state climatologist, said.

Cancellation is also based on the safety of road travel and any hazards that may inhibit students from being able to drive to class. The depth of the snow, the possibility of blizzard-like conditions or the presence of ice are all factored into whether or not classes will be held, Knapp said.

As K-State's climatologist, Knapp observes changes in weather conditions for the state of Kansas. Through her department, she communicates directly with the National Weather Service and helps to gather weather records for Kansas.

"These records are for students, professors or whomever may need them," Knapp said.

She said the records that her department has date back to 1856, when K-State was still Bluemont College.

"We (K-State) are one of the oldest sites in Kansas and the United States that contains continual weather records from as far back as 1856," she said.

With wintry conditions, students often overlook the amount of work that goes into keeping the sidewalks and roads clear and safe for them to walk and drive on to class.

The K-State grounds crew is in charge of ensuring that sidewalks are clear, the Construction Facilities Department is in charge of clearing streets and custodians are in charge of clearing the walkways in front of individual buildings.

The grounds department uses Hustler machines for both mowing the lawn and sidewalk snow removal, John Woods, director of facilities services, said. The Hustlers have removable blades and removable spinning brooms that are deployed depending on the depth of the snow.

"When the snow isn't very deep, the drivers will use the broom to clear away the snow, but in heavy snow, they switch to blades to push away the snow," Woods said.

Facilities also use Gators, a four-by-four vehicle that is used to dispense ice remover and sand onto the sidewalks, while the Construction Facilities Department uses tractors, larger trucks and loaders to remove snow from the streets. If the snow is really deep, workers will go around with snow blowers to clear the walks further, Woods said.

The Grounds Department works in two shifts during the day. The first shift will come in at 6 a.m., while the late crew comes in from 3 to 11:50 p.m.

"With such heavy snowfall, we have had to ask workers to stay late and we have also had to call in the late crew at noon to help with the conditions," Woods said. "In the morning, the grounds crew will come in early to clear the campus. We work even if the school is closed."

Working in the snow can prove to be very frustrating for those cleaning the sidewalks. With the snow K-State had Tuesday, crews would clear one sidewalk only to turn around and have to clean it again, Woods said.

Clearing snow can be a very frustrating job for those in charge of ensuring the safety of the students.

"Our crews are working to keep the roads as clean as they can," Woods said. "Today has been difficult, but all the workers are doing as good of a job as they can with such harsh conditions."

Recruiting services becoming popular with K-State fans

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College football's national signing day was a week ago, but recruiting is still alive and well.

Fans across the nation have already started looking ahead to next year's crop of recruits, thanks to online recruiting Web site.

The fact that football die-hards can now follow recruiting is still a relatively new idea, spurred on by Web sites such as Rivals100.com, a national recruiting website that is part of the Rivals network.

Jeremy Crabtree of Rivals100.com and a regular contributor to GoPowercat.com, a K-State website run by Rivals, said online recruiting sites began not long ago, but the idea has become huge because fans quickly latched onto the idea of getting recruiting information quickly.

"When (Rivals) first started out about seven or eight years ago, the online sites were designed to be a complement to the print version," Crabtree said. "Once that got up and running, people quickly realized that you can get up-to-the-minute recruiting scoops, and it just exploded from there. Everything is available online at such a faster rate that people really took to it."

With the booming popularity of the online sites, recruiting has changed for athletes as well as coaches.

Bill Snyder, K-State's head football coach, said the growth of recruiting has become so large, he

Building on success

Equestrian team prepares for new season, hopes to build on fall momentum

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State equestrian team is headed into spring hoping to build on the fall season's success.

Last fall, K-State placed first in all four of the events that it participated in.

The K-State English Squad is first in Region Two by 60 points. K-State's region includes teams in Kansas, most teams in Missouri and Illinois. The closest team to the Wildcats is Washington University, a school right outside of St. Louis, Mo.

Head Coach Teresa Slough said she is expecting good things from the English team this upcoming season.

"With the English team, we expect to win the rest of the shows this season. We've won all of them so far." Slough said. "If Washington has a good show they could possibly get us, but we expect to be very competitive."

Two of K-State's top English riders are senior Dehlia Burdan, and Overland Park, Kan., native senior Allison Woodworth.

Burdan, who is from Colorado Springs, Colo., has aspirations of being in the Olympics some day. Currently, however, she is focused on her short-term goal of helping K-State get to nationals.

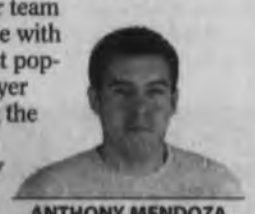
"The ultimate goal is to get us to nationals," Burdan said. "The first step is to qualify. Everyone has got to have a clear head."

K-State's western team is also the leading team in the region, but by a much closer margin. The Wildcats' lead is just six points heading into the spring.

K-State's main competition this spring will come from Black Hawk Community College in Kewanee, Ill.

In the fall, K-State placed first at the Black Hawk Western Show, edging out the host squad by three points. Senior western rider Brandi Vogel placed first in the Open Horsemanship part of the show.

Vogel hopes to use her win at the Black Hawk show to propel herself towards an even more successful spring season.



"My goals for this year are to qualify for regionals in horsemanship and reigning," Vogel said. "I'm not sure how much we can improve on. We just need to keep it at the level we're at."

K-State's first show will be Feb. 19-20 at the Southern Illinois Hunt Show in Carbondale, Ill. After that, one of the more important shows for the season will be held two weeks later at the SMS Western Show in Springfield, Mo.

Black Hawk will be competing in the SMS show and Slough said K-State will need to perform well to take a team to the post-season.

"On the western side we've got a show at SMSU, and we're going to go in there prepared and our goal is going to be to beat Black Hawk," Slough said. "We need to get enough of a lead in the region to be able to take a team into the postseason. If we are prepared and we're focused we can do it, but it's not going to be easy."

Shaq's laziness, greed to blame for Los Angeles Lakers' downfall

ANTHONY MENDOZA

They have fallen off their pedestal as the best team in the NBA and are no longer the glamour team of league with the most popular player running the court, but now are probably the most infamous.

The Los Angeles Lakers are a shell of what they have been the last four years, but you can't blame Kobe Bryant for it.

Losers of six out of their last eight games, the Lakers suffered their most embarrassing loss of the season to the lowly Atlanta Hawks on Monday night. The loss dropped the "Lake Show" to 24-22 on the season and into the final playoff spot in the Western Conference division.

The Hawks are 9-37 this year and have the second worst record in the league.

Don't point the finger at Bryant for the Lakers' struggles this season though. Instead, look directly to sunny South Beach and Shaquille O'Neal.

O'Neal is the reason that the Lakers are not what they once were. He is the most ferocious player in the game, now treading the eastern waters where there are about as many legitimate centers as pure shooters in the league. Not many.

O'Neal should have retired a Laker a la Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Wilt Chamberlain. He owned the city, but he let it slip away with his laziness and greediness.

He was the one coming into training camp out of shape. He was the one who, during an exhibition game last season, blocked a shot and ran down the court to yell directly at the owner Dr. Jerry Buss "(expletive) pay me," while trying to get an extension for more money, even though he is the second-highest paid player in the league.

This is also the same O'Neal who said, "our whole team is here" during training camp in Hawaii while Bryant was back at home dealing with the proceedings of his rape trial.

He was the one who forced general manager Mitch Kupchak to make the worst deal in the history of the franchise. He had already leaked to the media that he would not come back to the Lakers and that all but played into the hands of suitors.

The Lakers didn't get fair value for O'Neal, but rather three-fifths of the Heat's line-up, but not the one player they should have gotten in return.

Dwayne Wade.

His new sidekick. O'Neal's "Flash" to his "Superman."

Their relationship can't be better at this point in time. They are the best team in the weak Eastern Conference and both are thriving together.

If his track record is any indication, they should start having problems in about season three. O'Neal will refuse to believe he is option No. 2 and will turn the top notch physique he started with this year into the more doughy player from the past.

He may come out as the good guy and Bryant as the villain in the eyes of fans of the NBA, but the "Big Sensitive" should be blamed for the fall of the Lakers' dynasty.

WNBA | WNBA adds new franchise in Chicago

CHICAGO — The WNBA awarded an expansion team to Chicago on Tuesday, returning women's professional basketball to the home of the Chicago Hustle.

The Chicago team — its nickname will be announced later — is owned by Michael Alter, and will begin play in 2006. It will be the league's 14th team and first new franchise since 2002. San Antonio and Connecticut began play in 2003, but each moved from a previous location.

The Hustle was one of the original teams in the Women's Professional Basketball League, and drew big crowds for its games on the DePaul campus. WGN even broadcast some of the Hustle's games, giving the team a nationwide fan base before the league folded in 1981.

In the Chicago Condors' only season in the ABL, they were second in the league in attendance, averaging 4,775 fans at the Pavilion.

NBA | Wade, Ginobili among 6 brand new All-Stars

NEW YORK — Miami's Dwyane Wade and San Antonio's Manu Ginobili were among six players picked as NBA All-Stars for the first time when reserves were announced Tuesday.

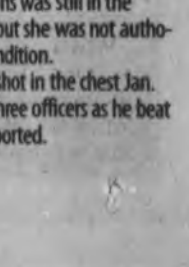
Wade

Gilbert Arenas and Antawn Jamison of the Washington Wizards, Amare Stoudemire of the Phoenix Suns and Rashard Lewis of the Seattle SuperSonics also gained their first All-Star selections in balloting by the NBA's 30 head coaches.

Cleveland's LeBron James, chosen as an Eastern Conference starter last week, is a first-time All-Star, too. The seven first-timers fell short of the record of 10 in 2002 and 1994.

Nude swimmer charged with stalking Kournikova

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — A homeless man was charged with stalking and burglary after swimming nude across Biscayne Bay in search of tennis star Anna Kournikova's waterfront residence and getting caught near her neighbor's home.



Kournikova

Police said William Lepeska screamed, "Anna! Save me!" as he was taken away Jan. 30. He is scheduled to make a court appearance Wednesday.

Police said Lepeska acknowledged that he spent several months searching for her address on the Internet and swam nude 200 yards after locating it.

NFL | Browns hire Crennel with 5-year contract

BEREA, Ohio — Romeo Crennel's long wait is over. An assistant coach for 35 years, he's finally in charge.

Crennel

The 57-year-old Crennel is the 11th full-time coach in Browns history and the team's first black coach.

Crennel received a five-year, $11 million contract from the Browns, who are coming off a disastrous 4-12 season that was scuttled by major injuries and the resignation of Butch Davis on Nov. 30.

NFL | Not-guilty plea entered for injured Robbins

MIAMI — Former Oakland Raiders center Barret Robbins had a written innocent plea entered for him on three counts of attempted felony murder, almost four weeks after he was shot in a struggle with three police officers investigating a burglary call.

The former Pro Bowl player was set for arraignment Wednesday. Miami-Dade jail spokeswoman Janelle Hall said Tuesday that Robbins was still in the hospital jail ward, but she was not authorized to give his condition.

Robbins was shot in the chest Jan. 15 after taunting three officers as he beat them up, police reported.

Pixies make their mark

MARK SIBILLA

Few bands can claim to be as influential as the Pixies, who laid the groundwork for the 1990s alternative rock explosion. From grunge to Britpop, countless bands and musicians have flourishes of the Pixies' music peppered throughout their discographies.

The Pixies were not outstanding musicians. Frank Black wailed lyrics about sex, mutilation, religion, space and pop culture and Joey Santiago's guitar solos were often great swirls of noise, but the Pixies more than made up for musical limitations with their inventive combination of punk and indie rock and their excellent ability to filter their influences into their music originally and successfully.

The group was formed in 1986 after roommates Charles Thompson and Joey Santiago dropped out of college and decided to form a band. They placed ads in music literature papers looking for a bassist who liked "Husker Du and Peter, Paul, & Mary." They found Kim Deal from Dayton, Ohio. Deal convinced Thompson to recruit drummer David Lovering.

Inspired by Iggy Pop, Thompson changed his name to Black Francis and the band was named the Pixies after Santiago found the word while flipping through a dictionary.

The band recorded demos that were discovered by Ivo Watts of 4AD records, who released eight of the songs on the debut album, "Come on Pilgrim," in 1987. The Pixies recorded their first limited play, "Surfer Rosa," with producer Steve Albini (of Big Black) who brought an abrasive edge to the Pixies melodic hooks. The album received rave reviews in Europe and became an American college radio hit.

By the end of that year, the band was signed to Elektra records and, along with producer Gil Norton, recorded and released "Doolittle." The album had polished the band's sound and received excellent reviews on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Pixies were much more popular in Europe, but, with "Doolittle," the band's exposure to American audiences grew considerably. Tensions between Black Francis and Deal began to divide the Pixies, and at the end of 1990, the band took a hiatus due to "exhaustion."

During this hiatus, Deal recorded an album with her twin sister, Kelly, as the Breeders. "Pod" was released in early 1990.

The band members came together in the summer to record their third album, "Bossanova." Unlike their first two albums, "Bossanova," contained no songs by Deal. The subsequent tour was littered with even more tension between Black Francis and Deal. At the end of their British tour, Deal announced in Brixton that it was their last show.

Canceling their American tour due to exhaustion, the Pixies managed to come together to record their fourth album, "Trompe le Monde." The album was more a Black Francis solo album than a unified band effort. None of Deal's songs were used on the album and her vocal input was limited.

The Pixies were able to do one more tour across the United States, but this would be their last for years. Black Francis told BBC's Radio 5 that the group was disbanding. This interview occurred before Black Francis told the band of his intentions.

Black Francis inverted his stage name to Frank Black and began recording solo material that gained a small cult following. Deal recorded again with the Breeders and released "Last Splash" in 1993. Santiago and Lovering formed the band the Martinis. Through the remainder of the 1990s, the members of the Pixies resurfaced intermittently with music that was met with fair reviews at best.

The Pixies reunited early in 2004 to the excitement of many critics and fans. They performed at the Coachella festival and at numerous gigs in the United Kingdom and Europe. The Pixies have promised new studio material and many await the outcome of this rumor.

Regardless of what direction in which the Pixies decide to take their music, the enormous impact of their short lifespan through the late 1980s and early 1990s is indisputable.

"Come on Pilgrim" (extended play): The Pixies are unleashed on the public with this extended play compiled from demo tapes recorded when the band formed. An excellent introduction to the Pixies catalog.

"Surfer Rosa": The band's proper debut. In the middle of punk and alternative rock, the Pixies turned '80s rock on its head through Black Francis's ferocious howl and the band's rollicking, abrasive rock.

"Doolittle": The Pixies' masterpiece. This album is the reason we were blessed with bands like Nirvana. Kurt Cobain has acknowledged his use of the Pixies' sudden soft/loud dynamics in "Smells Like Teen Spirit."

"Bossanova": Surf rock's influence on Frank Black shines through in this album and his obsession with nonsensical sci-fi and fetishist lyrics are brought to the forefront of the Pixies' natural sonic mess. Hugely popular album with college students upon its release.

"Trompe le Monde": French for "fool the world," this is the Pixies' final proper album. Even though the band is falling apart, it has a rich sonic palette and it showcases a newly revitalized band. An excellent last hurrah.

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Ankrom

Name: Erik Ankrom

Title: Student Body Vice-President

How many years at K-State: This is my fifth year at K-State.

Favorite leisure activity: I like to hang out with my friends a lot. Other than that, just relaxing.

Three adjectives that describe you: Outgoing, committed, social

Describe an ideal night for you: I like hanging out with friends. So, I would have to say a fun night out and being able to sleep in the next day.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The people. I have met so many wonderful people and many of my best friends here.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? I would like to see more students take advantage of the tremendous opportunities available to them by increasing student communication and participation.

Most embarrassing moment in college? Wow, too many to count. I fell down an entire flight of stairs once in front of a big group of people. Ask my friends, they could probably tell you some pretty good stories.

Favorite alcoholic beverage: I've been a fan of whiskey-Coke lately. Natural Light is definitely a close second.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? Jennifer Aniston, I hear she is available now.

If you could drive any car, what would it be? I drive a '95 Chevy Truck, and I love it. I tried driving a Camaro for one summer and hated it. It sucks parking my truck in the Union lot though.

What is something that most students don't know about you: I won a spelling bee in elementary school, seriously.

THEY SAID IT

"It's not fair to the artists, it's not fair to music, and it's wrong to sell music just as a vehicle to mainly showcase other programming. It's time for a change, and all of us have got to have our voices heard."

— Veteran music industry executive Clive David, on the dearth of music videos played at MTV

Neil

"Don't be polite. I don't like Tommy and Tommy doesn't like me. Tommy doesn't care to resolve things. I don't care. I have no feelings about it either way. You go to work and there's a guy in the office you don't like. You still do your job, huh?"

— Motley Crue singer Vince Neil, on drummer Tommy Lee

Anderson

"To them I'm just a mom who drives them crazy. I've been in Playboy, sure, but I can still be lunch monitor at their school on Wednesdays. My kids couldn't care less."

— Pamela Anderson, quoted in the New York Post on how she balances being a sex symbol and mother to 7- and 8-year-old sons.

Stripe

"I was first attracted to men actively when I was 13. I kind of had my first sexual awakening much earlier, with a brother/sister team with red hair in a bathtub on Easter Sunday ... I still have a thing for redheads and freckles."

— R.E.M. singer Michael Stripe

Potential stripper should make new friends or turn to prostitution

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: Dear editor,

I am in my fourth year in college now, and I feel like I am in the Twilight Zone sometimes. The world is not the way I expected. I hit more obstacles than the average person. I am considering becoming a stripper since money is the only thing that calms me down now. I feel it would ruin my life if I ever wanted to advance myself outside of a strip club. I have no friends here or family. I am lost, confused and alone. Any advice would be appreciated.

A: I do have some reservations about responding to this question. The reason is that this question was not originally sent to me. It was sent to an editor who forwarded it to me.

When someone sends a question to me, it is fair game for trash talking and ridicule. But since this article wasn't sent to me, and this person – who I assume is female – is obviously confused and in need of real help, I feel bad making fun of her.

That is basically what the guy sitting on my left shoulder is saying. The guy on my right shoulder is telling me that this is the perfect opportunity to make fun of someone. A lost and confused young woman who is trying to find solace by turning to stripping is the best setup for some great jokes.

I'm not completely heartless, but I've not been known to turn down a chance to make fun of someone either, so I'll compromise here. I'll give two points of view – the one from the guy on my left shoulder and one from the guy on my right. I won't be too hard on this poor girl. Assuming that this is a real question and you are a real distraught woman and not some stoned frat guy (from whom I still enjoy getting questions), you can decide whose advice to take.

Left: The most important part of a stable college lifestyle is the presence of close friends. The type of friends with which you choose to surround yourself will inevitably guide you down the path of life. You say that you don't have any friends here at all. If this is true, you need to do whatever you can to be as friendly and sociable in classroom and group work settings as possible. I know this can be hard for people who have anxiety disorders. If this is this case, there are medications and counseling options available at Lafene Health Center for dealing with social anxiety problems.

Since you are considering stripping, you must obviously be somewhat attractive. So, you should have no problems making friends with guys. OK, after that last statement I can tell that the guy on my right shoulder is starting to take over, so I'm switching.

Right: You should consider bypassing the stripping and go straight to prostitution. Stripping is merely a gateway to prostituting. You're going to end up there anyway, so why waste your time.

Now you must understand this means you're going to have to move to a bigger city. I don't think that Manhattan has the economy of necessary scale to support a successful career in the hooking industry.

Once you have found a promising location, the next step is to perform some type of S.W.O.T. analysis on yourself and maybe even some form of sales forecast and discounted cash flow evaluation so that you know what type of money you can expect to make.

I don't know how attractive you are, but I suggest trying your hardest to stay as close to the upscale side of town as possible so that you can keep your margins high.

Remember, go where the money is. When looking for a pimp, shop around. Check consumer reports so that you don't end up getting the short end of the stick. I'm not exactly sure about the availability of disability insurance for hookers, but if it's available, get it.

These are just a few tips for getting started. For more advice you'll have to buy my book.

Now if you don't think that you're quite ready to jump into the world of prostitution just yet, that's fine. But before you start stripping, you will need to learn a few moves. You can sign up for one of my instructional classes at any time. The first session is always free. Please e-mail me your contact information if you are interested.

I couldn't think of a good way to end this column, so I think I'll go with a random quote from Family Guy. "There's no need to kill strippers, cause most of them are already dead on the inside." –Peter Griffin

Adam is a fifth-year senior in business. If you have a burning question, you can e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Joint fund to pay for crosswalk lighting

Denison Avenue to be widened to 3 lanes by early next year

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Campus boundaries will soon be changed.

Updated lighting will go along Manhattan Avenue and Denison Avenue will be widened to three lanes.

Crosswalks are going to be better-lighted on Manhattan Avenue, said Bill Muir, assistant vice president of community relations.

"The crosswalks right now are hazardous," he said.

Vehicles have hit pedestrians crossing the street, Muir said. About four years ago there was a serious accident that drew public attention.

"We've had several people hit there for sure," he said.

According to a Riley County Police Department traffic report, two people were hit on Manhattan Avenue while it was dark outside. Three people were hit during the day. The study was done from Feb. 15, 2003, to Nov. 28, 2004.

About three years ago, Westar Energy put up more light poles at crosswalks. There were two or three lights at each crosswalk, now there are four, he said.

However, it's not enough, Muir said.

"People, especially when they wear dark clothes at night, are hard to see," he said. "God forbid, you could kill somebody."

Metal poles are replacing wooden ones to update the look, Muir said.

"It'll just make it nicer looking and brighter lighting," he said.

City Commissioner Mark Taussig said the lights will probably be high-pressure sodium lights, which is city standard. These lights are similar to white lights except a little less bright and a lot less expensive. The light bills are about one-third less for high-pressure lights.

"It uses a lot less energy," he said.

Karla Olsen, Westar spokesperson, said the sodium lights are also safer. The lights used before emitted mercury vapor, so it has been company policy to use the sodium lights since 2001.

Taussig said more lights will be added on the west side of the street, which is the campus side. Construction should begin this summer.

"On the east side, there's a whole lot of trees, and the lights aren't as effective," he said.

Denison Avenue will be widened to three lanes from Anderson to Kimball Avenues.

Jeff Hancock, city engineer, said it will mainly take repainting the lines.

Right now Denison has two 18-foot lanes, he said. Repainting will make it three 12-foot lanes.

However, some of it will require construction. From Elaine Drive to Kimball Avenue will need widening, Hancock said.

"It'll move traffic more efficiently, allowing a turn lane in the middle," he said.

Construction is set to begin late this year or early next year, Hancock said. Neither project is designed yet.

Funding for these projects come from the city-university fund, which was started in 1994, Muir said.

Before then, K-State was not officially a part of Manhattan, so when it was annexed, the fund and the City/University Special Projects Committee was created, he said. It has six people unrelated to K-State, two students and one faculty member.

For 2005, the city is spending about $190,000 on the Denison and Manhattan Avenues projects, Muir said. About $350,000 each year is generated from on-campus sales tax. The money is divided between who is doing the projects.

K-State will receive $119,500 for 2005 from the fund. Muir said $35,000, which will go with $70,000 from 2004, will buy a recycling truck. The truck be used on campus and in the city. Funds will continue to go towards the truck until 2008, when it will be purchased, Matt Wagner, governmental relations director, said. "That's not enough to buy that at this point," he said.

The updates on Manhattan and Denison Avenues benefit the community, Taussig said.

"We do everything we can to improve safety," he said.

Commission discusses overflowing trash

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The elimination of accumulated, overflowing trash was the focus of the City Commission work session Tuesday.

Brad Claussen, city building official, presented an amendment to the Code of Ordinances that he said would help speed up the removal of trash from private property.

Since the Kansas Legislature recently amended the statute that gives cities the authority to abate, or eliminate, nuisances and to assess the cost of such elimination against the property, Claussen said the city ordinances needed to be changed to comply with state law.

"The amendment will allow us to bring our current ordinance in line with the new state statute," Claussen said. "At the same time, it would also make the abatement process more efficient."

Currently, when a code inspector finds a nuisance, generally trash, lumber scraps or old appliances, on private property, a notice of violation will be sent to the property owner or occupant. The responsible party will be given two warnings and has up to 20 days to clean.

If the individual doesn't respond to the second warning, the Riley County Health Board will determine if the violation constitutes a health nuisance. If so, the city can eliminate the violation at the individual's cost or initiate prosecution.

Mayor Brad Everett said nuisance violations have been a problem in Manhattan.

"I don't have a sympathetic ear to listen to a tenant or owner that is not doing their own part to keep the property clean," Everett said. "It's time people were held accountable."

The new amendment would establish an appeal process for the violator, permit the building official to declare a condition a nuisance, and attach a $50 administrative fee with the trash-collecting bill that will be charged to responsible parties if no individual action is taken.

The amendment will be discussed at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

Manhattan health department excuses more than $600,000 in medical bill debts

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County-Manhattan Health Department has written off almost $600,000 in old debts.

The debts had been on the system for almost 15 years and the department's computers were no longer capable of storing all the excess information. The debt includes charges and was acquired between 1990 and 2001.

Chuck Murphy, director of the health department, said he doesn't think people abuse the fact their bill might be written off. The department's primary customers sometimes don't have the money to cover their medical expenses.

"We serve very low income clientele, and we get grants to cover some of the expense," Murphy said.

The average of unpaid medical bills per year is in the $60,000 range, he said.

Murphy said just because the clients don't have money to cover their bills doesn't mean they won't get health care, though.

"We don't refuse service to anyone for inability to pay," he said.

The process of writing bills off is becoming a standard procedure in doctor's offices and hospitals. Karen Armbrust, administrator for Mosier & Mosier Family Physicians, said the clinic has other ways of handling the debt.

"Some of the people are sent to a collection agency. Other times, considering patient situation, we just forgive the debt. But that is only after a long time and in certain situations," Armbrust said.

The health department has made it a policy to write-off old debts once a year, while at Mosier & Mosier, it could be anywhere from six months to four years before it is resolved.

Since the budget is figured for write-offs, Murphy said that it won't affect the future budget of the department.

"We budget for bad debt. We take that into account when we figure the budget each year," he said.

Courtyard clock tower to be completed by spring break

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clocks for the clock tower that will be named after Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco still haven't arrived.

Gerry Carter, director of facility planning, said they are waiting on the company that manufactures the clocks to send them.

"Sometimes we just have to be able to wait for the manufacturer for the specialty item like those clocks to be able to work them into their manufacturing schedule and get them on a timely basis," he said.

Carter said they expect to have the clocks within the next few weeks.

The delay of the materials can be aggravating for facilities, Carter said.

"Well, it's an annoyance," he said. "This is not a typical kind of construction project."

The base of the tower is already standing in Bosco Student Plaza, in front of Seaton Hall.

Carter said delivery of the materials for the base of the tower was also delayed.

The clock tower was originally scheduled to be completed before Thanksgiving Break. However, Student Senate Vice Chair Tyson Moore said they are now planning on having the tower completed by the end of spring break.

Student Senate approved a $15,000 allocation to construct the tower in October 2004. The tower costs about $30,000 with the remaining $15,000 coming from construction and other budgets in the university, as well as some private donations.

Moore said although it is frustrating that the tower is not completed yet, he would rather it be done at a steady pace.

"We didn't just want something thrown together," he said. "We want it to get done the right way. We want it to honor Pat Bosco in a way that looks and means the greatest to him."

Telefund goal set at $1.4 million

By Dane Lickteig
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State alumni are no strangers to supporting their alma mater when it comes to Telefund.

"K-State is so blessed to have the supportive alumni that they do," Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving and Telefund said. "The support from the alumni translates into the volunteer callers having a good time, which keeps the tradition alive."

The Telefund, the world's largest all-volunteer telephone campaign for higher education, is in its 26th year. It has raised $706,000 so far this year. Last year, the Telefund raised $1.35 million, a number Dowell said he would like to build on in 2005.

"The goal is for $1.4 million, but we would like it to go to infinity and beyond," Dowell said.

It is a goal that fits this year's theme, Phone Story '05 "To Infinity and Beyond."

The donations given by alumni and participating companies provide scholarships and educational benefits in the nine academic colleges at K-State.

While most other universities also use telephone calls to raise money, it is either a job for students, for which they must meet a quota to get paid, or the universities rely on automated systems. This year's all-volunteer force for K-State is expected to reach around 1,700 students that will work from more than 80 call stations until Feb. 21.

The average night for the callers starts at 6 p.m. and runs until 10 p.m. Callers range in age from freshmen to graduate students, with volunteers from all of the university's academic colleges and departments.

A big reason the Telefund is successful is because of the volunteer callers who show up every year, Dowell said. The callers don't consider helping out a job at all.

"I really enjoyed myself and had fun," Janine Feldkamp, junior in elementary education, said.

The experience might be fun but it is also important to have the students volunteer to show the alumni that they are involved and do care about the scholarship money, Kristin Bosiljevac, sophomore in pre-health, said.

U.S. House begins immigration debate

By Suzanne Gamboa
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Making it easier to deport immigrants seeking political asylum will get a vote in the House of Representatives this week, a few days after a federal commission said that many are already being treated like criminals.

The House is scheduled to begin debate Wednesday on legislation that would make it easier for judges to reject asylum claims and prevent immigrants from using state drivers licenses as identification for boarding airplanes or entering federal buildings.

The bill, sponsored by House Judiciary Committee Chairman James Sensenbrenner, also would give the Homeland Security Department sweeping new powers to tighten border security and track illegal immigrants.

Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., agreed to drop similar measures from an intelligence reorganization bill in December after winning promises from House and Senate leaders that it would get an early vote this year.

He said it is needed to prevent terrorists from using asylum claims to enter the country.

In a report Tuesday to Congress, the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom said screeners at airports and other ports of entry send most foreigners who lack proper documentation back to their country immediately.

Only those who express a "credible fear" of return are considered for asylum and many of them are treated like criminals, in some cases strip-searched or held in shackles or solitary confinement, the commission found.

Palestine, Israel announce cease-fire

By Ramit Plushnick-Masti
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In a crucial step heralded as a fresh start to peacemaking, Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas promised Tuesday to halt all acts of violence and agreed to meet again soon to tackle the tougher issues that for decades have blocked the road to peace.

Even if their cease-fire pledge sticks, much negotiating lies ahead as the two sides work to rebuild the trust destroyed in four years of deadly attacks.

"What we agreed upon today is simply the beginning of the process of bridging the gap," Abbas said after his first face-to-face meeting with Sharon since succeeding Yasser Arafat. The Palestinian leader made clear the two sides have yet to wade into more fundamental issues, including control of Jerusalem and "the settlements, the release of prisoners, the wall."

The speeches by the two leaders at this Egyptian resort, broadcast live on Israeli and Arab TV stations, were greeted with a mixture of hope and skepticism on a cold, rainy day back home. Many people said they would settle for modest improvements in their daily lives.

"We've gone from euphoria to extreme disappointment," said Shimrit Golan, an Israeli law student who lives in Jerusalem. "We'll wait and see what happens."

"I hope the leaders are serious this time, because the future is dark," said Raed Omar, a university student in Gaza City.

The militant group Hamas threw up an immediate roadblock, saying it was waiting to hear from Abbas and to see what Israel would do before committing to a halt in violence.

Yet the verbal cease-fire pledge and the sight of Abbas and Sharon grinning broadly as they shook hands across a summit table were the clearest signs yet of a new life for the peace process after Arafat's death in November and Abbas' election in January.

One Israeli official, Gideon Meir, said "there was a great atmosphere in the talks ... smiles and joking." In another sign the talks went well, Egypt and Jordan announced they would return their ambassadors to Israel after a four-year absence – possibly within days.

Emerging from private talks, Sharon promised that the Israeli military would stop attacks on Palestinians, and Abbas promised a halt in militant attacks on Israelis.

"We must move forward cautiously," Sharon said. "This is a very fragile opportunity that the extremists will want to exploit. They want to close the window of opportunity for us and allow our two peoples to drown in their blood. ... If we do not act now, they may be successful."

In the first reported violation, Palestinians shot at a car near a West Bank Jewish settlement after nightfall and fired and threw firebombs at soldiers who came to investigate. No one was hurt. The al-Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, affiliated with Abbas' Fatah movement, claimed responsibility.

Privately, Israeli officials made clear their halt in military operations depended on an end to Palestinian violence. And although they do not expect the Palestinian leadership to crack down on militants immediately, that must be done in the long-term, they said.

"At the end of the day, there should be disarming of these groups – no question about that," Meir said.

Rove promoted to deputy chief of staff

By Deb Riechmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Karl Rove, the senior political strategist who orchestrated President Bush's re-election campaign, has been promoted to deputy chief of staff, a job that will involve him in most White House policy and not just politics.

Rove will retain his title as senior adviser and will continue to oversee strategy to advance the president's agenda. In addition, he will continue to oversee the offices of intergovernmental affairs, political affairs and strategic initiatives.

But he will add to his portfolio the oversight of all White House policy development and coordination of the Domestic Policy Council, the National Economic Council, the National Security Council and the Homeland Security Council, White House press secretary Scott McClellan said.

The promotion has rankled a few Democrats.

"Empowering Rove in this way shows that Bush cares more about political positioning than honest policy discussions," said Terry McAuliffe, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. "Bush knows that Rove is neither an economic nor a national security expert. He is simply an ideological strategist. ... Clearly, Bush thinks political manipulation matters more than keeping the president honestly informed about the state of the country."

The White House also announced that deputy chief of staff Joe Hagin, the other right hand man of White House chief of staff Andy Card, is taking on more responsibilities.

In addition to his duties overseeing administrative and logistical matters, McClellan said Hagin would represent Card at meetings on intelligence, counterterrorism, proliferation, counter-proliferation, the Defense Department and Homeland Security Council.

Other staff changes:

Sara Taylor, deputy strategist on Bush's re-election campaign, will oversee political affairs at the White House.

Michael Gerson, Bush's top speechwriter, has been given a new title as assistant to the president for policy and strategic planning. He will oversee most major addresses, but will focus on the president's compassionate agenda, human rights and advancing freedom and democracy.

Kristen Silverberg, as deputy assistant to the president for policy, will also help coordinate policy development among the four councils.

Dana Perino, former communications director for the Council on Environmental Quality, is replacing deputy press secretary Claire Buchan, who is the new chief of staff for Commerce Secretary Carlos Gutierrez.

Congress considering class-action lawsuit limits

By Jesse J. Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Congress is close to making it easier for corporations to dodge many of the class-action lawsuits that businesses say are bankrupting them while rewarding lawyers and doing little to help victims.

The measure, headed for a vote this week in the Senate and probably next week in the House, would be the first fulfillment of one of President Bush's priorities for his second term. But a fragile compromise could come unglued if senators make changes in the bill, such as giving federal judges a little more discretion to keep lawsuits alive.

"If the Senate passes any amendment, then they are jeopardizing it," House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, said Tuesday.

Opponents of the legislation say it would only hurt average citizens and let big business escape multimillion-dollar judgments for wrongdoing.

But Bush, echoing business leaders' complaints, said a judicial system that lets lawyers look for friendly forums in state courts for "junk lawsuits" is tilted against corporate defendants. "Justice is distorted, and our economy is held back, by irresponsible class actions," he said in his State of the Union speech last week.

In Mississippi, Bankston Drug Store was named in hundreds of suits in which users of the diet drug fen-phen claimed it gave them heart and lung problems. The pharmacy was sued so the lawsuit could be heard in Mississippi, said Hilda Bankston, the pharmacy's former owner.

She ended up having to sell the only pharmacy in Jefferson County after the lawsuits started and her pharmacist husband died of a heart attack.

"There are too many small business people who worked too hard for greedy attorneys to just use us for their purposes," she said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

Say it with a personal.

NEW YEAR | Family celebrates Chinese new year

friends in Manhattan make it feel more like New Year's back at home.

"Since our family is so far away from America, we really appreciate this kind of atmosphere," Li said.

Unlike the American holidays, Chinese New Year is a 15-day celebration, for which many people take off work and school.

"The real holiday for Chinese people is a little bit longer," Jie Hu, research assistant for Grain and Industry Science, said.

Hu said that students typically get a month off for the holiday and adults get the full 15 days, unlike American adults who only get two or three days.

But like the American New Year, everybody is wishing for happiness and good luck. As friends and family sit down to dinner, everyone toasts for a happy new year.

INTERNET | K-State cannot track Internet attacker reasons why someone would attack the K-State Core System, one of the reasons being for fun.

It is virtually impossible now to track who attacked K-State because the attackers most likely used a compromised computer at a different site to conduct the attack, Townsend said.

Although Townsend said attacks aren't frequent at K-State, he said they are not at all unusual.

He said students and faculty shouldn't be concerned about Internet safety due to the attack, because it was more of an inconvenience than anything else.

"Normally, in an attack like this, a huge number of packets of information are sent and it overwhelms the server," Townsend said. "Basically it consumes bandwidth and is an inconvenience."

SCHOOL | Legislators propose millions for schools

student increase in aid for all districts would be phased in over three years. Also, a district could use local property taxes to raise an amount equal to 30 percent of its state funds; the limit is now 25 percent.

Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley said raising the limit on local property taxes favors affluent districts and wins votes for any school finance plan.

"I understand the local option budget is a political factor because of Johnson County.

"But I believe the Supreme Court criticized us for making decisions based on politics," said Hensley, D-Topeka.

The plan also would resurrect an oversight committee – created in 1992 but later abolished – that would be charged with monitoring trends in education and recommending funding adjustments each year. Oversight would include annual audits of school spending.

House Republican leaders have said repeatedly they think legislators can address the Supreme Court's order without increasing taxes. Senate President Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, hasn't ruled out higher taxes to finance the second and third years of the Senate committee's plan.

Democrats have been skeptical that legislators can satisfy the court without raising taxes.

Hensley said relying on existing revenues would restrict future budget decisions and force legislators to abandon the education package or drastically cut other government programs if the economy sours.

House Speaker Doug Mays said the Senate plan dealt with issues that will be addressed in a House Education Committee plan, scheduled to be unveiled early next week.

He declined to give details about the House plan and said the legislators drafting it haven't settled on funding sources. But Mays said using existing state revenues and tapping cash reserves were still options. He didn't know how many years the House plan would cover.

"Because you never know what is going to happen to the economy, you can never budget beyond two years, but we're not ruling it out," Mays said.

As for the Senate plan, Mays said: "It's what one might expect."

Geary County Superintendent Ronald Walker, whose district includes Junction City and Fort Riley, said he expects several proposals to emerge following Tuesday's announcement.

"It's a good start to the conversation," Walker said.

RECRUITING | K-State fans visit recruiting sites thinks it could be getting out of hand.

"The thing that is happening all over is that (recruiting) becomes a dramatic theatrical event," Snyder said. "It's going way in the wrong direction I think, and I think we are creating a monster that we are not going to like."

On signing day last week, www.GoPowercat.com had 538,000 hits on its Web site and it has had over 6 million hits since the beginning of the year. Last Wednesday, www.Rivals100.com reported 37.9 million hits.

Snyder said recruits often tell recruiting services and Web sites more than they tell the coaches.

"The funny thing is, a lot of these youngsters will tell some of (the media) more than they will tell the coaches that will call right afterwards," he said.

"It's like we don't read it. It's amazing. It's kind of a horrid thing too when you think of it."

Crabtree said a lot of recruits use the online sites to find out information on the schools they are considering.

"The Web site is a great equalizer," Crabtree said of www.Rivals100.com. "It is a way for for recruits to find out what the schools are doing with other recruits. If you are a receiver and you notice that K-State just picked up a high-profile quarterback from California, it makes you think about your decision. It's a great way to find out more about their future teammates."

But recruiting services do not pick up on everything.

This year, Ryan Perrilloux was one of the most highly sought-after recruits in the country. He had scholarship offers from most major Division 1-A programs, including K-State.

In July of last year, Perrilloux made an oral commitment to play at the University of Texas.

However, several months after Perrilloux committed to Texas, there was a buzz on Internet sites that the quarterback was thinking about committing to Louisiana State, but no one knew for sure.

Perrilloux eventually took a visit to LSU, but never changed his commitment. It was assumed that he would sign with Texas.

Then, last Wednesday, Perrilloux dropped a bombshell, as he signed with LSU after being committed to Texas for almost seven months.

Snyder said Perrilloux's decision is the nature of the recruiting game, one that often leaves coaches and schools behind.

"We taught him how to play the game, didn't we? When I say 'we,' I mean all the schools that were interested in him," Snyder said.

"The system taught him how to play the game, and he played it better than anybody else did. He played it better than the schools that were after him."

ID CARDS | K-State changing ID numbering system

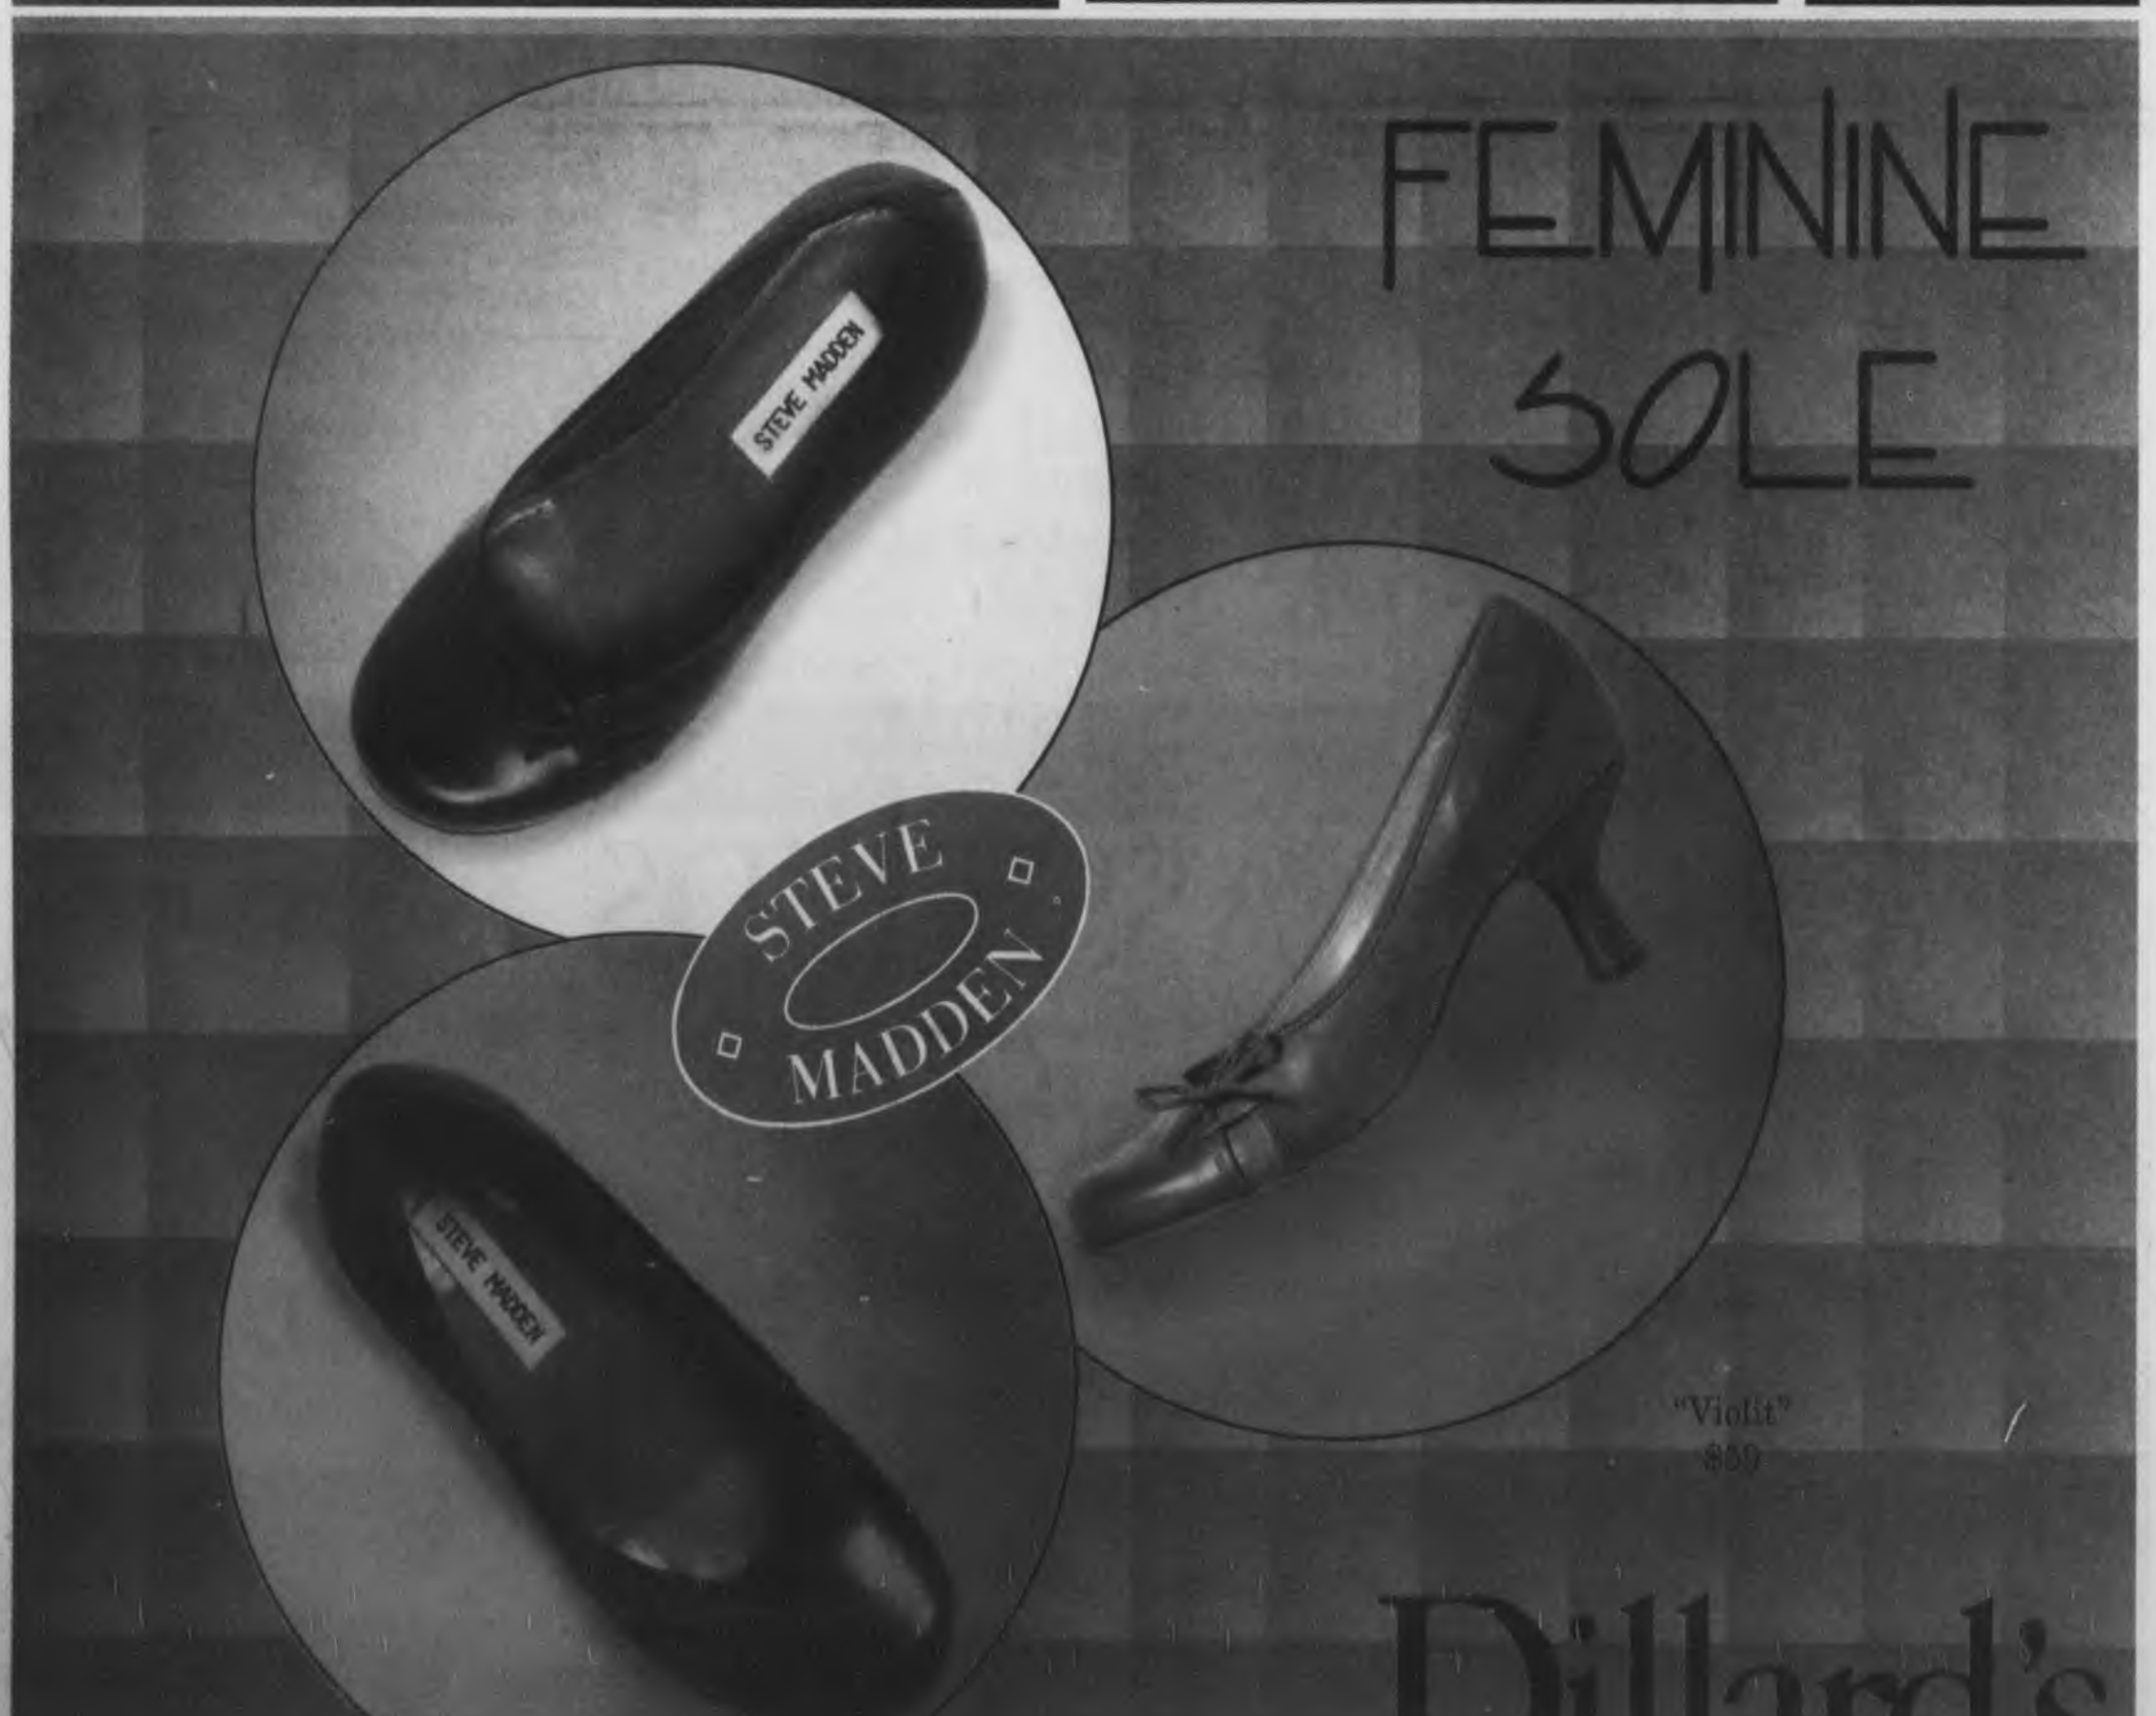
Johnson said.

John Streeter, director of information systems, said the change will replace the use of Social Security numbers with the other number on ID cards.

Streeter said the change will help decipher who uses the ID card to obtain Social Security numbers as a primary source.

"There is little other impact beyond the change on the card. It is a plus for us because we will get to determine who uses Social Security numbers," Streeter said.

The changes to cards will only affect the departments that might need Social Security numbers for services and the departments will have to get the numbers another way, Streeter said.



"It doesn't really affect much now. It's just to get numbers off the cards because it is mandatory," Streeter said.

Wildcats look to snap 28-game skid against Jayhawks

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Fred Peete drives to the basket against a player University of Colorado Saturday. The Wildcats look to beat the University of Kansas for the first time at Bramlage Coliseum when the two teams square off at 8 tonight.

Is this the year?

Since the 2004-05 season began, this is the question many K-State basketball fans have been asking about tonight's match up with instate rival Kansas.

As it stands, the Wildcats (13-6, 3-5) have lost 28 straight games, including all 16 games at Bramlage Coliseum, to the No. 3-ranked Jayhawks (18-1, 8-0).

The talk of a possible upset over the Jayhawks began as the Wildcats jumped out to an early 10-1 record during the non-conference season, their best start since the 1993-94 season, but K-State comes into the game on a two-game losing streak after losing to Colorado 70-60, Feb. 5.

"If we would have got this 'W' it would have been great momentum going into this next game because that (Kansas) is a good Big 12 team," sophomore guard Lance Harris said.

K-State squandered a 10-point first half lead against the Buffaloes, putting them two games below .500 through the first eight games of the conference season.

The Jayhawks head into the 255th all-time meeting with the Wildcats riding a four-game winning streak, including a 90-65 thrashing over then No. 16 Texas, and having not lost in Manhattan since 1983.

Coach Jim Wooldridge, who is 0-9 in his career versus Kansas, said the Wildcats can't shy away from "The Streak."

"We are going to hit it head on," Wooldridge said. "You can't hide from it and we will use it as a motivating factor."

Since losing their first game of the season to Villanova Jan. 22, the Jayhawks are averaging 82 points per game, while giving up only 64 points per game.

Individually, Kansas is led by seniors Wayne Simien and Keith Langford. Simien is second in the Big 12 in scoring with 18 points per game and leads the league in rebounds, averaging 10.7 rebounds per game. Langford is averaging 14.7 points per game and is shooting 37 percent from the three-point line.

"They are a good basketball team, just like everyone else in the Big 12," said senior forward Jeremiah Massey, who is fifth in the conference in scoring, averaging 17.3 points per game. "It's going to take for us to play our kind of basketball. We have to come out and play hard-nosed basketball."

In their last five games against Kansas, the Wildcats have lost by an average of 16 points, but have only lost the last two games by an average of seven points.

Harris said this year's team is equipped to handle the Jayhawks.

"We have more talent and our players are a lot more aggressive, so I think we have a good chance," Harris said.

KU coach Bill Self said K-State's three-point shooting, which is third in the conference, could pose a problem for the Jayhawks.

"I think they are much improved, certainly they have shot the ball great," Self said. "They are shooting over 40 percent from behind the arc in conference play as well as the whole season. I think (Wooldridge) has done a great job."

Sophomore guard Cartier Martin has been the most potent three-point shooter for the Wildcats, hitting 50 percent of his three-point shots. Harris has also been consistent from beyond the three-point line making 41 percent of his shots.

Although a win over the rival Jayhawks would be big, Harris said the game means more because of the Wildcats' win-loss record.

"It's more than just than the state rival thing," Harris said. "We have to come out and get a win because our backs are against the wall."

– Junior forward Marques Hayden is unlikely to play tonight as he has not practiced this week, due to persistent migraine headaches, Wooldridge said.

The losing streak will end tonight

MICHAEL ASHFORD

K-State fans, I am calling it, right here, right now – our Wildcats will end the years of misery and upset the Kansas Jayhawks tonight.

If you are even reading this sentence, you have not blown me off as a complete loony, but you probably are thinking I must have lost some section of my brain after making such a claim.

But I assure you I am in the sanest of minds.

I would now like to go over some reasons why K-State will end KU's streak of 28 straight wins against our Wildcats.

Excuse me while I put on my purple-tinted glasses; they're prescription.

1. While the Jayhawks have Wayne Simien, the Wildcats have Jeremiah Massey.

Simien may be the All-American, but frankly, Massey is quite a player himself.

Take a look at the stats; these two match up well.

Simien averages 18.0 points per game. Massey is not far behind at 17.3.

Massey owns a better free-throw percentage at .808, while Simien falls in at .750.

Simien pulls down 10.7 rebounds per game to Massey's 6.4, but Massey comes away with more steals each game.

It will be a monster battle down low between these two. Both will get their points and each will make it a hard and physical game for the other.

This matchup may be a draw when it is all said and done, which is good news for K-State.

2. K-State is a better free throw shooting team.

Provided the refs don't have it out for the Wildcats like every other time these two teams meet, the game could be decided on free throws, or more importantly, on made free throws.

K-State has been solid in the free throw department this year, as it ranks fourth in the conference with a 69.4 percent free throw average.

KU, on the other hand, sits at ninth, as it has hit 65.9 percent of its charity tosses.

While the difference may not look all that great, in a sport where the chance to win or lose is often decided on making free throws down the stretch, this could come up huge tonight.

If it does come to this, the Wildcats hold the advantage.

3. K-State is the better three-point shooting team.

All you has to do is look at KU's game against Villanova and you will see why three-point baskets are crucial.

Villanova was a better three-point shooting team than KU and, when you get right down to it, K-State is also better than the Jayhawks in this area.

Sure, you might say that K-State has only attempted 273 threes to KU's 341 and that is the reason for KU's lower percentage from behind the arc.

Then I would say it has more to do with the quality of those shots than the quantity.

K-State has shown the ability to be very patient on offense this year and that has produced some wide open shots for Cartier Martin, Lance Harris and Fred Peete to knock down big-time threes.

I will take K-State's patience with the three-ball any day over KU's "chuck it and run" method.

4. The game is at Bramlage Coliseum.

So what if K-State has never beaten KU in Bramlage?

All streaks must come to an end.

The Wildcats will be ready to get the rotten taste of Saturday's loss to Colorado out of their mouths and with a sold-out arena, they should be plenty ready to take down the Jayhawks.

So there you have it, one man's humble opinion of how tonight's game will be won – by the Wildcats, that is.

I stand to take a lot of grief for this article before the game, and I hate the taste of crow, so do me a favor, K-State and send the Jayhawks back to Larryville with a loss.

To all the students – I'll see you on the court after the game.

Former greats look back on days of Ahearn, Kansas rivalry

Barrett, Boozer, Parr optimistic about Wildcats' future success

K-State All-Americans Ernie Barrett, Jack Parr and Bob Boozer were honored at halftime of Saturday's men's basketball game with the retirement of their jerseys.

Lindsey Bauman
COLLEGIAN

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For former Wildcat great Bob Boozer, it was a simple answer.

Just hours before having his jersey raised to the rafters in Bramlage Coliseum Saturday, Boozer was asked what made Ahearn Field House – K-State basketball's home from 1950-1988 and his home during the late 1950s – so special.

"You didn't come and win there," the former two-time All-American said. "A visiting team did not win at Ahearn. And if you did, it was somewhat fortunate."

Indeed, it was nearly impossible for visiting teams to come out of Manhattan with a win in those days. The Wildcats accumulated a 377-86 (.814) all-time record in Ahearn, including six undefeated seasons at home.

But since the 1988-89 season, things have changed at K-State's new home.

Though the Wildcats still have found success – a 186-74 record and .715 winning percentage – in Bramlage, it has fallen short of the standard set at "the Old Barn."

Boozer said he feels the atmosphere at Bramlage is "sterile" and lacks the intensity of Ahearn.

"The crowd noise can pep you up and get you moving when your bones are somewhat aching and are kind of tired and worn down a little bit," Boozer said. "I remember nothing but pleasant things about Ahearn. I just don't feel as though that's transferred over to Bramlage - yet."

Many observers cite the Wildcats' Bramlage record against rival Kansas as evidence of the drop-off since the days at Ahearn. K-State is 0-16 against tonight's opponent at home since the opening of Bramlage.

That winless streak is part of a home drought against the Jayhawks that dates back to Jan. 29, 1983. Overall, Kansas has won 28 in a row against the Wildcats, with K-State's last win coming in Lawrence in 1994.

Boozer, along with Jack Parr and Ernie Barrett – the other former men's basketball players to be the first to have their jerseys retired – recalled fond memories of their rivalry against Kansas during their playing days.

Barrett, who led the Wildcats to the NCAA Championship Game in the 1950-51 season, said Kansas has been able to maintain a higher level of play since his days as a Wildcat.

But the streak could be in jeopardy, he said.

"I think KU is certainly improved to the point that they've had the great consistency we haven't been able to sustain," Barrett said. "It'll be a big ballgame, and we'll break that string one of these years. Maybe it'll be this year. Who knows?"

"I remember nothing but pleasant things about Ahearn. I just don't feel as though that's transferred over to Bramlage — yet."

Bob Boozer
FORMER WILDCAT BASKETBALL PLAYER

Optimism and high praise were a theme as the legends talked of KU, the rivalry and the direction of the K-State men's basketball program under current Coach Jim Wooldridge prior to the Wildcats' loss to Colorado.

Parr, an All-America center for the Wildcats in the late 1950s, said Wooldridge has the Wildcats progressing.

"I think that the fan support has been increasing considerably for Coach Jim Wooldridge's program and it will continue to do so," Parr said. "I think he's doing a great job, and I'm really proud of what he does and the way he does what he does. His methods and his approach are to be applauded."

Boozer agreed.

"I think an awful lot of Wooldridge," Boozer said. "I think he's a good coach and he's got them on the right track, and I think it won't be long before K-State is back up where they should be."

A win tonight against No. 3 Kansas would be Wooldridge's first in 10 tries and would undoubtedly go a long way toward moving the program forward and establishing Bramlage as a feared place to play.

"Turnabout is ready," Parr said. "That's something that we look forward to and it's going to happen."

Wildcats take week off before facing OU

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a win over Oklahoma State, the K-State women's basketball team is in the middle of a week off from action–one it will use to prepare for a road trip to Oklahoma.

The Sooners (12-8, 4-5) knocked K-State out of the Big 12 Conference tournament last year, something the No. 16 Wildcats (17-4, 8-2) haven't forgotten.

Even though the loss last year is fresh in everyone's mind, senior Megan Mahoney doesn't think focusing on revenge is the way to come into the game.

"That's always in the back of your mind," she said. "Either way, it's another opportunity to have a Big 12 game. They're a great team, especially at home. We just have to be focused and prepared and not simply think about it as revenge, but really focus on what we need to do."

Even though it is a week off, the Wildcats are anticipating a tough week preparing for a talented Oklahoma team.

Senior Kendra Wecker said the week won't be a walk in the park.

"Like coach said in the locker room, it is not going to be an easy week," she said. "We have to get ready for Oklahoma. They are playing well."

The Sooners have posted a 4-5 record in the Big 12 and four games over .500 with a record of 12-8. Regardless of the opponent's history, life on the road in the Big 12 is tough, and the Wildcats are approaching this matchup seriously.

"Oklahoma is going to be a real tough team, just like all the other teams we've faced on the road," sophomore guard Claire Coggins said. "We're just really going to have to come out real aggressive and take it to them."

As for how to prepare for the Sooners, Mahoney and other Wildcats see some room for improvement on the boards.

"We have to take care of the ball and execute on offense," Mahoney said. "Boards are going to be big for us. You can't be a one shot and out team, especially on the road. You have to board the ball and get your defense to spark the offense. Our coaches are going to have us doing a lot of boxing out and defensive stuff and they will keep this week of practice intense."

Coggins echoed Mahoney's sentiment.

"Definitely rebounding more," Coggins said of what the Wildcats need to work on. "We're all capable of it, but we have to get it in our minds that we have to get the ball. Other than that, playing together. This week will be good for us to just refocus."

Shana Wheeler struggles to get by a Oklahoma State defender during the second half Saturday. The women have the week off, but will return to action Sunday at Oklahoma.

Students brave cold, lines to get tickets, seats

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students started the evening in the cold and watched as the men's basketball team failed to get hot enough to beat KU on Wednesday.

"It's freezing," Andy Blake, sophomore in business, said as he waited for the doors to open before the game.

Blake and several of his friends stood huddled together outside Bramlage Coliseum before to get general admission seats among the sell-out crowd.

K-State lost the game 74-65.

"I waited here since 6 a.m. because I'm a hardcore K-State fan," Michelle Radatz, senior in elementary education, said. "It is in my blood."

When the doors opened an hour prior to the 8 p.m. tip off, the crowd for the student general admission reached from the southeast entry to the restrooms at the football stadium.

The crowd surged forward as students went to claim their seats. But among the mass of purple were spots of red and blue.

"I have been a KU fan since I was little," Nicole Kramer, sophomore in accounting, said. "I get to give my K-State friends a

Board of Education reviews evolution decision

By Aaron Estabrook
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A confrontation with the conservative-controlled State Board of Education has been brewing since this past January.

In 1999, the board approved standards that removed most references to evolution, leading to international criticism. Two years later, after an election, a new board majority approved the current evolution-friendly standards. The board's makeup changed again this January, when a 6-to-4 majority of conservatives took control.

This shift in the board's composition has once again brought the evolution debate to the forefront. Kathy Martin, a new board member, said there is a certain controversy because of board members alone.

"A minority of conservatives within the review committee wanted to make changes to allow students to discuss and investigate all theories relating to science," Martin said.

Social Security privatization plan could mean less security for future benefits

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Reforming the Social Security could mean less security for those receiving benefits.

In his State of the Union address last week, President Bush focused on Social Security reform more than any other domestic issue.

Supporters of the plan use the term "personal accounts" to describe the proposed plan; those who oppose the idea have adopted the term "private accounts."

Joseph Aistrup, head of the department of political science, said the problem with Bush's reform is that it does not guarantee benefits upon retirement like Social Security does now.

"There's assurity there," he said. "With private or personal accounts, there is no guaranteed benefit."

Currently, Social Security works by taking a portion of each worker's paycheck. The portion taken is then paid out to retired workers.

The problem with this, Bush said, is that the system is headed towards bankruptcy.

"Our society has changed in ways the founders of Social Security could not have foreseen," Bush said. "In today's world, people are living longer and therefore drawing benefits longer, and those benefits are scheduled to rise dramatically over the next few decades."

This results in an increased number of retirees.

According to the Social Security Web site, www.socialsecurity.gov, in 1950, the ratio of workers to retired workers was 16-to-1; today it has fallen to 3.3-to-1, and in 40 years is expected to be 2-to-1.

Medicare next to fix
President Bush said Wednesday that fixing Medicare is next on the government's to-do list, because the health care plan is facing financial stress with the retirements of baby boomers. New estimates show that the Medicare prescription drug benefit will cost taxpayers $724 billion over its first full 10 years.

Burns, Groene file for president, vice president

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Michael Burns, senior in agricultural education, and Grant Groene, junior in agronomy, are announcing their candidacy for student body president and vice president. The two will address contracted tuition rates, transcript fees and online teacher evaluations. Two other presidential tickets have filed for the Student Governing Association elections. The filing deadline is 4 p.m. Feb. 18 in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union.

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's "Your Voice, Your Choice" for one student body president and vice president candidate pair this March.

Michael Burns, senior in agricultural education, and Grant Groene, senior in agronomy, filed to run for president and vice president Wednesday.

Burns is in his second year as a student senator and is currently serving as the Student Governing Association privilege fee chair.

Groene has served as president of Delta Chi and has worked on Interfraternity Council.

"Our experience is something Grant and I bring to the table," Burns said.

"We have the experience to connect to the university, the Board of Regents and to state legislators."

Burns and Groene are campaigning on a four-issue platform that includes a contracted tuition rate, a restructured service fee, online teacher evaluations and graduate student teacher workshops.

ELECTIONS 2005

The election filing deadline for Student Governing Association positions is 4 p.m. Feb. 18.

The first, a contracted tuition rate, would prevent incoming K-State students from facing tuition increases current students face, Burns said.

"Students would come to K-State and as a freshman, they would be locked into a per-hour tuition rate," he said.

Burns and Groene would also look at how to apply the contracted tuition rate to current students.

The restructured service fee the pair proposes would combine the $8 transcript fee, the $15 graduation fee and the annual $30 fee to use Career and Employment Services.

"By charging 50 cents per credit hour, we could give students free transcripts during and after college, give them free use of Career and Employment Services for their entire college career as well as possibly eliminate the $15 graduation fee," Burns said. "Under a restructured service fee, we would get students more for less."

The third tenet of the duo's platform is online teacher evaluations through the Wildcat Information Network that would be available by fall 2005.

"It would provide students a chance to log on and evaluate a class or to see if a class will fit their needs or if they'll like the professor," Groene said.

This system would only be available to students and would not replace teacher evaluations completed at the end of a course for use by department heads and teachers themselves.

The graduate student teacher workshops Burns and Groene propose would introduce new teaching methods and give graduate teaching assistants the opportunity to enhance their classroom skills.

The workshops, something graduate students have wanted for a while, would benefit undergraduate students as well.

"The better teachers they have, the more they'll get out of the class," Groene said.

"It's a win-win situation for graduate and undergraduate students."

Burns and Groene said their leadership abilities and experience are what set them apart from other candidates.

"Grant and I believe we are the candidates that can continue the strong tradition of leadership that presidents and vice presidents have brought in the past," Burns said.

News update

TO THE POINT

Academics need to explore gender gaps

Harvard University's President Lawrence Summers made comments infuriating women across the country when he suggested men might be more capable of math and science than women.

He suggested discrimination played less of a role in women's lack of success in science fields, but instead could be attributed to an innate differences in genders.

Summers' comments were out of line considering he was speaking at an economic conference – one in which several women walked out of after hearing his remarks.

However, his comments should not be discredited just because they were spoken in an inappropriate setting.

The comments should be taken only as a call for further academic inquiry.

Yes, social factors do occasionally make it harder for women to succeed in certain fields.

Women are still socialized to some degree that they can't work and properly take care of their family.

However, there is a great possibility that biological factors have an effect on women's aptitude for science and math.

It's easier to believe that we are all the same than to admit our differences.

But we expect academics and scientists to explore all questions, even those that don't produce comfortable answers.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Journalistic responsibility

Collegian wrong to publish drinking games information

AARON DUNCAN

During my time at the Collegian, I have felt that the paper has been presented in a professional manner. I was pleased to see Tuesday's article about victims living with rape, a topic that needs more discussion on college campuses. As pleased as I was with Tuesday's article, I was equally disappointed with Monday's piece about drinking games.

The article took a lighthearted looks at a serious problem. USA TODAY reported on October 7, 2004, that each year 1,400 college students die as a result of binge drinking. Binge drinking takes place any time a person consumes five or more drinks in a row. The article in the aforementioned Collegian described games that encourage just such behavior.

Take, for example, the game "Edward 40-hands." The article said, "Players have one 40-ounce beverage duct taped to each hand. The player must finish both drinks before they are allowed to remove the bottles from their hands." Two 40-once beverages equals the consumption of 80 ounces of alcohol – roughly seven drinks.

Other games discussed in the article like "Circle of Death" and "Screw the Dealer" also require massive consumption of alcohol. The article read like a how-to guide on binge drinking.

The article also included quotes from several campus freshmen. Most first year students are underage, and I find it in poor taste to quote them exalting the virtues of drinking. A large part of the Collegian's readership is under the age of 21. The article contained no condemnation of underage or binge drinking, but gave the distinct impression it is cool and that everybody does it.

The article stated that drinking games are popular among college students and are common at college parties. It even said, "Sitting and sipping on a drink is a nice way to experience a party, but drinking games can make the night more exciting." Students said drinking heavily was fun and better than drinking in moderation and that "drinking games bring a good 'happiness aura' to the party."

The article did not discuss the disastrous effects that could occur from participation in such a game. The Canadian Newswire of August 24, 2004, noted that Canada has embarked on a massive campaign against drinking games after two young men died in Montreal while taking part in one. The Rocky Mountain News reported on September 25, 2004, that a freshman at the University of Colorado and a sophomore at Colorado State University died after participating in drinking games at a party.

When I entered the phrase "drinking games and college" in the Lexis-Nexis database, I found 125 articles on the topic written in the past nine months. Only one article didn't report the dangers of binge drinking and the threat these games pose: "Students say drinking games spice up partying" from the Kansas State Collegian.

The article's only discussion of moderation when drinking came in this statement: "Moderation should be used with all of these games to ensure that you don't overdo it – no one wants to be that person who everyone else at the party has to make sure doesn't pass out in the gutter. But the point of these games is, overall, to have fun." That's hardly a seething indictment of binge drinking.

Maybe I've gotten old and take things too seriously. Maybe I'm the only one who sees a problem with a college newspaper advising students on the best ways to get drunk. Maybe I'm the only one who has had a close friend nearly die after playing a drinking game. I hope it doesn't take a tragedy on K-State's campus before we all take binge drinking more seriously.

Newspaper's job is to serve its readers, not be moral police

JAMES HURLA

One of a newspaper's foremost responsibilities is to serve its readers.

Journalists should not dilute the truth to keep from rocking the boat; instead, sometimes they have to call things like they see them.

College students – including those under 21 – drink alcohol.

Not surprisingly, lots of those people make games of it.

Consuming excess alcohol can be dangerous, and, by the way, is incredibly stupid. Despite education in schools and in the news media, some people choose to drink in excess and pay dearly for these choices.

But it is not the Collegian's job to serve as the campus moral police. An editor or writer saw the potential to write a story that would serve the readers' interests, and the story was written.

Journalistically, the story was less than spectacular. Parts were editorialized, and it's easy to see why Aaron Duncan said it appeared the writer was encouraging drinking.

However, that does not diffuse the ideas behind the story.

The fact that freshmen are included in the story shows readers that – gasp! – some freshmen drink. Anyone who believed otherwise deserved to be shocked into reality.

Duncan seemed concerned that the article "contained no condemnation of underage or binge drinking."

A good newspaper article will contain no condemnation of any illegal act. The news media should not be judge, jury and executioner. Instead, the media should inform audiences about what's going on in the world and let audiences make their own decisions.

If everyone heeded my advice because I can print it in a newspaper, the world would be much better off. However, even if I wanted to tell everyone how to act, I doubt it would have much of an effect.

Duncan's original research involving Lexis-Nexis yielded only one article about college drinking games that did not include the dangers of binge drinking, which was the Collegian article in question.

I used Google, the lazy man's database, and four of the six listed stories included nothing about the dangers of binge drinking.

The same Lexis-Nexis search Duncan used returned a story from the New Orleans Times-Picayune about the rules for a presidential debate drinking game. I found nothing about the dangers of binge drinking or drinking games.

The Times-Picayune story was the No. 2 result.

I am not a shameless supporter of the Collegian or of the news media in general. Frankly, both do things that, at times, turn my stomach.

But Duncan's criticism would be more effective as commentary on the news media's role rather than an attack on how the Collegian covered one particular issue.

Only days before the how-to guide on drinking games, the Collegian ran an article about the dangers of underage drinking.

A simple search on the Collegian's Web site returns 60 results for "binge drinking." Most of them contain information about education and awareness of the dangers of binge drinking.

The Collegian found just another way to serve part of its readership.

Yeah, idiots: that was the best halftime show I've ever seen. Paul McCartney kicks the crap out of Janet Jackson, Justin Timberlake or even some gangster rapper.

Beatles rule.

Scott Seel: $17.50 is way too much money for the crap you turn out every week.

My roommate draws the coolest pictures for the Collegian. Ever.

I love the new Gumby's ad. It's hot. Don't change it.

Thanks K-State. Only about half my students showed up to class, and they all looked like snowmen with all the snow all over 'em.

I thought that creepy groundhog said that winter was over.

Come on everyone, keep up those snow dances. I don't wanna go to class tomorrow.

When you walk with your mouth open in weather like this, it's like getting a free slushie.

Those bunnies I saw in Aggieville on Friday night were hot. I loved them.

We better get a snow day for this.

I'm just sitting in my warm SUV fueled by Iraqi oil, laughing at the liberals walking to class.

I just wanted to say to the City of Manhattan that there's this thing called the Weather Channel, and they tell you when it's gonna snow so you can salt the roads a little earlier.

As Gilbert Godfrey says, "I've never understood the significance of a religious holiday where you put a cigarette out on your forehead."

It's pretty messed up when the Riley County Police Department isn't responding to car accidents, but K-State is still having school.

Truth about government budget being hidden

Editor,

President Bush's latest budget is in, being reported as a $427 billion deficit when it is really $627 billion (because we are not only spending $427 billion more than we are taking in, we are also borrowing this year's $200 billion surplus from the Social Security Trust Fund).

It's actually even more than $627 billion, because the budget doesn't fully include the cost of the war in Iraq, lately costing $5 billion a month. Nor does it include the hit we would take servicing our $8 trillion debt if interest rates rose (An extra 1 percent may not seem like much, but on $8 trillion, it costs $80 billion).

So maybe it's a $700 billion deficit. Or $800 billion if we get unlucky.

Or $900 billion if we start borrowing to fund privatized Social Security accounts.

It's billed as a tough, $2.5 trillion budget. Standing firm, not one penny of the huge tax-cuts-for-the-rich will be rolled back. Tapping the rich is not an option. But 96 percent of the funding for Clinton's 100,000 extra cops on the beat is being cut, along with funding for Head Start for the kids and Medicaid for the poor.

Programs benefiting low-income citizens are destined to bear almost half of the cuts.

Submission does not equal consensual sex

Editor,

In light of the Collegian's moving story about sexual assault, we wanted to alert K-State students about the reality of this crime, as it affects college men and women across the country. Since 80 to 90 percent of sexual assaults are committed by acquaintances, what women must do to protect themselves is different than what one does to lower the risk of rape by a stranger (self-defense, not walking alone, locking doors, never leaving windows open to a warm breeze on a summer night...).

Rapists are not a particular ethnic, racial or cultural group. Men who rape acquaintances generally do have access to consensual sex. Some college students commit sexual assault due to ignorance of the law concerning consent.

The usual college rape occurs when a male student does not receive valid, informed consent from a female student in a social situation. Legal, informed consent 1) is freely, mindfully and actively given; 2) may be limited to one form or level of sexual activity; 3) means that two people agree to do the same thing, at the same time, in the same way with each other. Someone who is intoxicated cannot give legal consent! Submission does not equal consent! The rules of legal consent are quite clear and are outlined in the K-State Policy Prohibiting Sexual Violence, which can be read at http://www.ksu.edu/studentlife/SexPolicy.html.

Some rapists target females over a period of hours, days, weeks or months. These types of individuals may seem very charming and likable as they gain the target's trust. This type of rapist does not respect a woman's right over herself and, acting selfishly in order to enhance feelings of control and power over others, forces his will on another and steals from them what they have not given freely.

The majority of acquaintance rapes are committed by men who will continue to assault women. Alcohol and drugs are frequently involved. Here in Kansas, as across the rest of the country, college men are using so called "date-rape drugs" to incapacitate women. To find out more about these drugs, sexual assault, the effects of being victimized and ways to help prevent violence, check out the Women's Center Web site at www.k-state.edu/womenscenter/.

No woman, by being careful enough, can eliminate the chance of being assaulted. If you completely stop socializing, never eat or drink outside your own kitchen, never attend a party or have a private conversation – if you never even leave your house, you still are not free of risk.

That is why men and women are joining together at K-State and on campuses around the country to address this sad and appalling issue. Men are affected by rape in three ways: through the pain their own loved ones – friends, sisters and girlfriends – endure; as victims of assault (one in 10 men will be victimized sexually through his lifespan); and in being part of a culture of selfish, dehumanizing violence.

It is time for men of integrity and honor to be leaders in urging all men to use their strength not for hurting, but for empowering others – to speak of women with respect and thus manifest respect for themselves.

To be part of nonviolent, authentic campus culture which values each person's right to personal sovereignty requires women and men to speak up and make the existing violence visible.

Columnist misinformed about use of manure; needs to research organic, natural fertilizers

Editor,

I have some comments on the article written by Julia Stoskopf on Wednesday.

I think that Julia should do more research before writing an article that she knows little or nothing about. I don't know if growing up on a farm qualifies you for manure disposal, but I sure hope not.

The suggestions made by Julia are ill-based and ill-informed. I hope that her article was just for fun because she wanted to write about a "Poop Palace."

One thing Julia should know about is organic fertilizers. Organic means all-natural. That means if you want the cattle manure to be organic, the cattle must be organic.

I don't know of many 12,000-cattle feedlots that are all organic.

Secondly, I don't think that "cost of converting your operation" would be simple or cost effective. Shoveling 2,000 tons – 4 million pounds – of manure by hand is not easy or cost effective.

Considering there are 25 pounds of manure in a bag, that is still 160,000 bags of inorganic manure that you have to sell. It might take more than some high school kids working after school to get the job done.

It also might take more than a sign to sell 160,000 bags of fertilizer. Also, I wonder if Julia thinks that Mr. Davidson is stupid. If he could sell a waste from his operation, don't you think he would?

I also seriously doubt that Mr. Davidson just keeps the manure because he likes the smell.

Overall, I thought her article was based on the fact that she wanted to write about manure. If she chooses to write about it again, she should consult a "crap combustion expert" before her next article is published. Thank you for your time.

Privacy must prevail over abortion debate

Editor,

I agree with what Annie Lewis said about more tolerance being needed toward abortion clinics and the women who use them. Violence, threats and name-calling aren't the most conducive things to a progressive society.

However, when presenting views on abortion, we must realize that the debate over abortion actually goes back several thousand years and is still unchanged today. While no conclusion to the ongoing discourse on abortion is likely to be reached, care should be used in the facts that get presented. If not, the situation gets grossly misrepresented.

Lewis made the claim that there are more lives claimed by abortion each year than both world wars combined. Provided that an abortion could be considered a loss of life, the statement is still not true. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported only 857,475 legal abortions in the United States in 2002. That is a far cry from the 55 million (give or take a few) people who lost their lives during World War II alone. She also claims that an abortion could have prevented the birth of a great president or scientist. This is an illogical stance, as it could have also prevented the birth of the next Hitler or Kenny G.

Aside from presenting fallacious numbers to make abortion appear more prevalent than it really is, what many people should keep in mind is why abortion is legal today.

It has very little to do with whether life truly begins at conception, or whether women should have a fundamental right as to what they do with their bodies (U.S. laws have a long-standing precedent on what both men and women can or cannot do with their bodies, i.e. laws against drugs, prostitution etc.).

What it does entail is the constitutionally guaranteed right to privacy (reference first, fourth, fifth, ninth and 14th amendments) concerning certain professions and their clients. It is this right to privacy which must be universally defended, and it is upon this right that Roe v. Wade was adjudicated.

For those of us who insist on continuing a debate that is several millennia old, I say go for it. At least leave the propaganda and seditious remarks aside and discuss the factual issues. However, no matter how long the debate continues, we must recognize that, in our American society, the right to privacy is what must prevail.

It is what affords us many of the freedoms we enjoy as a society. As long as privacy is a dominating force in civil rights, we must accept that what transpires between a woman and her doctor is none of our (expletive deleted) business.

Losing again

Cats falls to KU in 29th straight series loss

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats did not go down easily, but at the end of the night, the scoreboard showed an all-too familiar result for Wildcat fans when Kansas comes to town.

KU wins.

Despite 20 points apiece from senior forward Jeremiah Massey and sophomore guard Fred Peete, the Wildcats (13-7, 3-6) fell 74-65 to the No. 3 Jayhawks on Wednesday.

The loss, in front of a sell-out crowd of 13,340 at Bramlage Coliseum, extended K-State's losing streak against Kansas to 29 games and kept the Jayhawks undefeated in Manhattan since 1983.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said it is always frustrating to lose, but the night was not a total negative.

"I think our guys played as hard as they could," Wooldridge said. "You're always disappointed when you lose, but I think we can take some things out of this game that we can build on."

Behind the efforts of Wayne Simien, J.R. Giddens and Keith Langford, the Jayhawks (19-1, 9-0) looked to be on the verge of a blowout, up 54-37 with 13:36 to play.

However, a 17-4 Wildcat run cut the lead to four with 4:32 remaining.

K-State would get no closer the rest of the way as a Giddens 3-pointer and six consecutive Kansas free throws all but sealed the game down the stretch.

Peete said the Wildcats' rally likely wore the team down in the final minutes.

"We thought we had a shot when we battled back," Peete said. "Us battling back probably took some of our momentum and took some of our energy."

The first half played out much like the second, with the Wildcats falling behind by double-digits, only to come back and fall again.

Kansas jumped out to a 16-5 lead on a short jumper by Sasha Kaun almost five minutes into the half.

Sparked by two Peete 3-pointers and another by sophomore guard Lance Harris, K-State tied the game 16-16 at the 11:09 mark, only to have the Jayhawks take a 35-25 lead into the half.

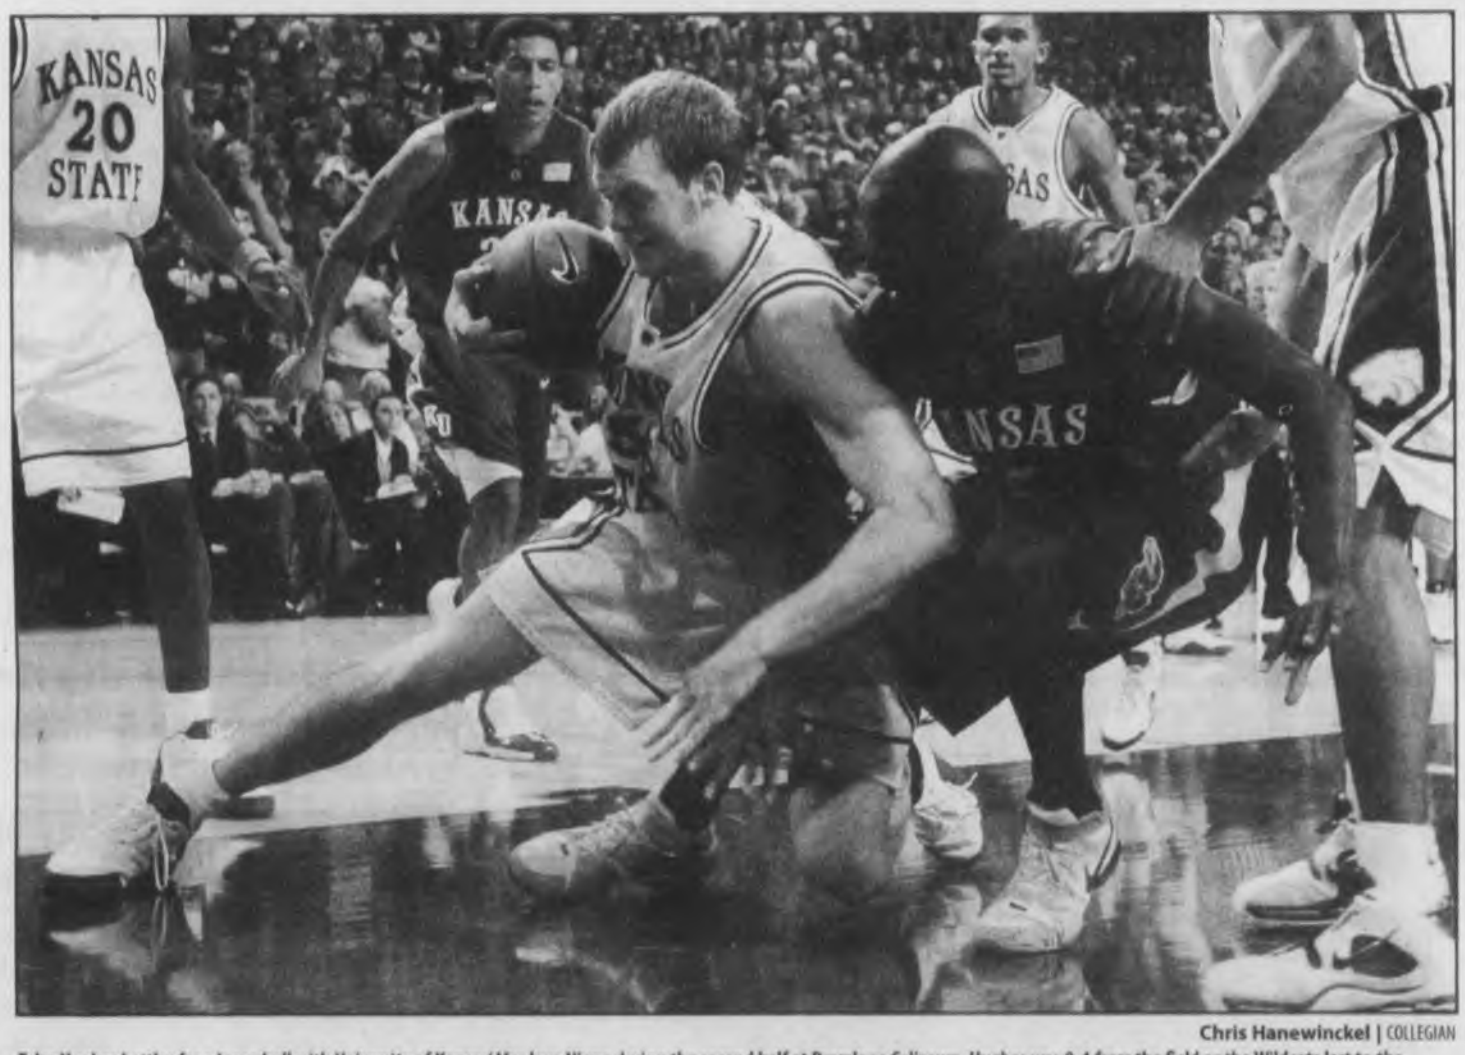
K-State struggled from the field in the first half, shooting just 33 percent.

"We started off slow again," Harris said. "First half we started off slow, second half we started off slow."

Though the Wildcats hit 9-of-20 three's, the team shot 38 percent overall.

K-State's three-game losing streak marks its longest of the season.

For Harris, that current skid carries more importance than the slide against the Jayhawks.



"This game was bigger than just the Kansas and Kansas State rivalry game," Harris said. "We had to get a 'W.'"

Massey helps cut 17-point KU lead

Another slow start and defensive double-teams couldn't keep senior forward Jeremiah Massey from shining in the second half of Wednesday's 74-65 loss to No. 3 Kansas.

After shooting just 2-of-9 from the floor and scoring five points in the first half, the 6-foot-7 senior helped K-State (13-7, 3-6) cut a 17-point Kansas (19-1, 9-0) lead to four with less than five minutes left to play.

"In the first half, his shots weren't falling and Jeremiah is more a second half player," sophomore guard Fred Peete said. "Once we got down and had to battle back, he took it upon himself to concentrate harder on shots and once we got it into the post we knew would finish it."

SPORTS ONLINE
Nathan Ryerson, a KU fan, predicts another K-State loss in Lawrence.

Massey scored 15 of his 20 points in the second half on 4-of-7 shooting.

Throughout the first half, coach Jim Wooldridge said Massey had open looks, but the bounces were not going his way.

"A couple of shots to begin with, he forced up there, but other than that he just had some looks that didn't go in," Wooldridge said.

After the slow start, Massey asserted himself in the post and connected on 7-of-10 from the free-throw line, after only attempting one in the previous 20 minutes of the game.

"He was doing everything he could to make something happen," Wooldridge said. "He kept being pro-active and he really fought and fought it hard."

Massey's biggest three points came with just more than five minutes to play.

The Detroit native stepped in front of a pass by Kansas' Aaron Miles and took it the other way, swooping under the right side of the basket for a reverse layup as he was fouled by Miles.

After a timeout, Massey drained the free-throw, cutting the lead to 58-52 and sending the crowd into a frenzy.

Sophomore guard Cartier Martin would cut the lead to four with a layup 39 second later.

Sophomore guard Lance Harris said Massey's leadership sparked K-State.

"In the second half, he definitely became a leader – hitting the open guys, making layups and knocking down free-throws," Harris said. "Jeremiah stepped it up the second half."

Baseball team starts season today against Northwestern

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For any team, the first year of a transition can be difficult. The baseball team showed glimpses of success last season, but it peaked at the wrong time.

The Wildcats are coming off a season last year in which they started 19-6, earned the team's first-ever national ranking at No. 30 to enter Big 12 play, and finished the season at a disappointing 26-30.

Kicking off this season for the Wildcats will be the Oakland A's Phoenix Invitational in Phoenix.

The tournament features a lineup of several talented teams, which will give the Wildcats an early chance to experience some good competition heading into the regular season.

Steve Murphy, junior outfielder and All-Big 12 selection last year, said the team is hoping to start the season with the same success as last year, but peak at the end of the season instead of the middle.

"We are looking to start off strong and carry that strength throughout the entire season," Murphy said. "We peaked in the middle of the season last year, and we want to stay strong going into Big 12 this season."

Murphy said the Wildcats are better this year than they were last year.

"We are a better team, and I feel that we are focused on what we want to accomplish this season," Murphy said.

The Wildcats start the season today, facing Northwestern University at 8 p.m.

On Friday and Sunday, the Cats face Portland, a team they've never played before.

"Portland is a very young team," Brad Hill, second-year head coach, said. "We don't know much about them yet, but we will find out this weekend."

A strong Oregon State team will face the Wildcats in the invitational at 4 p.m. on Saturday.

Oregon State started the season 3-1, recently knocking off No. 9 Arizona State 12-6.

"They (Oregon State) look very strong, especially after beating Arizona State," Hill said. "They pitched extremely well."

Hill said his team members want to get out on the field and prove themselves.

"The kids are hungry to better themselves," Hill said. "We want this tournament to help us to get confidence in ourselves and our abilities as a team. We get to run all our pitchers out and put them into game situations."

Hill said the team is ahead of where they were last year, and having players with two years in his system makes the team that much more competitive.

Entering their 106th season of baseball, the Wildcats are 64-41 all-time in season openers, and 7-4 in the last 11 years.

NFL | Chow hired as Titans' offensive coordinator

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Southern California assistant Norm Chow was hired as offensive coordinator of the Tennessee Titans on Wednesday after helping the Trojans win two consecutive national championships.

Chow

He was to be introduced at a morning news conference, Titans spokesman Robbie Bohren told The Associated Press.

Chow replaces Mike Heimerdinger, who was hired as the New York Jets' offensive coordinator last month. This is his first job in pro football after 32 seasons at BYU, North Carolina State and USC.

NFL | McNabb may have been sick during Super Bowl

PHILADELPHIA — Donovan McNabb was so ill in the fourth quarter of the Super Bowl that a Philadelphia Eagles teammate called one play in the huddle, center Hank Fraley told a TV station.

McNabb

"He fought to the end. He gave it his all," Fraley said on Comcast SportsNet in a show aired Monday night. "He could hardly call the plays — that's how exhausted he was trying to give it his all."

Eagles spokesman Derek Boyko said Tuesday that McNabb wasn't injured during Philadelphia's 24-21 loss to the New England Patriots. However, McNabb might have been feeling sick — he fought a cold earlier in the week.

CBB | Ex-Hawkeye Pierce charged with assault

WEST DES MOINES, Iowa — Former Iowa basketball star Pierre Pierce was charged with assault and burglary Wednesday, a week after he was thrown off the team.

Pierce

Pierce surrendered to police and was to appear in court later in the day on charges of first-degree burglary, two counts of domestic assault, assault with intent to commit sexual abuse, false imprisonment and criminal mischief.

His lawyer, Alfredo Parrish, said Wednesday that his client intends to plead not guilty.

Pierce, the team's leading scorer, was kicked off the team after police confirmed he was the subject of an investigation into a matter at the townhouse of a former girlfriend.

NBA | Olajuwon mosque gave money to terror groups

WASHINGTON — A mosque established and funded by basketball star Hakeem Olajuwon gave more than $80,000 to charities the government later determined to be fronts for the terror groups al-Qaeda and Hamas, according to financial records obtained by The Associated Press.

Olajuwon

Olajuwon told the AP he had not known of any links to terrorism when the donations were made, prior to the government's crackdown on the groups, and would not have given the money if he had known.

Federal law enforcement officials said they were not investigating Olajuwon, a 7-foot center born in Nigeria who played 17 seasons for the NBA's Houston Rockets before retiring in 2002.

NHL | Tuesday could be drop-dead date for NHL

The National Hockey League could cancel the season next week if a labor dispute with the players' association is not resolved, U.S. and Canadian newspapers reported Wednesday.

The league is expected to make, perhaps as early as Wednesday, one last attempt to initiate talks with the players' union, the Los Angeles Times and Toronto Star reported.

Neither the NHL nor the NHLPA was available for immediate comment.

Shaping things up

Cast members rehearse for their upcoming performance of "The Shape of Things" in Nichols Theatre. The performance runs at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday and Feb. 16-19.

Students can relate to campus plot

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For director and K-State alumnus Tim Aumiller, "The Shape of Things" is a small play about big ideas.

"This play has many layers. It's a play about many things. It asks questions about the subject of relationships and the parties involved in those relationships," Aumiller said.

"It examines the way that two people can experience one event in different ways."

"The Shape of Things" opens at 8 tonight in the Nichols Theater.

"The Shape of Things," written by playwright and filmmaker Neil Labute, is set on a college campus in a small town. Art student Evelyn, played by Debra Morland, graduate student in theater, becomes involved with a museum guard named Adam, played by Matt McCann, senior in theater.

During the progress of the relationship, Adam's friends begin to notice changes in his behavior and appearance.

Since graduating from the K-State theater department in 1994, Aumiller, who currently works as the Director of Training for Blue Man Group, has kept in touch with director of theater Kate Anderson.

"Kate was an inspirational instructor and in keeping in touch with her, I told her several years ago that I would be willing to direct a K-State theater production," Aumiller said.

Aumiller said that last April he was contacted about directing and submitted 10 play options to a committee.

"The committee then asked for my top three choices of plays to direct and finally I got to choose "The Shape of Things," Aumiller said.

After choosing a play, Aumiller came to K-State for auditions in September.

If you go

"The Shape of Things"

When: 8 p.m. tonight, Saturday and Feb. 16-19
Where: Nichols Theater
How much: $7 for students and seniors and $11 for general public. Tickets are available at the McCain Box Office or by calling 532-6425.

"I saw many talented people audition. During the auditions, I was looking for people who really could strike the characters," Aumiller said.

Debra Morland, who plays Evelyn, said there were challenges she faced with "The Shape of Things."

"Evelyn is a different character type than I usually play. I usually play the one dimensional Cinderella types, but this character really runs the gamut of emotions," Morland said.

Morland also noted that because "The Shape of Things" is an ensemble piece, she has to work with the other actors to help project her character's relationship to the other characters.

This is the first show at K-State for Ryan Bruce, who plays Phillip.

"I'm probably nervous, this is really a challenge. But the enjoyment I've gotten out of this overshadows my trepidation," Bruce said.

Morland said that the script for "The Shape of Things" was also difficult to memorize.

Aumiller said that the dialogue for the play takes some juggling on the actors' parts.

"There's a paradox between fast -paced dialogue and the flip side to that is a good amount of debate on art," Aumiller said.

"The conversation is natural, but it is underscored by greater ideas," Morland said.

Tickets for "The Shape of Things" are available at the McCain Box Office. Tickets are $7 for students and seniors and $11 for the general public. The play runs from Feb. 10-12 and Feb. 16-19.

Cast members agreed that the play is entertaining.

"This play should also appeal to college students, because the they can relate to the subject matter. It's about college students just like them," Aumiller said.

Couples are not the only ones to celebrate

LACEY STORER

As Valentine's Day approaches, singles everywhere are being bombarded by hearts and flowers and happy couples cozily deciding where they should eat their Valentine's Day meal.

Ok, so this year I happen to be part of one such couple, but I do remember what it was like to be single on Valentine's Day, feeling sorry for myself as I watched all the lovey couples around me. It sucked.

For all you singles out there who are feeling a bit down because you're flying solo and are mentally listing all the reasons why being single sucks, take heed. There are some perks that come with being single that being part of a couple doesn't provide.

For starters, you can do whatever you want to without having to worry about what your partner wants to do. You can watch the movies you want, eat wherever you feel like eating, and go out with your friends on the weekends without making anybody upset.

When you are single, there isn't any fighting over the remote or arguing about what CD to listen to in the car. It's all about what you want.

Being single also gives you vast amounts of free time that you can spend however you want without feeling guilty about it. You don't need to think about the other person's plans or trying to squeeze quality time with them into your busy schedule.

You also get more stuff done when you are single because there is no temptation to procrastinate in order to be with them.

As much fun as it is to lay in bed all day and do nothing but eat and watch television, it isn't very conducive to getting homework or laundry done.

Not only is your time your own when you are single, but your money is, too. You don't have to worry about how you are going to pay bills because you need to buy a present for your boyfriend's birthday or you've been taking your girlfriend out to eat a lot lately. Your money is yours to spend on you and you alone.

Perhaps one of the biggest perks of being single is that you don't have to ride the emotional rollercoaster that accompanies every relationship. There's no worrying about where the relationship is going, no anxiety over whether they are being faithful and no anger or sadness when the two of you get into a wicked fight.

By being single, you are being spared all of the negative emotions that are sometimes produced by being part of a couple.

Don't get me wrong, it's great to be part of a couple and have somebody there for you. But if you don't, there's no need to feel down about it. Think of all the things single people have that couples don't.

So come Monday, hold your head high and celebrate your singleness!

Players cope with lifestyle changes

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eric M. Carter spent time with the New England Patriots the week before the Super Bowl.

Carter, graduate student in sociology, visited with the players for his research project examining actions of football players in the National Football League.

"I'm looking at what is it that is going on within this particular subculture of athletes that are NFL players," he said. "I'm looking at what is going on that makes these guys more likely for deviance to occur."

Carter said deviance includes, but is not limited to, criminal behavior.

"It's just acting out of the norm, including behaviors such as depression," he said.

Carter said his interest in the subject was sparked by a friend who used to play for the New England Patriots in the early '90s. His friend told him stories about what the lives of football players in the NFL were really like and what fans don't see.

After researching for several years, Carter has found that players feel lost once they get to the professional level because differs from the lives they used to lead.

"They go from non-working college students to being wealthy," Carter said. "Their status may be big in college, but it's a bigger change in the NFL. They make millions of dollars, so they have no boundaries. They can use their money to get out of things."

Robert Schaeffer, sociology professor, said Carter's research is very important because it doesn't only apply to NFL players.

"It's a condition that is common to a lot of people," Schaeffer said. "If people come from a small city or farm and move to New York City, they feel lost.

"When you don't really know how you are supposed to handle yourself in the circumstances, you are sort of lost."

Carter said it can be difficult to adjust to fast life changes.

"We lose our sense of morals, our sense of norms and our sense of value," he said.

Lenten season inspires sacrifice, self-reflection

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sacrificing chocolate and alcohol may seem difficult to some, but students are giving up these products for Lent.

Tina Balecotcha, junior in social science, is a Methodist and said she tries to observe Lent every year by making a personal sacrifice.

"This year I'm trying to forego drinking for 40 days and 40 nights," she said.

The Lent season began yesterday with Ash Wednesday and will end Easter Sunday, March 27. The Rev. Keith Weber from St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center said not all Christian churches have Lent seasons, but those that do have more solemn worship services.

"As we reflect on the crucifixion, the whole season of Lent is a much more somber worship period," Weber said. "This will be communicated through music, periods of silence and the prayer."

Jamie Brown, sophomore in elementary education, said Lent was a time of self-sacrifice, but sacrifice could include more than just abstaining from things. She said she was going to follow the Catholic practice of not eating meat on Fridays, but she also wants to make an extra commitment.

"I'm giving up chocolate, but I'm also trying to go to daily mass a couple of times a week," she said. "It's difficult, but it makes you think about the purpose behind the Lent season."

Not understanding the purpose of Lent is why some don't observe it. Tyler Hamman, sophomore in open-option, was raised Catholic but said he has never understood Lent, so he doesn't acknowledge it.

"It's just something I never thought was really important, because I never clearly understood what it was about," Hamman said. "What difference does it make to give up something for 40 days? If someone really wanted to make a sacrifice they would give it up completely for the whole year."

Continuing Lent season practices after Lent ends is a goal for Julie Pearce, junior in family life and community service .

"Instead of giving something up, I'm going to add a special devotion time to either read the Bible or pray for 30 minutes every day," she said. "Hopefully that will continue after the Lent season is over."

Sarah Townsend, graduate student in English and president of Cats for Christ, said she's never given anything up, but other individuals in the group have encouraged her to try it.

"I have never done it in the past, but I've been talking to people who have made the commitment, and I'm thinking about doing it this year," she said

Not all Christian churches observe Lent, so it is difficult for some campus Christian organizations to acknowledge the Lent season in their diverse group.

"Lent is the foundation of Easter, and if you think about it, Easter is really the foundation of our faith," John Sherrell, junior in engineering, said. "Without Lent, Easter wouldn't be the same."

Benefits of soil carbon management to be discussed in forum

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A decrease in the rate of global warming is just one of the benefits of soil carbon management.

This topic will be discussed in a public forum on Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the K-State Alumni Center.

Increasing the level of carbon in the soil may not seem important, but it yields a number of benefits, said Charles Rice, professor of agronomy.

It will improve the quality and fertility of the soil by increasing the amount of nutrients contained within the soil, Rice said. It also increases soil aggregation, which is the process of making soil particles larger. This improves root growth, as well. Increasing the levels of carbon results in higher water retention and infiltration in the soil, making more water available for a plant during its growth, Rice said.

Increasing soil carbon is usually the result of plants turning carbon dioxide from the atmosphere into organic carbon that can be useful to the environment.

No-till is a process in which farmers plant crops without tilling the soil. This leaves a residue on the soil surface that has many wildlife and environmental benefits. Birds can use the residue found on the surface for making their nests, and it protects the soil from erosion.

If you go

Global warming and carbon management forum

When: 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday
Where: K-State Alumni Center

"This reduces sediment concentrations, which improves surface water quality because runoff water won't be collecting sediments and nutrients," said Gary Pierzynski, professor of agronomy.

Another way to increase the level of soil carbon is by taking marginal cropland out of production and putting it back into native grass. This leads to an increase in soil carbon because much of the grass growth is beneath ground, and this will create more organic carbon.

This has a larger effect on our environment. If the levels of soil carbon increase, then plants can more effectively transform carbon dioxide into organic carbon material, which could reduce global warming, Rice said.

Speakers for the forum include experts from K-State, Ohio State, the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the University of Wyoming and the Kansas Coalition for Carbon Management.

The group brought in to talk about the benefits of soil carbon management plans to write a book to explain to people its benefits.

Salina students learn from famous air pilots

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Steve Fossett, Burt Rutan and Richard Branson are known for their influence in the airline business. With their work on GlobalFlyer, K-State-Salina students are able to experience working with famous people in the airline business.

Steve Fossett is best known for being the first person to circle the globe in a hot air balloon, but students working with him on the GlobalFlyer project said his attitude is the best thing about him.

"He enters the room full of energy and ready to do things," Nancy Milleret, senior in airway science, said.

"This energy has helped Fossett circle the globe in a hot air balloon, race in the Iditarod, swim the English Channel, complete the Ironman Triathlon and capture numerous jet records.

Students who have worked with him said Fossett is ready to work when the time comes.

"He obviously knows what's business and when it's time to get down to business," Seth Short, senior in aeronautical technology, said.

Josh Hill, freshman in aviation maintenance, said Fossett has answered many of his questions about flying.

"He knows what it's like being on both sides of the fence, flying and being a passenger," Hill said. "If you have any questions about anything related to flying or to his career, he's willing to help you."

Milleret said Fossett taught her a lot about flying outside of the United States.

"We don't really get to know that much about international flying in school," Milleret said. "With him, we learn different rules that you have to do outside of the United States, and the program we're using, 'Flight Star,' is one thing we haven't used in school before."

Milleret said Fossett is easy to work with and very down to earth.

"He's just a great guy," she said. "Even though he's a millionaire, hanging out with us college kids is okay with him."

Short said he was impressed with Fossett's energy.

"It's just like working with your grandpa, but he's in really great shape," Short said.

Although Rutan and Branson have not had as much contact with the students, they are a part of the Global Flyer program as well.

Rutan is known for his development of research aircraft. According to www.virginatlanticglobalflyer.com, Rutan has won numerous awards, including the EAA Outstanding New Design award, the Society of Experimental Test Pilots Award and the Royal Aeronautical Society award. Rutan was formerly the director of the Bede Test Center for Bede Aircraft in Newton, Kan.

Branson created Virgin Atlantic Airways in the 1970s. According to www.virginatlanticglobalflyer.com, Branson formally worked with Fossett for the Virgin Global Challenger balloon project in 1986. The balloon was the largest balloon ever built.

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina is participating in an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

Professors disagree with Harvard comments

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The president of Harvard University, Lawrence Summers, who made comments about women's inferiority to men in the science and math fields, has now formed two task teams to deal with women's issues at Harvard.

One team's goal is to improve the status of women on faculty, and the other aims to develop better recruitment techniques for women in science and engineering fields.

These changes have been implemented in response to the seemingly lower status of female professors at Harvard in addition to Summers' questionable comment last month.

Feminists, scientists and Summers' own staff, numbering in the hundreds, are still reeling over Summers' allegations and his apparent disregard for studies demonstrating that societal and cultural problems, even university discrimination, are common barriers that hinder women's progression in mathematical and scientific disciplines.

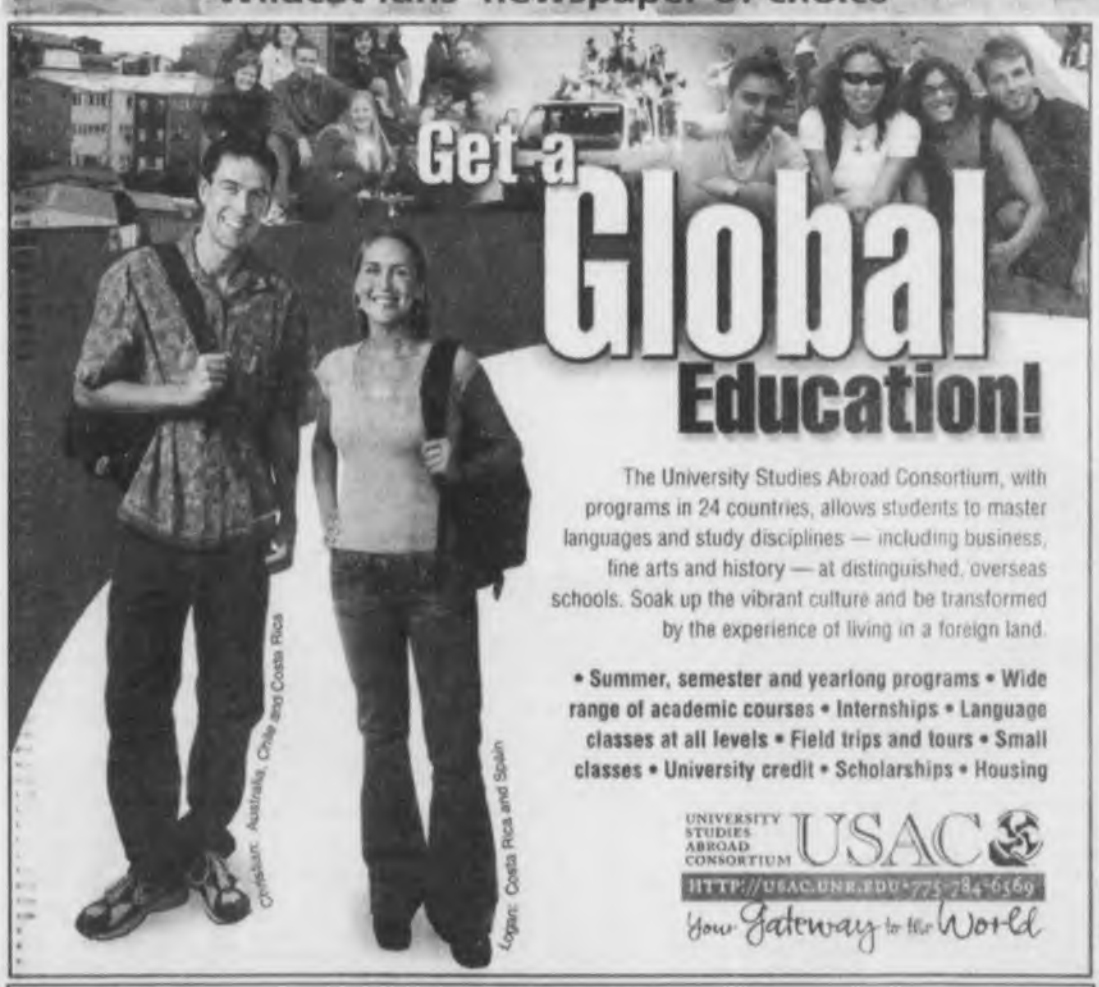
While women only make up approximately 13 percent of the College of Engineering at K-State, worries of discriminatory obstacles are unfounded, as K-State women are highly encouraged to work in engineering fields, Richard Gallagher, associate dean of engineering, said.

"I totally disagree with (Summers)," Gallagher said. "It's a statement that doesn't represent the research and history of the performance of young girls. I think we tend not to reach our young girls at an early age. They perform just as well in science in math at the elementary level, but we don't encourage them to go into those fields. They're certainly capable, there's no question of that."

Gallagher said one of the problems is that women tend to neglect science and math fields in high school, making careers in engineering very difficult to attain when faced with the required college-level math and science classes.

Ashley Urban, junior in architectural engineering, said the reason men are more prevalent in engineering fields isn't because the material is more difficult; it's based on varying interests, not capabilities.

"Because there are so many boys in the field, a lot of girls feel intimidated, and they don't even try," Urban said.



It's due to this fear that the Society of Women Engineers is going to great lengths to encourage and support women in engineering fields, Kristine Sheedy, president of the society, said.

Sheedy, senior in industrial engineering, said the society is visiting schools and serving as hosts to Girl Scouts on campus to inform girls of all their options in engineering fields. The society is also host to workshops, which Sheedy said she believes is raising enthusiasm for engineering among girls of all ages.

"I think it's becoming more common to see women engineers," Sheedy said. "You've got to be able to see people out there and have role models, and being in the Society of Women Engineers has really encouraged me. As long as you do your work and prove yourself, that's all you have to worry about."

Both Urban and Sheedy said they've never faced discrimination based on sex, and both praised K-State's efforts to both support and inform its students. Each year, K-State holds a career fair and resume-building seminar specifically designed for engineering students.

Rice warns Iran to stop nuclear program

By Anne Gearan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium – Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice warned Iran on Wednesday that it risks U.N. action if negotiations with Europe over its nuclear program don't progress.

Nearing the end of a fence-mending tour of European allies, Rice also said she encountered "a kind of coming together of common purpose" on another troubled front: Iraq. Several countries committed to help train Iraqi forces and participate in an upcoming NATO training mission.

"I heard devotion to helping more on the reconstruction side and, most importantly, to helping with the training of the security forces inside of Iraq, outside of Iraq, in the NATO training mission," the secretary said.

Rice said the United States had set no deadline on the Iran talks, but that they cannot go on forever. She added the Bush administration had not changed its view that the United Nations should step in to get tougher on Iran.

In Washington, President Bush said the Iranians needed to know that the free world was working together to send a clear message: Don't develop a nuclear weapon.

"And the reason we're sending that message is because Iran with a nuclear weapon would be a very destabilizing force in the world," Bush said.

"I think the message is there," Rice said at a news conference at NATO headquarters. "The Iranians need to get that message," she said, adding that Tehran should know that "there are other steps" the international community can take.

Iran says its program is for nuclear power, not weapons. In Tehran, President Mohammad Khatami said Wednesday that no Iranian government would ever abandon the progress the country has made in developing peaceful nuclear technology.

The comment did not argue well for negotiations with three European countries that are trying to persuade Iran to cease permanently the enrichment of uranium and have promised economic and technological aid in return. Khatami said that if the talks with Britain, France and Germany fail, his government will not be bound by its undertaking to suspend enrichment.

"If other parties are not committed to their promises, we will not be committed to our promises at all," Khatami told a meeting of foreign diplomats.

The Bush administration has long viewed the European process as futile and thinks Iran is stalling.

"They need to hear that the discussions that they are in with the Europeans are not going to be a kind of way station where they are allowed to continue their activities, that there's going to be an end to this and that they are going to end up in the Security Council," Rice said earlier Wednesday.

Those remarks, in an interview with Fox News, also urged Britain, France and Germany to put pressure on Iran.

Rice has spoken in tough terms about Iran during this trip, but had been careful to leave any criticism of the Europeans unspoken.

"Iranians need to hear that if they are unwilling to take the deal, really, that the Europeans are giving ... then the Security Council referral looms," she said.

Car bomb injures 43 in Madrid office park

By Ed McCullough
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRID, Spain – A car bomb blamed on Basque separatists exploded in a Madrid office park Wednesday near where King Juan Carlos later appeared, injuring at least 43 people in the worst terrorist attack in the Spanish capital since last year's bombing of commuter trains.

The bomb exploded at about 9:30 a.m., less than an hour after a warning call purportedly made by the Basque separatist group ETA.

It shattered thick panes of glass in buildings – spraying shards over a wide area – and damaged cars.

Police did not have time after the call to the Basque newspaper Gara to fully cordon off the area or fully evacuate workers and visitors at the sprawling convention center nearby, where the king later met Mexico President Vicente Fox to inaugurate an art show that includes Mexican works.

The latest bombing came hours after police arrested 14 suspected members of ETA and a week after Spain's Parliament overwhelmingly rejected a plan giving the Basque region broad autonomy bordering on independence.

The bomb detonated near a plaza with a large bust of the king's late father, Juan de Borbon, and outside a building housing the French computer manufacturer Bull.

EVOLUTION | Board to consider intelligent design

Martin said the review committee will be meeting periodically over the next few months and will have open public discussions.

"This is not a change to creationism," Martin said.

Laurie Bagby, associate professor of political science, said she believes this new shift is nothing new at all.

"The evolution debate is a testing mechanism used by Kansans who are dissatisfied with the system in general," Bagby said. "The bigger question is, why focus on the evolution issue and not debate prayer in schools?"

The review committee is investigating the concept of intelligent design. Intelligent design is a form of creationism that argues that the Earth was created by a series of events caused by some intelligent force, not random chance. Evolution, on the other hand, says that species change in response to environmental and genetic factors over the course of many generations.

Bagby said teaching creationism in schools presents a big problem.

"The people most affected by the teaching of evolution are Christian fundamentalist and charismatics," Bagby said. "Should Kansas educators be expected to teach theology, would those same Christian fundamentalist be satisfied if secular teachers were instructing children in matters of religion?"

State law requires academic standards, which are used to develop statewide tests for students, to be updated periodically. The state board will make the final decisions about the standards.

Did you know:

Evolution
Change in the genetic composition of a population during successive generations, as a result of natural selection acting on the genetic variation among individuals, and resulting in the development of new species.

Intelligent design
A theory that nature and complex biological structures were designed by intelligent beings and were not created by chance.

Creationism
Belief in the literal interpretation of the account of the creation of the universe and of all living things related in the Bible.

The board is expected to review the committee's work in April, and the new standards will take effect for tests given to fourth, seventh and 10th graders in 2008.

hard time when they lose."

Dustin Stralow, sophomore in finance, said he has been a KU fan forever.

"I'm a K-State student, so I need to be respectful of the student section," he said.

Most fans, though, were there to cheer on the Cats.

"We've never beat KU in Bramlage, so we're waiting for that," she said. "We're waiting for that streak to end. I've been waiting my whole life for it."

Kirby Eads, who watched the game with Stralow, said Bramlage should be a good place to play, but K-State's 0-17 record against KU is not just coincidence.

"Forget the atmosphere," Eads said. "It's a curse."

— James Hurla contributed to this story.

SOCIAL SECURITY | System could be reformed

Bush's solution to this problem is to let workers set aside part of the money taken from their paychecks in a retirement account.

This account would belong to the individual worker, who would then be able to pass the money on to children or grandchildren. The government wouldn't be able to take it away, Bush said.

Reforming the system in this way isn't a new idea for Bush, said Linda Richter, professor of political science.

"He first proposed this idea in 1978 when he ran for Congress," Richter said. "He said it would go bust in ten years."

The Reagan Administration saved Social Security by changing a few things that saved billions of dollars, Richter said. One of Bush's ideas is adding an extra month of work to the retirement age every year.

Another possibility is removing the cap on Social Security. Currently everyone who earns more than $90,000 a year pays in the same amount. If we could just change that up to $200,000, it would help, Richter said.

Edward Hursh, freshman in open-option, said there is no easy solution to this problem, but he says he is hopeful Bush's reforms will take some of the burden off the government.

"If we're encouraged to save, it's going to go back to this personal confidence where we don't have to rely on that government check every month," Hursh said.

VOTING | Ballots available for primary elections

Bulk and Galen Hoffman.

"City-school elections are non-partisan, so you just have a list of people and you vote for who you want to vote," Campbell said.

To vote in advance, go to the county office at 110 Courthouse Plaza, Monday through Friday, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. They will also be accepting advance ballots Saturday, Feb. 26, between 8 a.m. and noon, Campbell said.

Registration in Riley County is needed before voting. The deadline to vote in the primary is 5 p.m. Monday; for the general election, it is 5 p.m. March 21.

Campbell said advance voting has been going on since 1996, and the turnout usually depends on how many people vote in all. Many people cast an advance vote in the presidential election, Campbell said, but generally the primary election doesn't have a high turnout.

K-State English professor's murder trial begins Monday

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State English professor Thomas Murray goes to trial in Lawrence on Monday facing charges of first-degree murder.

He is charged with the murder of his former wife, Carmin Ross, a former director of employee relations for K-State.

Bob Eye, Murray's defense attorney, said the defense was in the final stages of preparing for the trial. He said his office is going over files daily and looking at the prosecution's witness list.

Eye estimated there to be 90-100 people on that list, including K-State faculty and students. He declined to speculate on the number of witnesses the defense would be calling.

"A lot of our decisions about which witnesses to call will be determined by which witnesses the state will end up calling," Eye said.

Eye was unable to comment on reports that police searched Murray's house. According to the Lawrence Journal-World, police searched Murray's home in Manhattan on Feb. 2.

A neighbor reported that officers searched for three and a half hours, and also removed a fire grate from the home.

Eye had little to say about the judge's decision on whether or not to allow certain pieces of evidence in the trial. One piece of evidence was testimony of emotional abuse in the relationship between Murray and Ross.

The other piece was the use of luminol, a chemical that detects the appearance of blood, in Murray's car. Eye said the judge has not yet made a definite decision on either.

Eye said the defense will be working to make sure jurors see both sides of the story during the trial. He said Murray is anxious for the trial to get underway.

"I believe that Professor Murray is looking forward to the trial," Eye said.

Linda Brigham, head of the English department, said members of the English department are standing behind Murray during his trial.

"There's a great deal of sympathy with him and his situation, because it's just horrible," Brigham said. "But at this point we're just waiting."

Brigham said the experience has left members of the English department "emotionally numb" and added that it wasn't a big topic of conversation among faculty and staff.

Murray still holds the title of professor at K-State. He has been on paid leave since his arrest.

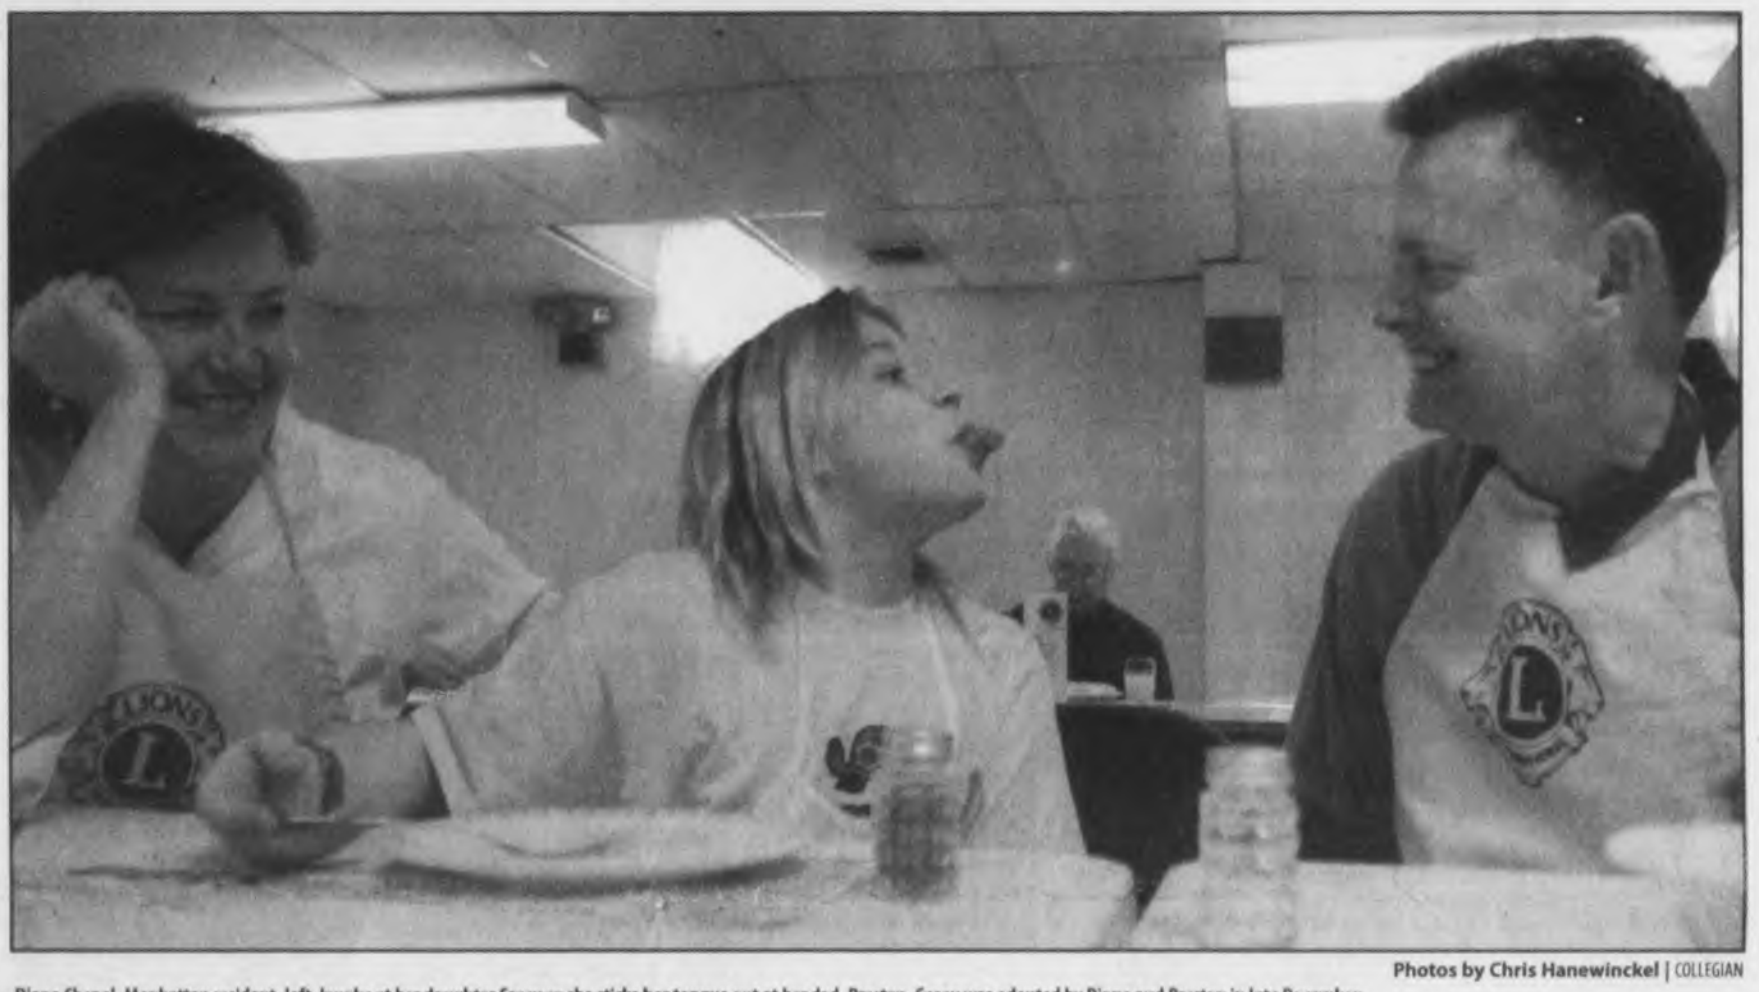
Editor tells story of finding birth parents

ABBIE ADAMS

A year ago, my life took a pretty unexpected turn. I was walking home from the first day of class when my cell phone rang. If I would of known who was calling, I could have prepared myself a little better, but when I said hello, I heard a woman on the other line crying. She finally said, "Abbie, this is Tammy, your birth mother."

I guess I should back up a little and tell you what led to that call. I have always known that I was adopted my parents never tried to keep that a secret from me. I spent my whole life wondering where I came from, the circumstances behind being put up for adoption and if my birth parents would ever try to find me.

I would have searched for my birth parents the second I turned 18 if it wasn't for the fact that it was extremely expensive. I tried saving money at different times, but could never save up the amount that I needed. Then, for Christmas of 2003, I opened a Christmas card from my grandpa for the exact amount of money needed to do the search.



I immediately contacted the agency I was adopted through, only to find out that a search would take at least six months. That was in January 2004.

This brings us back to the phone call. Two weeks after I had found out that a search would take at least six months, I received the call that would change my life forever. With my birth mother on the other end of the line, I was speechless. I had so many questions.

We talked about my life, the circumstances of why I was given up for adoption and my birth father. For some reason, I had never really thought about meeting my birth father, only my birth mother. After talking

Law gives adopted children access to records

By Lacey Storer

For some adopted adults, finding their birth parents is a long and difficult process. But for adopted adults in some states, including Kansas, all it takes is a filling out a form.

Kansas is one of five states, including Alabama, Oregon and, most recently New Hampshire, that allows adult adopted children open access to their original birth certificates which list their birth parents. This saves adoptees who are looking for their birth parents from having to go through adoption agencies to find their birth parents.

Megan Watts, who was adopted, said she thinks laws like this are beneficial to adopted children. Although Watts was adopted in Nebraska, which doesn't have the same law, she said not having to search for information could help save time and possible distress for adoptees.

"The Kansas process would be a lot easier and less stressful," said Watts, senior in social sciences.

Diana Chapel, the mother of an 11-year-old adopted daughter, said she adopted children should be able to find out about their past.

"I think if a child doesn't have access (to the information), if there's health issues or if there are other siblings, there's so much the child won't know," Chapel said.

Not everyone thinks giving open access to adopted children is a good idea. According to the National Council for Adoption's Web site, www.ncfa-usa.org, the release of identifying information should be consented to by both parties before being given out.

The population of Salina could nearly double when the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer takes off this month.

More than 30,000 are expected to attend the record attempt for non-stop flight around the world without refueling.

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina is participating in an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

Tim Rogers, executive director of the Salina Airport Authority, said Salina police and fire officials as well as representatives from the Transportation Security Administration, FBI, Saline County mounted patrol and Army National Guard will be on hand for the security of the pilots, news media and spectators.

Takeoff and landing are expected to be the peak attendance times. Two public viewing areas will be avail-

A ceremony on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum will honor about 350 members of the 2nd Battalion, 130th Field Artillery who recently returned from Iraq.

The ceremony will begin at 12:30 p.m.

After being mobilized in Nov. 2003 and training at Fort Riley, the majority of the Battalion's soldiers were stationed in Baghdad, Iraq, where their mission was force protection, according to an Adjutant General's Department news release.

Joy Moser, spokeswoman for the Kansas Army National Guard, said the ceremony allows the public an

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Class action legislation

The Senate approved a measure to help shield businesses from major class action lawsuits on Thursday, giving President Bush the first legislative victory of his second term. Under the legislation, large multi-state class action lawsuits like the ones that have been brought against tobacco companies could no longer be heard in small state courts.

North Korea has

North Korea announced publicly for the first time Thursday that it has nuclear weapons and said it will stay away from disarmament talks, dramatically raising the stakes in the two year-old dispute. Bush's administration called on Pyongyang to give up its atomic aspirations so life can be better for its impoverished people.

Kansas disaster areas

President Bush declared disaster status on Wednesday for 32 Kansas counties hardest hit by last month's ice storm that left hundreds of thousands of people without electrical power. Gov. Kathleen Sebelius made the requests seeking federal assistance for 56 counties on Jan. 4.

Students run across Anderson Avenue waving signs to make people aware of violence against women. The demonstration was a part of violence week and was meant to inform people of the dangers of rape and other type of violence.

Students raise violence awareness

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Crowds gathered in support of halting violence toward women on Thursday.

About 20 men and women gathered at the corner of Manhattan and Anderson avenues, displaying signs to the traffic such as "No means no" and "I love vaginas."

This demonstration coincides with the K-State V-day events on campus the past week.

Zach Hauser, V-day co-organizer, said the event was planned to deliver a message of empowerment to women.

"We want to raise awareness on the harsh, grim reality of violence against women, and then, hopefully work to prevent that violence," Hauser said.

The demonstrators included much of the cast of "The Vagina Monologues," a play that will be performed at Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union today, Saturday and Sunday.

Diane Schaller, cast member, encouraged spectators with her signs to come and enjoy "The Vagina Monologues."

"To me, this is empowering for women and it has been fun to be a part of a cast who is for this cause.

"I think the performance can get men and women alike motivated for the cause," Schaller said.

Other participants included members of the Union Program Council and students from women's studies classes.

Their signs' messages included "A rape occurs every 22 hours on a college campus" and "Honk if you love vaginas."

Lacy Thompson, sophomore in theater, said she was proud to be part of such the campaign.

"Any kind of violence against women is disheartening, and I feel it is time the public wakes up to it," Thompson said.

More V-day 2005 activities include the Opening Night Gala and Art Auction this weekend and "The Vagina Monologues."

Professor remembered for kindness

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Putting others first is what Leonard Bloomquist did best.

Bloomquist, associate professor and head of the sociology department, died of liver cancer Monday at the age of 50.

Bloomquist

During his 16 years at K-State, Bloomquist showed kindness to everyone, former student, Sara Fisher, said.

Fisher said he was supportive of his students and made a difference in their lives.

"So many students were inspired or impacted or treated well by him," she said.

"He lived his science. He believed you should give to the disadvantaged.

He believed you should work for social justice."

And Bloomquist did give to the disadvantaged.

When then-history professor and long-time friend Dent Wilcoxon could no longer drive to campus because he had lost his sight in one eye, Bloomquist dedicated his time to doing it himself.

"Dr. Bloomquist offered to pick me up three times a week, so I could still teach my classes," Wilcoxon said.

Bloomquist did this the entire semester and never once missed a day, Wilcoxon said.

A strong friendship bonded the two together.

They had met through Bloomquist's wife Catherine Bloomquist, who was a former student of Wilcoxon.

Although Wilcoxon was about 40 years older than Bloomquist, he said the age gap didn't make a difference.

"We had a really fine friendship," he said. "We always found plenty to talk about."

Bloomquist also touched lives with his thoughtfulness, David Darling, professor in agricultural economics, said.

"The word I passed on to his secretary to include in the eulogy was thoughtful," he said.

"It has a double meaning. He was an intellectual, and he was an easy person to be with because he was a pleasant person. He didn't create a lot of ripples."

Darling said he met Bloomquist working with him through the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives.

He said Bloomquist was a good leader.

"He was interested in his own intellectual pursuits, but he was willing to take on his role as the department head," he said.

"He was willing to be a leader, but also a servant. A good leader is a servant serving other people."

Lawsuit against city of Manhattan in discovery stage; attorney hopes for trial

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The lawsuit involving Eddie Lowery, the former Fort Riley soldier who was falsely accused of rape in 1981, who is suing the city of Ogden, the city of Manhattan, Riley County, Riley County Police Department and individual officers for $15 million in reparations, is currently in the discovery stage, according to attorneys.

"We are currently in the discovery stage of the lawsuit, which means that each side is gathering information and trying to find out what the other side knows," said attorney Mike Gillespie.

Gillespie is representing Director of Riley County Police Department, Mike Watson and the Riley County Police Department.

Barry Clark, the co-counsel representing Lowery said there are a variety of methods employed in gathering information during the discovery stage.

"We use depositions, which are when people who were subpoenaed testified under oath. There are production requests and requests for the transcripts of the interrogations that involved written questions answered under oath," Clark said.

Clark said the case is currently a civil rights action against the accused parties.

In 1981, Lowery was convicted of the rape of a 71-year-old Ogden woman after confessing to the crime. Lowery spent 10 years in Lansing Prison and had to register as a sex offender for 11 years.

In May 2003, DNA testing cleared Lowery of the crime. Lowery's lawyers claim the confession was coerced by at least two police officers in 1981 and that Riley County Police officers lied in court.

Clark said the cities of Manhattan and Ogden are being sued as well.

"Riley County is unique because there is no city police department. We have consolidated law enforcement here that created the Riley County Police Department," Clark said.

However, Clark said the city of Manhattan has taken the position that the city is not responsible for the actions of the police department because they do not oversee the police department.

Attorneys said the complex nature of the case means it is hard to estimate when the case will go to trial.

"In a complex case like this one, there is always the question of when it will go to trial. We would prefer to see it come to trial soon," Clark said.

Hale Library to open cafe modeled after Campus Grounds

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hale Library staff, in cooperation with Chartwells in the K-State Student Union, is planning to open a café for the convenience of K-State students on the go.

The project was inspired by Lori Goetsch, dean of KSU libraries, after she joined the library staff in August. Goetsch is working in conjunction with the Union and Chartwells in pursuit of a café similar to Campus Grounds, the coffee shop operated in Durland Hall.

Tina Griffin, food services director at the Union, said the café will offer a wide array of foods and beverages including baked pastries, sandwiches, salads, chips, yogurt, fruit, pudding and jell-o parfaits, vegetables and dips, Ritazza coffee and bottled beverages.

In the morning, biscuits and gravy will be available and during lunch and dinner various soups will be offered.

"What better way to add value to their library experience? So many people study for long periods of time, so they would not have to leave the library in search of food or beverages. They would not have to walk across campus to seek out other food venues," Griffin said.

The project is still largely in the planning phase. Goetsch said very little construction will be required to operate the café and it will be located in an existing room on the first floor just inside the sunflower gate entrance.

Goetsch hopes the café will be in business by the fall semester.

This new café will in no way affect whether the 24-hour study room will remain open.

In fact, Goetsch said the library staff has taken students' requests for the library to remain open on a 24-hour basis into consideration. Nothing has been formally decided, but Goetsch said he hopes to meet the needs of the students.

Another option on campus is Campus Grounds, which specializes in coffee beverages.

Jeff Smith, owner, said they offer a wide array of espresso-based drinks including mochas, espresso, lattes, cappuccinos, herbal teas, a new Granita slushy-style blended drink and various pastries.

"It takes time to get established, (but) we've got quite a following," Smith said.

Campus Grounds is open 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday in Durland Hall.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Electronic voting good idea, needs to be carried out carefully

Riley County should move quickly but cautiously to electronic voting machines.

Under the Help America Vote Act, polling places will be required to provide at least some form of electronic voting for persons with disabilities by 2006. Riley County officials are considering moving entirely to electronic voting.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

With the proper precautions, this could be a great move.

The November presidential elections featured electronic voting systems in several states, and the results appear to have been secure, accurate and fair.

Electronic voting machines have advanced far beyond K-State's Student Governing Association elections system, which three years ago experienced difficulties that required a re-vote to fix.

The integrity of our nation's elections requires only tested, secure voting practices be used in choosing our officials.

The Help America Vote Act is a good step toward entirely fair balloting for all voters. Electronic voting has the potential to ensure every vote is counted, without the fear of hanging chads or butterfly ballots.

While issues of computer security and programming glitches will remain a persistent worry, caution and careful regulation can prevent any problems in skewed elections results.

Electronic voting could be the future of democracy, and Riley County should take the opportunity to be a part of that shift.

The doctor is in

Dr. Love answers all your love questions, gives relationship advice

Love is in the air. Or wait, I guess that could just be "affection," "adoration" or "a low-lying smog of sterility-inducing pollutants." But we'll stick with love, because isn't Monday Valentine's Day?

GRANT REICHERT

You: You know it is.

Excellent! Do you know what that means?

You: sigh You know we don't.

Time for V-Day Q&A! To answer your questions, I've invited pop-psychologist "Doctor Love," who's bounced back surprisingly quickly from the Olson twins' incident.

DL: In my defense, I didn't know they would go crazy like that after just a couple of wine coolers. They were able to reattach the animal control officer's arm, so no harm, no foul, right?

Q: Doctor Love, should I be worried that my girlfriend refers to eating as "reverse-vomiting?"

DL: Your girlfriend eats? Did you know eating is the number one cause of obesity in women? It's true. I read it on a Web site with a dancing hotdog animation. You should probably find a girl who doesn't eat.

Q: Wouldn't she die?

DL: What am I, a doctor? Just listen to the frickin' hotdog, a'ight? Next!

Q: Doctor Love, the election has driven my girlfriend insane. She's all like, "War for Oil," "Bush is Hitler," and "I respect Janeane Garofalo for her talent as a comedienne." What should I do?

DL: Well, have you ever seen Bush and Hitler in the same room? Any idea sounds crazy when you "put it in quotation marks." You need to open your mind, man. Open it. Or drop that hippy like a tab of lysergic acid diethylamide. You know, whatever.

Q: Doctor Love, my boyfriend says "zing!" a lot. I'm thinking of murdering him. What would you recommend in the way of body disposal?

DL: Whoa, Doctor Love is pretty sure murder is illegal. Just cut out his tongue, staple it to his forehead, and then yell "Zing that!" You'll share a laugh together, and he'll be physically unable to enunciate the word "zing." I'm sending you a free copy of my best-selling pamphlet "Cat Got Your Tongue: Living Tongueless." It gave Ashlee Simpson the courage to take up a career in music.

Q: So like, I don't get it. Diversity causes conformity? What the hell does that mean?

A: Let's be straight here: it's Grant who's the patriarchal tool of neo-Colonialist oppression. Doctor Love endorses all kinds of diversity: females that are kinda hot females that are really hot, and females that go off like a member of al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigade when exposed to pure oxygen. Cause, y'-know, diversity is like a quilted rainbow of rainbowy etcetera. It's a metaphor, man, like free rust proofing or something.

Q: Doctor Love, I just figured out my girlfriend has been cheating on me and stealing my CDs. What should I do?

DL: Buy some decent music, 'cause man: "Hoobastank"? Are you a teenage girl? And have you noticed pain, like of the excruciating variety, whenever you urinate? 'Cause man, it's like I'm birthin' a flippin' moose here.

Q: Doctor Love, so, like I'm in a sorority, and I feel like everyone stereotypes me.

DL: Could you phrase that in the form of the question?

Q: Um...What is...like...stereotypes me?

DL: I see. Ever since Hester Prynne donned her scarlet "A" and formed the "Alphas", unfair stigmas have plagued sororities. Still, I don't see why you're complaining; Doctor Love would kill to live in a house of 20-year-old girls.

That's all Doctor Love has time for today, baby. Don't be afraid, ladies; his breath is worse than his bite. They say it's a gingivitis deal. And that gout? Totally not contagious.

Collegian wants respect from University Daily Kansan

Dear Staff of the Daily Kansan:

For years, you've considered the Kansas State Collegian to be the country cousin to your paper. The dumb ugly stepchild to your Ivy-League caliber publication.

ABBY HILES

Oh, don't deny it.

I'm sure that in your own newsroom there are copies of our paper next to yours, and you are laughing at our line artists, mocking our headlines and generally taking pot shots at our publication and our journalism school.

And that is fine.

We here at K-State are used to ridicule (insert obvious joke about this past year's football record) and mockery (our men's basketball team).

We are able to take the comments about our campus being overrun with cowboys or the smell of manure wafting from Weber Hall on windy spring days (especially since the manure part is true).

We can even take criticism about our obsession with our mascot. After all, not every college town sticks it on everything that will stand still or hold adhesive (see Powercat embossed ambulances).

But, we here at the Collegian have finally decided to take a stand. No longer will we play second fiddle to you. No longer will our J-school be the butt of jokes and the "fall back" for those students who can't get into your school.

Oh, no. It is time for us to definitively be recognized as the premiere student publication in the state. So, if you will just step down gracefully, we would appreciate it.

Sure, you have won some awards in the past and currently an alumnus of your J-school is the Wall Street Journal Washington Bureau chief. Big whoop.

At least our publication didn't have to issue an apology for plagiarism within the first month of the semester. How does that feel to be a nationally recognized paper that can't even teach its reporters how to credit sources? Isn't that embarrassing?

I'm just asking because we here at the Collegian haven't had that experience and were wondering how everyone was doing since the "incident." Was counseling involved?

You make fun of our men's basketball program and call Bramlage "Allen Fieldhouse West." You even printed that in your paper on Wednesday that the last time K-State took home a basketball victory, "only NASA employees had computers." Touché.

And although I can't accurately recall what your paper's headline was on Oct. 11 (after our football team crawled back to Manhattan with their tails between their legs), I'm pretty sure it wasn't nice.

All jokes aside, you have an amazing publication over there in Lawrence. Our newsroom is a current subscriber, and many times we look to you for cues on how to revamp our style. You are constantly pushing us to remain the better paper, and we heartily thank you for it. And who doesn't battle with a bout of plagiarism now and again?

We just want some respect in return, because, if you haven't noticed, we've won a heck of a lot of awards too, and our copy isn't too shabby either.

It's about time that our paper got the support and accolades that yours does. We have beloved columnists (shameless self-promoters), an amazing sports staff covering everything from football to women's crew, and our Arts and Entertainment section has a certain "edge" about it.

So you see, this country-bumpkin-ugly-stepchild to your paper isn't so bad after all. We know we're better, but on your campus we'll settle for being considered equals.

The question is, are you ready for us?

Much Respect from the Boondocks,

Abby Hiles

Rock is dead. Long live paper and scissors.

I'm jammed in a tent, first in line, snuggling with two other guys in a tent, just so I can see this KU — K-State game. What a blast.

Yeah, I think students outnumber faculty. Why don't we try piling snow in the faculty parking area?

The guy who wrote Napoleon Dynamite did go to Manhattan High and graduated with my sister.

Apparently you lose your place in line for starting a fire at a basketball game.

Hey Bill Self: do you have something going on with Cialis? 'Cause every commercial break, it seems to be on.

Is that Walter the ferret in your pants, or are you just happy to see me?

Big 12 refs sucks.

Just by sheer statistics, I have to make it into the fourum. Peace out.

You know, Rusty's might be ranked No. 12 or whatever, but it still smells like urine when you sit there and eat your burger. What's with that?

ICAT basketball fans: first in line for tickets, last to cheer at the game.

Is that Walter the ferret in your pants, or are you just happy to see me?

Hey, Michael Ashford: where were you after the game? I waited like 45 minutes out on the court.

Memo to Fred Peete: you do not make every shot you take. Follow your shot and try to get a rebound.

Your days are numbered, Wooldridge.

Hey, at least I got a T-Shirt.

My friend just saw a gerbil juggling doughnuts. Is that weird?

Professor apologizes for being misunderstood

By Mindy Osborne
UNIVERSITY DAILY KANSAN (U. KANSAS)

Lawrence H. Summers, president of Harvard University, addressed why so few women were on mathematics and engineering faculties at top research universities at a Jan. 18 conference.

According to The New York Times, Summers said "faculty positions at elite universities required more time and energy than married women with children were willing to accept." He also said innate sex differences could leave women less capable of succeeding.

Summers has since apologized for being misunderstood. This is the only apology he should give because his comments do not attempt to prove that women are inferior. Instead, they are a starting point for open dialogue.

Years of research and observations offer clear proof that men and women are different, and men excel more often in math and sciences than women.

An explanation comes from our ancestors. According to Barbara and Allan Pease's book, "Why Men Don't Listen and Women Can't Read Maps," men needed areas in the brain for long-distance navigation to hunt food. Women needed areas for short-range navigation to perform activities simultaneously.

In a meritocracy based purely on mathematical ability, males would be expected to outnumber females nearly two to one in the most demanding jobs. This is manifest even at the University of Kansas.

Last year the ratio of undergraduate females to males in the mathematics department was 68 to 107. The ratio was 26 to 40 for math graduates and 6 to 26 for math faculty.

Of course, genetics is not solely responsible for differences between the sexes. Our environment and interaction with others proves just as influential. As human beings, we have a duty to treat each other fairly.

We shouldn't resign ourselves to the stereotypes that females won't excel at math or that males won't effectively communicate.

Nor should we indulge in false hopes or pursue something we aren't talented at.

Instead, we need to accept who we are, talents and flaws alike. Rather than make a moral judgment based on what others can and cannot do, we need to celebrate everyone's achievements.

TO THE EDITOR

Blended sex education best option for schools

Dear Editor,

I believe that Jeremy Parker and Annie Lewis made some very thoughtful points; however, I believe safe sex education needs to be taught, not just abstinence.

Neither of the two major genres are particularly good. Looking at statistics that show America as having the highest rate of teenage pregnancy in the world, there's obviously room for improvement.

I think that the two forms of education need to be blended; explain the reasons why abstinence is the best choice to avoid pregnancy and STDs, but also know that you're never going to get rid of teenage sex.

Those who follow the abstinence-only route seem to think that bringing up sex "gives the students ideas". But obviously it's not that way; sexual feelings are a basic instinct.

My only real problem with safe-sex education is that it doesn't focus enough on the psychological aspects of sexuality. Most teenagers don't take that side until after they've become sexually active.

If more information were to be available in addition to an emphasis on abstinence and the psychological effects of sexual activity, I'd consider it the best of both worlds.

Either way, some teenagers are still going to become sexually active. You can't punish them with ignorance.

City, school responsible for safety of students

Dear Editor,

I was disappointed to read your editorial regarding the "proper" use of city/university Funds. While I agree that lighting on North Manhattan has been a problem for K-State and the city, I disagree with your argument that city/university funds were misused.

First of all, the city of Manhattan had no intention of increasing the amount of or upgrading the current lighting on North Manhattan before SGA approached it. This was a student-led initiative on the Governmental Relations Committee last year to improve the area's safety. Without that push, nothing would have been done.

Second, your contention that students crossing North Manhattan from city property to university property are the sole responsibility of the city is misguided. The safety of students is a responsibility of both the city and the university.

Third, the city/university fund has very strict requirements for its use, and your suggestions for other uses are inappropriate for the fund.

Those requirements have been outlined by the city and include that "proposals should be developed that place emphasis on economic development and infrastructure issues. Most proposals could typically be classified as 'public works' projects."

Finally, no other projects have needed attention, according to university and city planners. All other projects have already been funded.

Overall, I feel your editorial was way off-the-mark. This paints a bad picture of SGA, which was trying to improve the safety of students and did it the way we felt most appropriate.

Track team concludes 3-meet road trip

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcat track team hopes to improve its number of NCAA Championship qualifiers amid stiff competition Friday and Saturday at the Iowa State Classic in Ames, Iowa.

Heading into the weekend, nine Wildcats have provisionally qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships, and three have automatically qualified, including junior pole-vaulter Breanna Eveland.

Eveland, who set the K-State record in the pole vault with a vault of 13-09 1/4 earlier this season at the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular, did not compete at the Sevigne Husker Invitational last weekend.

The Grand Rapids, Mich., native said she is looking forward to returning to action.

"I'm definitely pumped about the meet this weekend," Eveland said. "The week off was nice, but it kind of made me miss pole vaulting."

Eveland said she is more concerned with her vault height than her place at the Iowa State Classic.

She hopes to vault 14 feet, which would improve her school record.

"It doesn't matter too much about placing," Eveland said. "I definitely don't want to lose, but I'll be happy if I jump well and (set a personal best)."

Eveland and head coach Cliff Rovelto said there will be good competition this weekend as 30 teams are scheduled to compete.

"You're going to see huge, huge fields," Rovelto said. "I think you will see a lot of improvements in our kids' marks."

In addition to the stiff competition, Iowa State's 300-meter track may help produce faster times in the running events for the Wildcat athletes, who have been competing on a conventional 200-meter track.

"This place that we're going this weekend is probably better than running outdoors," Rovelto said.

"It doesn't get much better in terms of running conditions. This is as good an opportunity as they get to run fast enough to make their way into the NCAA meet."

Christian Smith, a junior from Garfield, Kan., was the lone Wildcat to win an event in last year's Iowa State Classic. He returns to defend his title in the 800-meter run.

Smith said he wants to win his race and run 1 minute, 48 seconds flat, which would automatically qualify him for the NCAA Indoor Championships in the 800.

Smith provisionally qualified for the mile last Saturday at the Sevigne Husker Invitational with a time of 4 minutes, 4.63 seconds.

Senior triple-jumper Chaytan Hill also returns to action this weekend. Trackwire ranks Hill first in the nation as a result of her NCAA Indoor Championships automatic qualifying triple jump of 44-08 3/4 at the K-State-Kansas-Missouri Triangular.

The Iowa State Classic will conclude K-State's three-meet road trip.

Struggling teams set to play Saturday

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three games ago, the Texas Longhorns and K-State Wildcats were sitting in a solid position.

The Longhorns were 4-2 in the Big 12 Conference, the Wildcats were 3-3 and all was well in Austin and Manhattan.

How things change.

Heading into Saturday's 12:30 p.m. game between the two schools at the Frank Erwin Center, both the Wildcats and Longhorns are on three-game losing streaks.

Sophomore guard Fred Peete said K-State's confidence is still high heading into Austin.

"We just need to tighten down a little bit more," Peete said. "We still have high confidence, it's just we have more of a sense of urgency now."

The Wildcats (13-7, 3-6) are coming off a disappointing 74-65 loss at home to No. 3 Kansas on Wednesday.

After cutting a 17-point Jayhawk lead to four points late in the second half, the Wildcats did not have enough to break their losing streak against their rivals, which now stands at 29 games.

Four of K-State's six conference losses have been by 10 points or less.

"It's very frustrating," said sophomore guard Lance Harris. "Those are nail-biters. It's very tough to swallow when you know you had a chance to win those ballgames."

No. 23 Texas (15-7, 4-5) has had a tough time handling losses themselves.

The Longhorns – forced to deal with the academic ineligibility of star player P.J. Tucker and an injury to freshman LaMarcus Aldridge – have fallen apart of late.

Wildcats travel to Oklahoma hoping to stay atop conference

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a week off from playing games, No. 16 K-State now begins the final run towards the season's end and its goal of a Big 12 Championship.

The Wildcats (17-4, 8-2) currently sit in a three-way tie for first place in the Big 12 Conference with Texas Tech and Iowa State.

Consequently, as K-State prepares to play Oklahoma (12-9, 4-6) at 2 p.m. Sunday in Norman, Okla., in front of a national audience, head coach Deb Patterson realizes the importance of every game from here on out, starting with the Sooners.

"I think the game at Oklahoma, at this point in the season, with where the conference race is, is as important a game as there's been all year for our basketball team," Patterson said. "You have to expect that the other teams that are in the first position are going to take care their business."

The Wildcats face an Oklahoma team that has struggled in the conference season.

The Sooners have lost four of their last five games, including a one point home loss to No. 7 Baylor.

Patterson said Oklahoma's recent struggles do not tell the whole story with the Sooner team.

"They are very smart, just a very potent basketball team on the offensive end that has been a little uncharacteristic from time to time in their struggles shooting the ball," she said. "But certainly, at home and with the momentum that they've built coming off the Baylor game, I'm sure we'll see the very best that they have to offer."

The Sooners are led by senior guard Dionnah Jackson, who is averaging 14.9 points per game to go along with 8.6 rebounds a contest. Jackson also ranks second in the league in assists per game (5.81).

"Dionnah Jackson is one of the most talented point guards in the country," Patterson said. "With Dionnah Jackson, you have that wild-card dimension of, I think, one of the best on-ball defenders in the country."

With just five regular-season games left after this weekend, the matchup with the Sooners will be a crucial game if the Wildcats are to repeat as Big 12 Champions.

Patterson said after the week off, the Wildcats must get back to business.

"Everyone else has been doing the work and we've just been kind of sitting back and haven't necessarily put ourselves back in the line of fire, so to speak," Patterson said of the week off. "Sunday's our opportunity to get back into the fray, and we know, because of the great respect we have for Oklahoma, that this is going to be a real test and challenge."

Keeping you up to speed with sports while you look for Valentine's Day gifts

MATTHEW GIRARD

With Valentine's Day quickly approaching, some sports fans may have been preoccupied with impressing their significant other and not had time to pay attention to their other "true love." The love that doesn't ask for diamonds or candy, just your lazy butt sitting on a couch eating chips and drinking beer.

So, in case you've missed the last few days of sports happenings looking for teddy bears or special underwear, here's what you missed.

K-STATE VS. KANSAS

For the 29th straight game, the Wildcats (13-7, 3-6) came up short against No. 3 Kansas (19-1, 9-0) in front of a raucous sell-out crowd at Bramlage Coliseum on Wednesday night.

Although K-State hung with the Jayhawks by cutting a double-digit lead in the second half, the Wildcats are still winless all-time against Kansas since Bramlage opened in 1988. But don't worry Wildcat fans, there is a silver lining, as a former Jayhawk can't beat his newest rival.

North Carolina coach Roy Williams is still winless against Mike Krzyzewski and Duke. After losing 71-70, Wednesday, the Tarheels have lost four straight to the Blue Devils under "Huckleberry Hound."

STEROID WATCH

It's been a busy couple of days for Major League Baseball as two former Most Valuable Players have made headlines.

New York Yankees first baseman, Jason Giambi apologized Thursday to teammates, fans and everyone in general for using the "juice" for at least three seasons.

Even though he couldn't specifically say the word steroid, Giambi started and ended every sentence with the word sorry. It's entirely possible that he is sorry, but like my wife always says: "You've said sorry so much that I don't believe you when you say it."

Former "Bash Brother" Jose Canseco's tell-all book will be coming out soon and he says that he personally injected former Bash Brother, Mark McGwire, with 'roids when they were teammates in Oakland.

Now, I'm not saying McGwire did or did not use steroids, but I'm always skeptical of a player who gives up a home run off his head.

BLOODY RIDICULOUS

In other baseball news, the Hall of Fame is now the proud owner of the Boston Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling's blood-stained sock he wore during Game 2 of the 2004 World Series.

I understand the significance of the "red sock," but what is the world of memorabilia coming to?

Why not just hang a picture of Schilling wearing the sock during the game or play the video from the game?

Well, at least it's one less piece of laundry Mrs. Schilling has to do and besides, the "sock fairies" could get a hold of it.

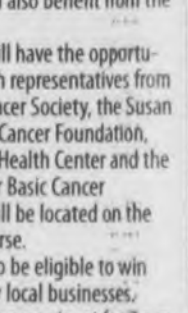
"Cats for the Cure" to be at women's basketball game

The K-State Athletic Department announced that for next Wednesday's women's basketball game against Texas, a portion of each ticket sold will go towards funding research and programs for the American Cancer Society.

Also, K-State's Relay for Life and Riley Country will also benefit from the promotion.

Also, fans will have the opportunity to speak with representatives from the American Cancer Society, the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation, Lafene Women's Health Center and the K-State Center for Basic Cancer Research, who will be located on the Bramlage concourse.



Fans will also be eligible to win prizes donated by local businesses.

Tipoff for the game is set for 7 p.m.

NHL | Heatley headed to Russia after guilty plea

MOSCOW — Dany Heatley signed with a Russian hockey team Thursday, less than a week after pleading guilty to charges in the 2003 death of Atlanta Thrashers teammate Dan Snyder and being sentenced to three years' probation.

Heatley

Heatley, MVP of the 2003 NHL All-Star Game, will join Atlanta's Ilya Kovalchuk with AK Bars Kazan, which has signed several NHL players during the league's lockout.

Heatley pleaded guilty Friday to second-degree vehicular homicide, driving too fast for conditions, failure to maintain a lane and speeding for the Sept. 29, 2003, crash in Atlanta.

CFB | Neuheisel testifies in lawsuit against Washington

KENT, Wash. — Rick Neuheisel took the stand in the trial of his lawsuit against the NCAA and University of Washington, telling jurors about his playing days at UCLA, his once-promising coaching career and how he spent the past two seasons away from college football.

Neuheisel

The former Huskies coach gave King County Superior Court jurors a biographical overview during his 45 minutes of testimony Wednesday. Neuheisel contends he was unfairly fired in June 2003.

He was expected to resume testifying on Thursday.

Tennis | Roddick wins 1st round match at SAP Open

SAN JOSE, Calif — Andy Roddick's title defense at the SAP Open got off to a positive start Wednesday night.

Roddick

Making his first appearance since a disappointing loss to Lleyton Hewitt in the Australian Open quarterfinals, the top-seeded Roddick dispatched fellow American Paul Goldstein, 6-3, 6-4, in the first round of the $380,000 hardcourt event.

The 22-year-old Roddick next faces Korean Hyung-Taik Lee, who beat American Jan-Michael Gambill in straight sets Tuesday.

NBA | Pacers pledge $2.4 million to local charities

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indiana Pacers have made an effort to turn a negative into a positive.

On Thursday, the Pacers announced a pledge of $2.4 million to 11 local charitable organizations helping youth. The money was derived from fines levied against five Pacers players for their roles in a brawl with fans during a November 19 game against the Detroit Pistons.

"While the incident in Auburn Hills is regrettable, we're pleased that some good can come out of this with the fine money being funneled back into our community," Pacers co-owner Herb Simon said. "We had the support of our players, the NBA and the National Basketball Players Association in making sure this money went to local charities."

Health center opens cardiac lab

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All it takes is one minute.

One minute to change the fate of a person's life – namely if that person is suffering a life-threatening heart condition.

Mercy Health Center opened a new cardiac catheterization laboratory this week, the first completed project under the community's three-part cardiac initiative plan.

The plan, which also includes the recruitment and hiring of a new interventional cardiologist as well as the purchase of new ultrasound equipment for pacemakers, is the result of a need for improved cardiology care in Manhattan, said April Hamilton, director of marketing and communications for Mercy.

In the past, residents with specific heart needs have had to travel to Topeka or Salina for care.

"Being this far away from Topeka and Salina, this is taking us to the next level as far as health care and services," Hamilton said. "Every minute you save could possibly save a person's life."

Joe Strano, director of radiology services at Mercy, said the new catheterization lab allows radiologists to do cardiac studies through x-ray tubes and cameras, in addition to conducting interventional radiology procedures.

"If a person has blood circulation problems in their legs, we can study them on the new table," Strano said.

The catheterization lab is typically used to make sure the blood flow is not blocked through the arteries of the heart.

"We're looking to see that there aren't any plaques restricting the blood flow or when you get fatty deposits that kind of cake on the outside of the artery," he said.

"We would be diagnosing that kind of condition."

The cardiac initiative was one of many plans under the hospital's large, $56 million three-phase expansion that started several years ago, Hamilton said.

Strano said the purchase of both the catheterization lab and new ultrasound equipment – which the hospital projects to purchase sometime in 2005 – will total close to $4 million. As a result, Mercy's Foundation, as well as community members, have been involved in numerous fund-raising efforts.

Charles Hughes, Mercy Community Health Foundation director, said fund-raising efforts for the cardiac initiative have been going on for the past year and a half.

He said so far, close to $600,000 has been raised, but projects the number to increase to $750,000 by the end of this month.

One current fund-raising project is the "A Dress the Heart" gala, planned for Feb. 20 at the Houston Street Ballroom.

All proceeds from the gala will go to the cardiac initiative, said Vera Hintz, chair of the gala committee. So far, 130 tickets have been sold, but Hintz said the goal is 300.

The gala is important because it supports a much-needed service in Manhattan, Hintz said.

"The closest place to taken care of right now if you have a heart issue is in Topeka or Salina," she said. "An hour's time can maybe save a life.

"It's just huge for the community to have the ability to take care of patients right here in Manhattan rather than put them on a helicopter."

County may get electronic voting

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County officials may be changing their voting machines to an electronic system.

The Help America Vote Act of 2002, was a response to the 2000 election and has certain requirements to ensure correct and valid voting, said Jesse Borjon, communications director for the secretary of state.

One of the requirements is that each polling site has at least one electronic voting machine so handicapped people can have an opportunity to correctly vote, Borjon said.

"Before, any person with a disability had to be assisted to vote," Borjon said. "With these machines, it will be an independent vote.

The requirement of having these machines in place won't take effect until the 2006 elections, Borjon said.

Since the law requires every voting place have at least one electronic polling machine, Riley County might convert to an all electronic system, said Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk and elections coordinator.

"Right now we have all manual machines," Campbell said. "With HAVA in effect, we will have to have an electronic system for the handicapped, and we'd already have the manual system for everyone else."

She said instead of having two systems, there has been talk to changing to just the one electronic system.

Borjon said the Secretary of State must certify the voting equipment that is used in the state. After that, the county selects from the approved machinery, he said.

"Right now we're interested in proposals that meet the requirements, but right now we're early in the process," Borjon said. "In fact, next month we will be looking at proposals for the voting machines.

The state would like to have more than one type of electronic voting machine, so the counties have options for their equipment.

"There are different kinds of voting machines," Campbell said. "There's a precinct counter that you submit your vote and it detects any errors or omissions and it gives you a second chance to review your vote."

Borjon said there were requirements that HAVA had in place for the 2004 election.

"We had educational requirements and ID requirements," Borjon said.

"As far as education is concerned, it was for election officials and the public."

Student Senate approves allocations to greek councils

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Funding of greek councils and promoting a sales tax were cause for debate at Student Senate Thursday night.

K-State Interfraternity Council and K-State Panhellenic Council received funds for travel after a week delay.

At last week's meeting, the groups' request for $800 each was in final action, but it was referred back to the Allocations Committee. Questions arose concerning whether the councils should be considered student groups.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said the councils are student groups because they have non-discrimination clauses.

She said they have been student groups for years, but she couldn't remember why specifically at last week's meeting.

Sen. Jason Heaser said the groups should not receive funding.

"To me, it's about whether or not this is a good expenditure for student fees, but I do not believe it is," he said.

Heaser said they should have travel worked into their budget, which is $54,000.

The budget pays for various events, including partial funding for the director of greek affairs.

Some groups are turned away for funding by not meeting the application deadline. Heaser said this was one reason to not provide funding for a group that could raise enough funds.

"Obviously, there's a finite amount of resources or else we'd be giving out more money," he said.

Sen. Trent Smith disagreed with Heaser.

The councils help out students that are not part of the greek system, which they don't have to do, he said.

"I don't see how this request is different than any others," Smith said.

Giving funds to the groups promotes what K-State students care about, like other groups, he said.

"It's their interest, and they are going to share what they have learned with the community," Smith said.

The bill passed 44-3, with one senator abstaining to vote.

Senate also discussed promoting the quarter-cent sales tax question, which will appear on the April 5 ballot if City Commission approves it Tuesday night.

The sales tax will provide funding for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 up to $54 million by October 2008 if passed. It will be .25 cents on every dollar for sales in Manhattan.

Sen. Ben Fenwick said the Senate should support the sales tax because the district needs it.

"The school districts are in a pretty tough bind," he said.

Sen. Tim Weninger said he wasn't in full support of the bill.

"I would support the referendum," he said. "That's like saying the quarter cent should be passed."

Chair Eleri Griffin said students should be encouraged to vote in favor of it.

She said by having a good school system Manhattan attracts better faculty members to K-State. Also, funding will help families in Manhattan who don't have much to live by.

"By encouraging this, we are not only encouraging students to be involved in the democratic process, but to vote in a way that will help them," Griffin said.

The motion passed 48-0.

Cycle popularity raises safety concerns

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are motorcycle clubs. There are motorcycle bars. There is even a motorcycle museum in Ellsworth, Kan.

Although the popularity of motorcycles is sweeping Kansas, motorcycle safety has not spread as rapidly.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, 49,000 motorcycles were registered in Kansas in 1999.

In 2003, the number of registrations had climbed to 51,130, said Bonnie Brown of the Kansas Division of Motor Vehicles.

The Kansas law requiring "that all persons less than 18 years of age wear a Department of Transportation-approved helmet while riding or operating a motorcycle" has provided ongoing controversy.

Despite the speculation that cheaper fuel and more convenient parking are significant reasons for increased motorcycle popularity, Matt Todd, technician for Central Harley-Davidson in Kansas City, Mo., said recreational enjoyment is the main reason spurring the popularity.

Chris Dawson, junior in mechanical engineering, agreed

"There's all these new TV shows out involving motorcycles, like American Choppers and motorcycle racing on sports channels," Dawson said.

"I kind of got the itch, so I went out and got one."

The motorcycle craze, however, has not contributed to an increase in helmet usage.

Data from the Kansas Department of Transportation cited motorcycle accidents had increased about 29.82 percent, from 627 to 814, between 1997 and 2003.

Research from KDOT also revealed that deaths on motorcycles rose from 17 in 1997 to 31 in 2003, while helmet usage in these deaths increased from three to 10.

While the rise in motorcycle deaths over the years is not in question, the option to wear a helmet while riding is.

Todd said even though he does feel safer in the city wearing a helmet, he believes adults should have the freedom to choose whether or not to wear one.

"In the last 21 years, there has been a dramatic improvements in motorcycle build," Todd said.

"There's been a line and crowd on both sides of this argument for a long time, and I think that if you have the experience, you shouldn't be forced to wear one."

Not only that, Todd said he does not support the theory that an increase in motorcycle usage has any direct relationship with the increase of motorcycle fatalities.

However, not only do Kansas' statistics disagree with Todd, but national statistics do as well.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, fatalities among motorcycle riders have increased in the United States by more than 73 percent since 1997.

Not only that, but the NHTSA estimates helmets saved the lives of 1,158 motorcyclists in 2003.

Dawson, who prefers to don a helmet, said he agrees with the validity of the statistics.

"I don't know why you would choose not to wear a helmet," Dawson said.

"Even a little fender bender can be deadly."

Colin Ratliff, senior in construction science, said while he knows he should wear a helmet, inconvenience is the main reason he chooses not to.

"When I'm riding around town, I don't wear a helmet because it feels uncomfortable," Ratliff said.

Online poker games entertain students

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Online poker is becoming more popular with students as a way to fit poker playing into individual schedules.

"It's more readily accessible and there are far more opponents to go up against," said John Aagaard, senior in mechanical engineering. "You can also play multiple tables at once. It's just quicker. It's there when you want – you don't have to try to gather people up to try and play."

Web sites such as www.collegepokerchampionship.com offer students an opportunity to play with others from almost anywhere. However, unlike other sites, www.collegepokerchampionship.com does not require any money to play.

"I liked it because it does not cost me any money to play, and I like it because I can win free money off of them," Aagaard said.

"I never put a dime into any online system, and I've made quite a bit of money off of it.

It's called a free-roll tournament, and if you place in the top so many, you get money."

Aagaard said he would then put the money he won back into other tables and build on it to make more money.

According to the Web site, participants only need to download the software, create an account and begin playing.

This site allows students at rival universities to compete against each other. K-State is going head-to-head with the University of Kansas and losing 705 points to 435 points as of Wednesday.

Courtney Bower, junior in mass communications, said she played because she could find games of her skill level whenever she wanted.

"It's easy to make a lot of money fast, and you can get a game whenever you want," Bower said. "I feel the money is an important factor, but I enjoy the challenge it provides."

Bower also said online poker playing was a cheap and easy way of practicing for other games.

Aagaard said he plays whenever he has a spare moment and that others should play, too.

"People like playing games, and a lot of people like playing card games," Aagaard said. "You can think of it as a strategy type game. There are risks and rewards and I think the rewards dominate the risks if played smartly."

K-State announces Truman Scholarship nominees

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has announced its four student nominees for the Harry S. Truman Scholarship.

The $30,000 scholarship is awarded to approximately 70-80 college students each year across the United States who are interested in public service.

James Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said the Truman Foundation looks for students who are involved in their communities and are ready to make a difference.

"They want students with a broad impact," Hohenbary said. "The foundation calls them 'change agents in society.'"

While many students come from a political science or pre-law background, Hohenbary says that applicants come from all backgrounds and directions to compete for the Truman Scholarship.

"The fit is very important," Hohenbary said. "They look at how much the student's goals line up with the Truman foundation."

The Truman Scholarship is awarded to students who have achieved a level of excellence in academics as well as strong interest and leadership in public service. K-State ranks first out of the 500 state universities that compete with 27 scholars and one alternate.

"We are proud of the number of students from K-State that have been selected," Hohenbary said. "It reflects on the students who want to go out and make a difference in the world."

Truman scholarship finalists will be announced on Feb. 22, and the interview process for finalists from Kansas will be in Kansas City on March 11.

The national application process usually begins the year before the scholar is scheduled to graduate to help applicants begin thinking about future plans, including graduate school and further education. Hohenbary said that the foundation wants to mentor students who are chosen, including a week of leadership training and summer internships with political leaders and public servants through the Washington Summer Institute.

This year's 2005 Truman Scholarship nominees are:

Laura Wood: senior in political science and philosophy from Lewis, Kan.
Why did you apply to become a Truman Scholar?
I first found out about it as a freshman, and I like public service. It's what I wanted to do since high school.
What kind of public service have you been involved with?
Most of what I've done revolves around government service. I've done a lot of representation on the state level, as well as things like Pack the Library and stuff like that.

Wood

How do you feel after being nominated?
First of all, very grateful. Now, it's just hard to tell. We're waiting, and I'm practicing interviewing and stuff like that.

Victoria Luhrs: senior in secondary education-history with a minor in leadership studies from Overland Park, Kan.
Why did you apply to become a Truman Scholar?
I was interested in education and how teachers really can make a difference. I'm not your normal Truman applicant.
What kind of public service have you been involved with?
I've grown up being involved. I'm the youth director for a senior high youth group, but my favorite part was doing mission work with them. Fifty teens and parents in Chicago.

Luhrs

I'm also currently interning in Topeka with one of the state senators who is on the education committee.
How do you feel after being nominated?
I'm thankful for the opportunity. It helps me figure out what I want to do.

Andrew Treaster: senior in political science and economics from Pretty Prairie, Kan.
Why did you apply to become a Truman Scholar?
I had quite a few friends who looked into it, so I decided to try it. After I talked with Jim Hohenbary, we decided that I should apply.
What kind of public service have you been involved with?
I have done the Olster Project, which is a peace project based on international relations between students from Northern Ireland and the United States.

Treaster

I've also done student government and have helped with Up 'til Dawn.
How do you feel after being nominated?
Last semester, I was really excited, but right now,
I've spent so much time looking over my application I'm relieved that it's over.

Patrice Holderbach: senior in print journalism and international studies with a minor in leadership studies from Topeka.
Why did you apply to become a Truman Scholar?
It was an opportunity I saw that aligned with my own interests.
What kind of public service have you been involved with?
I've been involved with programs including being a part of a Kansas Summer Team that promotes Kansas tourism in western Kansas. I've also helped with various other programs including the Lou Douglas lectures.
How do you feel after being nominated?
I feel very honored because I'm a journalism major and most nominees are political science. I'm really excited to help integrate what we are doing in mass communications with social issues.

"Ask a black dude" panel informs students

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three panelists answered questions to help break down stereotypes and misconceptions Thursday as part of "Ask a Black Dude."

"Ask A Black Dude" is a project designed by the American Ethnic Studies Student Association headed by president Kara Wilder, sophomore in speech. This event is part of a series designed by AESSA called the "Say What?" series. The series was created to make people aware of the diversity on campus, break down stereotypes and create intercultural dialogue on campus, Wilder said.

This panel is meant to grab people's attention by using a familiar format. The idea for "Ask A Black Dude" was based on the popular skit from "Chappelle's Show" featuring comedian Paul Mooney.

"I hope it catches peoples' interests and smashes stereotypes that a lot of people from small towns and areas in Kansas have about black people," said Nickia Delaware, freshman in criminology.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Nathan Jackson, senior in speech, answers a question during the "Ask a black dude" panel discussion Thursday afternoon in the K-State Student Union. The discussion was a part of a "Say What?" series.

The three panelists for "Ask A Black Dude" were Josh Criswell, sophomore in social science with an emphasis on diversity; Nathan Jackson, senior in speech; and Troy Steadham, senior in business.

"For the people who are willing to accept it, it will answer a lot of questions that people may not have had the opportunity to ask," Criswell said.

Don Saucier, assistant professor of psychologist, served as panel moderator.

"I'm here to give a context to the event. The humor of 'Chappelle's Show' gets in the way of the underlying message and my job is to make sure that underlying message gets across," Saucier said.

The panelists assured the audience that they were not representing all black people, but rather themselves, as individuals.

The panelists hoped that people would not feel they are representing anything other than themselves and that it would be illogical to suggest that they are.

"If I see a guy wearing a red shirt acting a certain way and the next day I see a different guy wearing a red shirt, I'm not going to assume he's going to act the same way," Jackson said.

Students targeted by Internet scams

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many illegitimate Internet scams can make money from unsuspecting people through sending a single e-mail.

Job offers are sent through e-mails for people to do surveys and get paid. However, people are skeptical of whether or not these surveys are real or just get-rich-quick schemes.

Tim Ramsey, information technology security coordinator for Computing and Network Services at K-State, said it is possible that they are legitimate, but some are just not a good idea.

"If it is legitimate, you have to ask yourself what is in it for the company," he said. "The potential for fraud is so great on the Internet. Why would you trust anything that would come through an e-mail?"

Ramsey said large multi-level markets send e-mails out for a cheap price. Markets such as Herb-life and Amway are where the e-mails generally originate.

"These companies send out thousands of e-mails with a push of a button and the right software," he said. "You get someone to give up their credit card number and the ad or e-mail is practically paid for. My advice is that if you receive an e-mail like that, delete it and move on."

Joyce Woodard, president of the Better Business Bureau for northeast Kansas, also said the surveys are a scam.

"There may be some that are legitimate, but the ones that offer you a new car are just not logical," she said.

The Better Business Bureau is a non-profit organization that generates business reliability reports, handles disputes between consumers and business and tracks various scams.

Woodard said the e-mails are sent from international companies. Companies tend to look at the group that needs the most money such as college students.

The company can get anyone's e-mail if they have signed up at Web sites on the Internet.

"You should be very careful to who you give sensitive information to," she said. "If you have ever purchased or downloaded anything and given your e-mail, these companies can get it."

Woodard said there is not a list available saying which survey companies are scams.

According to www.thereviewsite.com, which is compiled of comparisons for paid databases, most survey sites do not have free memberships. The cheapest site, Premium Surveys, was $29.89 to sign up. It received a 9.8 rating on the site's 10 point rating scale.

The site also included tips to protect users from scam artists. When thinking about signing up for a survey, look at the legitimacy and strength of the database, promptness, customer service and money-back guarantees.

A Web site that discusses online surveys, www.scam.com, is compiled of opinions from other users.

Most advised users to contact the survey company and ask as many questions as possible.

Sites tell people to post any questions and concerns about the survey by e-mail, Woodard said.

"You are not going to connect with them personally.

"And if you are wondering about signing up for a survey and e-mail your questions, then that site has your e-mail from now on," she said.

Program encourages individualism of students, faculty

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's SafeZone program encourages students, faculty and staff to embrace individual differences.

The program identifies and provides safe places and "allies" where those affected by homophobia, hateful acts and sexual violence can go for support.

The SafeZone program was started more than 20 years ago and is a volunteer-only organization. Any expenses encountered are paid for by the Women's Center, a SafeZone sponsor.

Mary Todd, assistant director of the Women's Center, said anyone may become an ally by registering online for the SafeZone Ally Training. Those who register will then go through an hour-long introductory training session and attend at least two advanced training programs.

Victor Force went through the training and is a graduate assistant at the Women's Clinic.

"I know people that have been attacked for being different and by getting involved in the organization, the university will become safer for all people," he said.

Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center, said SafeZone encourages those who have been victims to report it to the police or a SafeZone ally.

"People mistakenly think that it is their problem when it is really society's problem," Allen said. "We're trying to make it easier for them."

Any information that is reported to the allies is kept strictly confidential unless that person wants to report the incident.

The organization's goal is to create greater awareness of SafeZone and its benefits.

To achieve this, Todd said they are pushing to include information on the program in student orientation packages and also in recruitment material that is sent to prospective students.

In the future, Todd said she hopes to enlist the K-State Police in SafeZone training and make them allies, too.

SafeZone will hold an introductory training session on Feb. 22, followed by two advanced training sessions on March 2 and March 16. On April 3, SafeZone will also be participating in the Second Annual Community Walk for Safety and Justice.

To close out the Season of Nonviolence, there will be a "Date with Hate" on May 13–14, which is a graduation rally.

Todd said the program was expanded in response to recent incidents in which people did not know where they could turn for help, including international students dealing with hate crimes.

"Other-cultured students may not be as familiar with bringing their problems to other people, and we want to reach out to those other students," Todd said.

There are currently 212 SafeZone allies on campus and as this number continues to grow, so will the fight against hate.

Allen said that by joining SafeZone, everyone can make a difference in stopping sexual assault, hate crimes and prejudice.

"We live in a small enough community that we can have an impact on the culture we live in," Allen said. "If enough of us decide that we want to live in a safe community, we can do it."

Leaving something to the imagination

By Kt McBratney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Halloween isn't the only holiday to play dress-up. Valentine's Day brings its own attire and a different kind of trick or treat.

"Lingerie is one of the first things people think of when they think of Valentine's Day. It's sexy and romantic, and it makes a great gift," said Shannon Greenwood, store manager of Victoria's Secret in Manhattan Town Center.

While the idea of lingerie itself may be hot enough for some, men do have some ideas on what they'd like their partners to wear.

"Most guys want to see something revealing that still leaves something to the imagination. You can't go wrong with wearing red or black either," said Mark Pelcak, sophomore in computer engineering.

"Guys like lingerie that accentuates curves, but nothing too burlesque or uncomfortable looking," said Tim Taylor, junior in theater. "If I'm paying on Valentine's Day, I better like it."

Patricia Yeager, owner of Patricia's Undercover in Aggieville said how a woman feels wearing the lingerie is the most important thing to consider.

Typically, sexy sleepwear in red, black or white are the most popular items at both stores, but new and different items are popular each year.

"The big focus is on panties this year. There's a huge selection of fun and flirty panties with romantic sayings, faux fur and even diamonds," Greenwood said. Jeweled thongs are hot items at Patricia's Undercover as well.

New colors are also popping up. Yeager is seeing shades of blue gaining popularity, while yellow and pink are the trendy colors at Victoria's Secret. Greenwood said polka dots and cherries are the season's hottest patterns.

For those shopping for a sexy gift, Yeager and Greenwood agree that knowing the correct sizes is the biggest help. Greenwood suggests also knowing your partner's favorite colors and current wardrobe. Both agree gift certificates are safe bets for uncertain shoppers.

"Gift certificates are good. It's OK for the girl to buy it herself. She's more likely to find something she'll feel comfortable in and to get the right sizes," said Erica Townsend, senior in marketing.

"And don't forget a gift receipt because chances are he'll get it wrong. But girls know it's really the thought that counts," Townsend said.

U.S. Senate passes class action lawsuit limitations

By Jesse J. Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Senate gave President Bush the first legislative victory of his second term by approving legislation to help shield businesses from major class action lawsuits on Thursday.

Under the legislation, long sought by big business, large multistate class action lawsuits like the ones brought against tobacco companies could no longer be heard in small state courts. Such courts have handed out multi-million dollar verdicts.

Instead, the cases would be heard by federal judges, who have not proven as open to those type of lawsuits.

The Senate passed the bill 72-26. The House is expected to take it up next week and send it to President Bush for his signature.

Bush and other bill supporters – who have pushed for the legislation for almost six years – say it is needed because greedy lawyers have taken advantage of the state system by filing frivolous lawsuits in state courts where they know they can get big verdicts.

Senators who back the bill say lawyers make more money from such cases than do the actual victims, and that lawyers sometimes threaten companies with class action lawsuits just to get quick financial settlements. Regular people, they assure, will not lose their day in court.

The bill "is designed to rein in the lawsuit abuses, and it does just that," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn. "A plaintiff may end up in federal court, yes, rather instead of state court, but no citizen will lose his or her right to bring a case."

Opponents say Bush and other bill supporters are trying to help businesses escape proper judgments for their wrongdoing – and also to hurt the trial lawyers who litigate the cases, some of whom are big Democratic contributors.

"Are there bad lawyers that bring meritless cases? Sure there are, and we should crack down on them," said Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid of Nevada, a former trial lawyer. "But this bill is not about punishing bad lawyers. It is about hurting consumers and helping corporations avoid liability for misconduct."

Bush and other supporters say the bill, which would send most multistate class action lawsuits to federal court instead of allowing them to be heard in state courts, is needed because lawyers try to file lawsuits in friendly jurisdictions where they are most likely to get large payouts.

The bill's aim "is to make sure when companies are called on the carpet, when they are involved in a class action litigation, they're in a court, in a courthouse with a judge where the companies have a fair shake, where the odds, the decks aren't stacked against them," said Sen. Tom Carper, D-Del.

Changing the legal system – including class action lawsuits, medical malpractice lawsuits and asbestos injury lawsuits – has been a priority of Bush and the business community.

"The reason why this bill is the highest priority of the Bush administration and the Republican leadership in Congress is because of one simple fact: Class action suits moved from state courts to federal court are less likely to go forward, to be tried, and they are less likely to reach a verdict where someone wins or loses," said Senate Democratic Whip Richard Durbin, D-Ill.

"And if the plaintiffs win, businesses are 'less likely to pay a reasonable amount of money in federal court than in state court.'"

The GOP-controlled Senate struck a deal with the House saying if senators passed the bill unchanged, representatives would approve the bill as-is and send it to the White House to be signed into law.

So senators fought off several Democratic amendments, including changes that would have blocked federal judges from throwing out complicated multistate class action lawsuits.

North Korea rejects disarmament

By Sang-Hun Choe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Korea announced for the first time Thursday it has nuclear weapons, and it rejected moves to restart disarmament talks anytime soon, saying the bombs are protection against an increasingly hostile United States.

The communist state's statement dramatically raised the stakes in the 2-year-old nuclear confrontation and posed a grave challenge to President Bush, who started his second term with a vow to end North Korea's nuclear program through six-nation talks.

"We...have manufactured nukes for self-defense to cope with the Bush administration's evermore undisguised policy to isolate and stifle the (North)," the North Korean Foreign Ministry said in a statement carried by the state-run Korean Central News Agency. The news agency used the colloquial term "nukes" in its English-language account.

The claim could not be independently verified. North Korea expelled the last U.N. nuclear monitors in late 2002. It is not known to have tested an atomic bomb, although international officials have long suspected it has one or two nuclear weapons.

The CIA has estimated that with a highly enriched uranium weapons program and the use of sophisticated high-speed centrifuges, North Korea could be making more.

Pope returns to Vatican

By Victor L. Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Waving to crowds from his brightly lit popemobile, Pope John Paul II returned to the Vatican Thursday after a 10-day hospital stay, declared cured of breathing spasms that fueled concerns about the frail pontiff's ability to remain in charge of the Roman Catholic Church.

The pope's return – a hastily arranged procession with a touch of pageantry designed to show the world he has recovered – was broadcast live on Italian television.

Hundreds of well-wishers, including doctors and nurses, applauded as the pope, in his usual white robes, was driven slowly out of the hospital grounds. John Paul looked weary as he sat in the back, accompanied by two aides, and raised his arms to bless the throngs along the 2 1/2-mile route to the Vatican.

Faithful lined the streets around the Vatican as the papal motorcade drove through floodlit St. Peter's Square, through the Arch of the Bells and into the Vatican. Shouts of "Viva il Papa!" – "Long Live the Pope!" – rang out from the crowd.

Papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said the pope had recovered completely from the breathing crisis following influenza that led to his urgent hospitalization at Rome's Gemelli Polyclinic on Feb. 1, and that his general condition was continuing to improve.

Navarro-Valls said a battery of tests, including a CT scan – a three-dimensional X-ray – had ruled out any new illnesses.

He said it was too soon to say what the pope's schedule will be like, but it seemed likely he would appear at his apartment window overlooking St. Peter's Square to offer his Sunday blessing – an appointment so important to the pontiff that he felt strong enough to do it while in the hospital.

"When he gets back to the Vatican, he will look over and decide with his doctors what his appointments will be," Navarro-Valls told reporters after releasing the medical bulletin at noon Thursday.

The Vatican maintains a small medical unit to assist the pope, as well as an unmarked ambulance that was used for the late-night rush to the hospital after John Paul suffered what a Vatican official called a "breathing crisis."

John Paul's return coincides with a traditional Lenten period of spiritual reflection for the pontiff, with no public ceremonies scheduled next week.

The pope, who turns 85 in May, has been in declining health for some years, with Parkinson's disease and knee and hip ailments limiting his speech and physical activity. Still, he had not missed a scheduled audience for 16 months until he came down with the flu on Jan. 30, two days before aides rushed him to the hospital.

Iraq car bomb kills 50 Thursday

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A car bomb detonated by remote control exploded Thursday in Baghdad, killing two Iraqis but missing a U.S. military convoy as insurgent violence claimed more than 50 lives. Clashes between Iraqi police and rebels erupted along a major highway southeast of the capital.

With violence on the rise after the Jan. 30 election, Iraqi officials announced they would seal the country's borders for five days this month around a major Shiite religious holiday. Last year during the holiday, about 180 people were killed in suicide attacks at Shiite shrines.

The car bomb detonated on Tahrir Square in the heart of Baghdad, shattering the vehicle and setting several other cars on fire. At least two Iraqis were killed and two others were wounded, U.S. military spokesman Lt. Col. James Hutton said.

An American military patrol had just passed through the area but there were no U.S. casualties, Hutton said.

Most of the violence Thursday targeted Iraq's security forces, part of an apparent insurgent campaign to undermine public confidence after police and soldiers managed to prevent catastrophic attacks during the elections.

The biggest attack occurred in Salman Pak, 12 miles southeast of Baghdad, when insurgents attacked Iraqi policemen who came to look for weapons, showering them with machine-gun fire, rocket-propelled grenades and mortar rounds, police said.

Iraq's Interior Ministry said 14 policemen were killed, 65 were wounded and six were missing after the two-hour gunbattle. Four insurgents also died in the fighting, the ministry said.

American troops evacuated some of the wounded, the U.S. command said, and residents said American helicopters were prowling the skies.

"We were on patrol to search for weapons," wounded policeman Waad Jassim said from his hospital bed. "When we arrived, they opened heavy fire at us. There were many of them, and some were charging out of houses."

Elsewhere, bodies of 20 Iraqi truck drivers who had been shot were found dumped on a road, their hands bound behind their backs, police Capt. Ahmed Ismail said. Some of the trucks were owned by the government, Ismail said.

Gunmen fired on an Iraqi police patrol Thursday in Baqouba, north of Baghdad, triggering a gunbattle that killed a civilian and wounded two police officers.

Prince Charles announces plans to marry girlfriend Camilla Bowles

By Audrey Woods
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thirty years after their first romance, Prince Charles and Camilla Parker Bowles, both now graying divorcees, will finally wed in a civil ceremony and put the official seal on a relationship Princess Diana blamed for the breakdown of her marriage to the man who would be king.

In a nod to those who have not warmed to Parker Bowles, the royal family said Thursday she will never hold the title of queen but eventually will be called HRH Princess Consort instead.

But usually reserved Charles seemed overjoyed simply to be able to take her as his wife.

"I'm very excited," the prince said as he entered London's storied Goldsmith's Hall and looked at wedding rings.

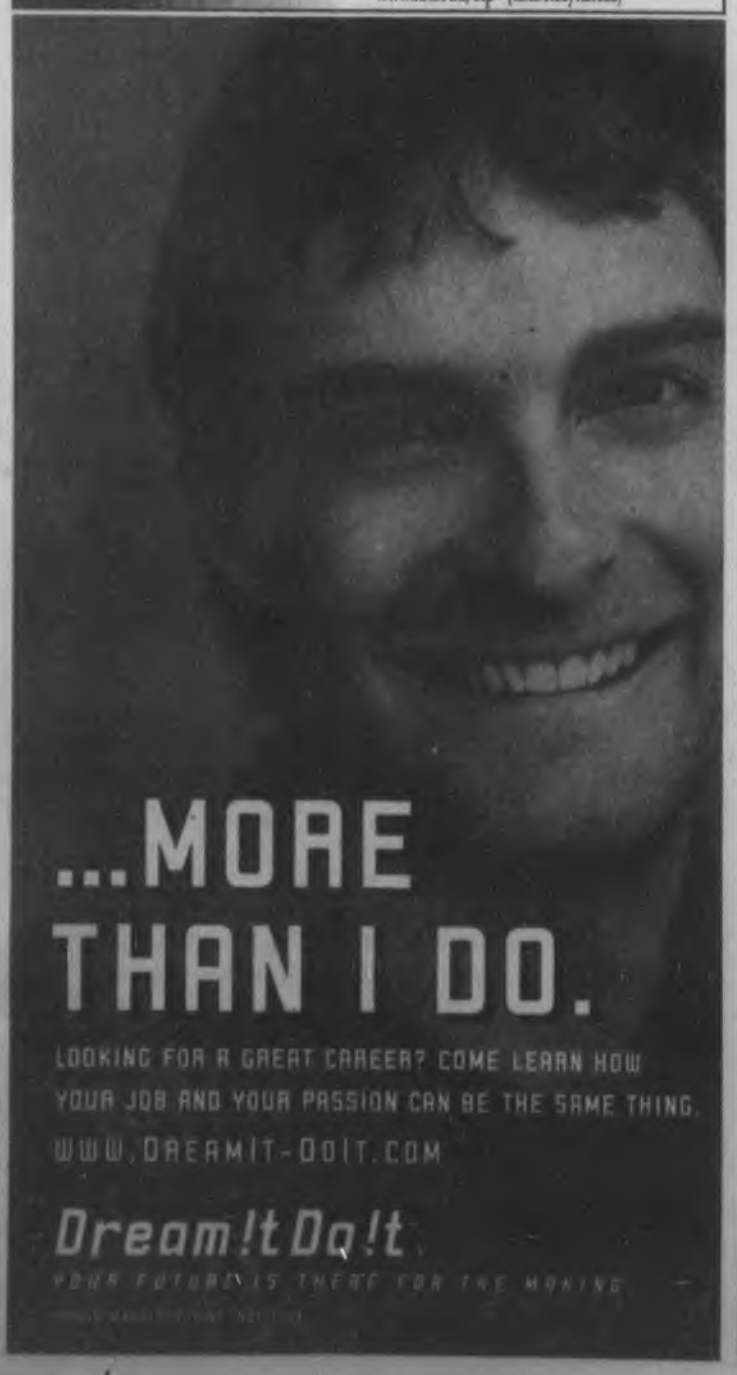
In their first public appearance together since the announcement, Charles, 56, and Parker Bowles, 57, smiled broadly as they walked into a Windsor Castle reception Thursday night, and the guests applauded.

A radiant Parker Bowles, wearing a fuchsia gown, showed off her engagement ring against a black clutch bag.

The platinum band, a royal family heirloom, has a square-cut central diamond with three diamond baguettes on each side.

"Of course," she said when asked by a reporter if Charles had gotten down on one knee to propose. "I'm just coming down to Earth."

The April 8 ceremony at Windsor Castle will be a far cry from the pageantry of Charles' 1981 wedding to Lady Diana Spencer at St. Paul's Cathedral.



Divorce is a delicate issue for the man who would be head of the Church of England.

The news of the nuptials was received with warmth in Britain, where public opinion was once so hostile to Parker Bowles that shoppers pelted her with rolls.

The House of Commons burst into cheers at the news, and ordinary Britons offered their congratulations.

"We are both very happy for our father and Camilla, and we wish them all the luck in the future," Prince William, 22, and Prince Harry, 20, said in a statement.

Monologues explore women's issues, raise money for V-Day beneficiaries

By Caroline M. Watkins and Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With more than 2,000 V-Day events taking place around the world this February, K-Staters won't be the only group working to end violence against women.

That is the mission of V-Day, a grassroots organization formed in 1997. K-State's Union Program Council is planning a week of events to help the cause. One of the most anticipated parts of the V-Day events is the production of "The Vagina Monologues."

Mary Renee Smith, senior in speech, said practice has been very different.

"It's a very diverse cast; older students and younger students, students of different races," Smith said. "It's taken us a while to get comfortable with the rehearsal and it's been a very interesting process."

Eve Ensler, author of "The Vagina Monologues," based her piece on candid interviews she conducted with over 200 women about their sexual histories. The monologues explore issues ranging from menstruation to rape and childbirth to the objectification of women.

To keep Ensler's monologues accurate, all actors will have scripts on stage, said Smith.

"We've put together the plan in three weeks. Most plays get 6-10 weeks, so to make sure that we are true to the material, we are using scripts," she said.

In 1997, Ensler made "The Vagina Monologues" available to any group wanting to perform it in support of V-Day, free of licensing fees.

Zach Hauser, one of K-State's V-Day event planners, the Union Program Council hopes to raise $12,000 this year through their V-Day events.

The money raised will benefit the Manhattan Crisis Center, K-State's Women Center, and this year's V-Day national spotlight, the women of Iraq.

Hauser said audience members will have the opportunity to talk with the director Ginny Pape and the all-female cast after the production.

If you go
"Vagina Monologues"
When: 8 tonight and Saturday, 2 p.m. Sunday
Where: Forum Hall
How much: Tickets are $5.

Smith said she is excited about performing in front of the audience.

"I'm excited to see the audience reactions. Some are very touching, some are funny, and some are moving," she said. "I've enjoyed this show immensely. I've been at K-State for a while, and I have a daughter, and this is one of the most fun things I've been in."

Mary Renee-Smith,senior in speech, works though her monologue during practice for The Vagina Monologues. Tickets for the show are on sale in the Union Program Council Office for $5.

More adventurous, 3rd release from Indie band

"More Adventurous"
Album review by Jessica Grant

Rilo Kiley's release "More Adventurous" was critically noted in many "Best of 2004" lists. But, it's not 2004, so why review this album now?

Well, time and money dictate that only so many reviews can be tackled by a college journalist in one semester. Unfortunately, this album never graced the pages of the Collegian.

"More Adventurous" is the third release from Rilo Kiley and, while it is not necessarily more adventurous than their last release (2002's "The Execution of all Things"), this album is more ambitious than anything than the band has done.

Rilo Kiley, as a musical endeavor, could seem to some like a self-serving side project. The band is compromised of two former child actors, Jenny Lewis ("The Wizard"), and Blake Sennett ("Boy Meets World" and "Salute Your Shorts"). However, unlike such self-indulgent flop bands as Keanu Reeves' Dogstar, Rilo Kiley is actually good. In fact, it's probably safe to call Rilo Kiley great.

Fans of the Postal Service may also recognize lead singer Lewis' vocals from a Death Cab for Cutie side project.

Rilo Kiley is an indie rock band that plays their own blend of country-tinged pop that is completed by Lewis' tart vocals.

One of the most unique features of Kiley is their ability to tell stories. Songs explore everything from the topics of heartbreak and love, to loneliness, sex, and the taboo topic of a woman in love with a married man.

On the first track, "It's a Hit," Rilo Kiley cleverly mixes personal and political in a song that is both an anti-Bush tune and a reflection on stardom. This nearly perfect pop song is completed by the whimsical violins and distinct trumpet trills.

"Does He Love You" is an gorgeous ballad that slowly builds like an uncontrollable sob. When Lewis moans, "Your husband will never leave you for me," it is a depressing revelation that highlights one of the finest points of the album.

While Lewis' voice serves as an emotional outlet for Rilo Kiley, it must be noted that all players on the album are at an apex of form.

The lyrical content of the album is a bit dark, but the overall portrait the album creates is one of hope.

"More Adventurous" could be the break-out album from a band worthy of critical acclaim.

MOVIES

BASKETBALL | Texas road trip

Tuesday's 88-79 loss at Colorado capped a three-game stretch in which Texas has given up an average of 90 points per game.

One bright spot for the Longhorns has been the play of junior forward Brad Buckman, who is averaging 23.5 points and 18 rebounds in his last two games.

While Texas has had a problem giving up points, the Wildcats have had difficulty scoring them.

K-State has not scored 70 or more points since a 74-54 win at home against Missouri on Jan. 15.

Coming out slow to start the game has been a key to those low-scoring games.

"We've got to minimize our mistakes," Peete said. "We've got to come out a little more fired up in the first half, and we've got to have more runs than slumps."

Peete was one Wildcat who did come out strong against Kansas, leading the team with eight points in the first half.

Behind a 6-of-9 performance from behind the three-point line, he finished the game tied with senior Jeremiah Massey for a team-high 20 points.

"I was really pleased with his overall performance and how he carried himself out there," said Coach Jim Wooldridge.

"He's going to be a better player as he goes with time and age, and I think that was a good step in the right direction for him."

Saturday's game carries large ramifications for the Wildcats, as the team turns around and hits the road again for a Tuesday game at red-hot Iowa State, winner of its last four.

To duplicate last year's 58-48 win over then-No. 10 Texas would no doubt be a good way to stop the bleeding.

"They're disappointed about (Wednesday night)," Wooldridge said.

"They're going to play two games in four days, so we're going to have to get a quick turnaround here and get going."

Wildcats looking for 1st win in Fayetteville

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite being shut out 7-0 last weekend in the 'Ole Miss Classic, the K-State women's team is not looking to change, said coach Steve Bietau.

The reason is a simple one.

"We're trying to focus on playing well again," Bietau said.

However, the injury big has hit the Wildcats, making focusing a little tougher.

The Wildcats (1-2) lost Olga Klimova to an ACL-injury against Brigham Young on Jan. 28.

Klimova, who was playing the No. 4 position and contending for the No. 3, was expected to play a big role this season.

"Olga's injury is a serious blow to the team," Bietau said. "Her absence impacts everyone, and it will take a while for everyone to adapt."

Bietau said the Wildcats have been thrown into an unexpected "new world", and it will be a challenge to prepare the team to play without Klimova.

Wildcats' first match without Klimova was last weekend against Mississippi, which the Wildcats lost 7-0.

Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia, who suffered her first defeat this season in both singles and doubles against 'Ole Miss, said she did not like the taste of defeat.

"I am just very disappointed with myself," Kvaratskhelia said. "I know I could've played better."

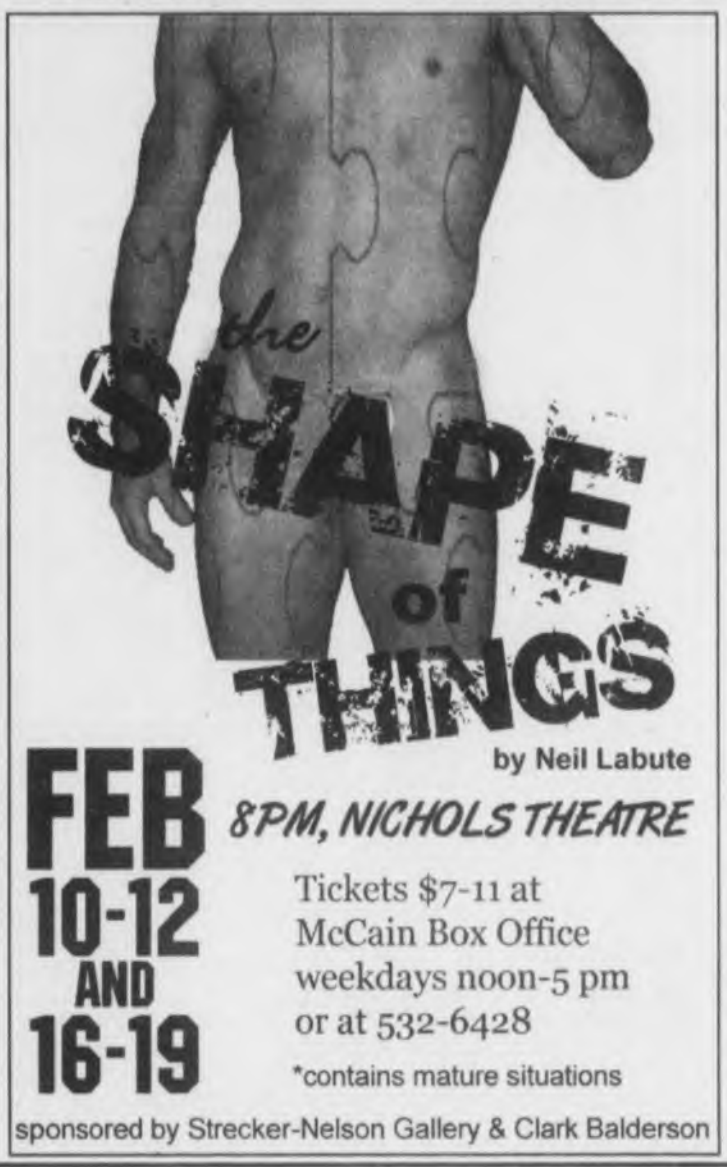
What was most frustrating for Kvaratskhelia, however, was the mental component in her losses against 'Ole Miss.

"I let my opponent get under my skin. That is what made all the difference," Kvaratskhelia said. "I learned a lot from that match."

The loss to Mississippi is behind the Wildcats, however, and focus this past week has been on their match Saturday against Arkansas (5-0) in Fayetteville, Ark.

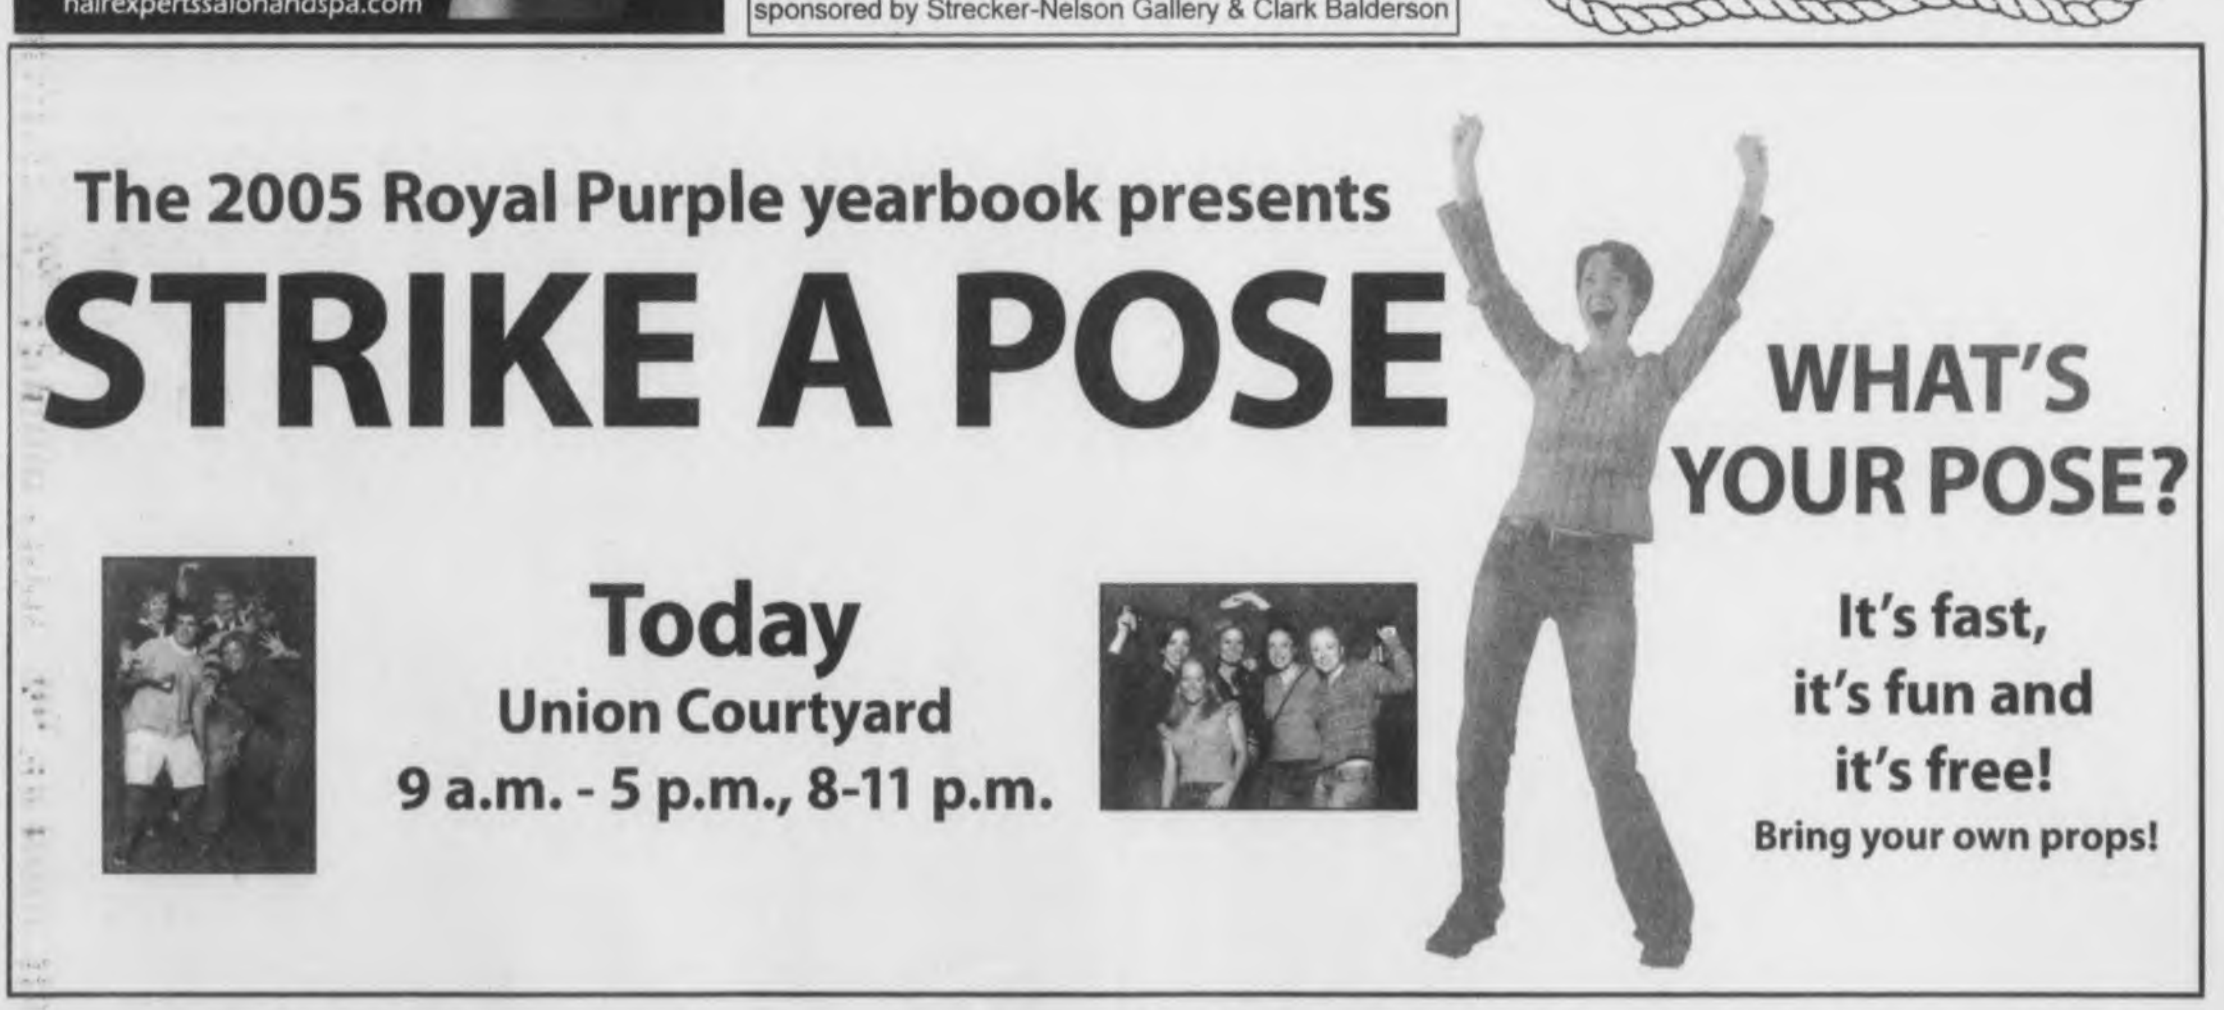
"It's time to get back in the swing of things," Bietau said. "The real test will be to go back at it this weekend and see if we've gotten any better."

While K-State has only had a few days to regroup, Bietau said it has been an intense few days in practice.



"It's not a competition in practice to see who looks better," Bietau said. "At this point, it's about who is playing better in matches.

For the time being, Rosenberg and Kvaratskhelia are locked in at the No. 1 and No. 2 positions, respectively.



"It's going to take more than one match to change Maria and Tamar's positions," Rosenberg said.

As K-State heads South once again, they are hoping to redeem their 1-8 record against the Razorbacks and their 0-4 record in Fayetteville.

ADOPTION | Kansas law allows access to adopted children's records allowing adopted children to obtain information without the birth parents' consent could violate the rights of the parents, especially birth mothers.

"It's just a fact that many birth mothers make adoption decisions with the promise of privacy and confidentiality," Allen said. "If you take that right away from women, we feel in many instances it will limit their options."

Allen said many people focus only on the rights of the adopted children and few think about the right to privacy of the parents.

Tina Anthony, post adoption specialist for Social and Rehabilitative Services, said that parental privacy is still maintained, at least in the Kansas process.

Adopted children may be told identifying information, but SRS won't release any information as to the parents' whereabouts unless the birth parents have given consent.

Allen said that very few adopted children even try to find information about their birth parents. He said 85 to 95 percent never search for their parents.

Chapel said even if adopted children find out who their birth parents are, they won't necessarily get a face-to-face meeting. She said the child might decide not to pursue it, or the parent might not agree to it.

opportunity to show their appreciation for the soldiers and what they have done.

"When the soldiers come home, this is an opportunity for them to have closure and this is a way to say 'thank you' for what they have done," Moser said. "This allows families to come. This is an opportunity for everyone else to say 'thank you' and say 'welcome home.'"

Attending the ceremony will be the Adjutant General, Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting, and Brig. Gen. Jonathan Small, the Assistant Adjutant General - Army and commander of the Kansas Army National Guard.

While in Iraq, Staff Sgt. Clinton Lee Wisdom, 39, of Atchison, Kan., and Spc. Don Clary, 21, of Troy, Kan., died when they moved their vehicle between a convoy they were protecting and an Iraqi-driven vehicle, which exploded.

The two soldiers, both from battery B, were the first two combat deaths from the Kansas Army National Guard since the Vietnam War.

Headquartered in Hiawatha, Kan., the battalion has units in Abilene, Atchison, Concordia, Marysville, Horton, Sabetha, Salina and Troy, Kan.

COLUMN | Editor tells personal story of finding birth parents, siblings; discovery changes perspective

to Tammy for a while, she asked me if I even wanted to be in contact with my birth father and that she hadn't seen him since before I was born.

I told her I was interested in talking to him, and she said she would see what she could do.

After talking to Tammy for two hours, I was emotionally drained and couldn't believed what had just happened.

Five minutes later, my phone rang again.

A man on the other line said, "Abbie, this is your birth father Chip; Tammy got in contact with my father and gave him your number to give to me."

Both Chip and Tammy wanted to come visit me. For Chip, money was not a problem, but for Tammy, that was not the case.

She didn't have enough money to get a plane ticket to come, and I didn't have the money to get her one.

That night, I went over to my high school friends' house.

When I got there, they each gave me a check, more than enough to buy a plane ticket so I could meet my birth mother.

The following week, both Chip and Tammy came to visit me at different times as they did not want to see each other. It was an experience that I will never forget. I learned that I have seven half brothers and sisters. At the end of the week when they were both gone, it was hard to fathom what had just happened and how my life would be changed forever.

Throughout the past year, I have stayed in contact with Tammy periodically but have no contact with Chip. I do communicate with Tyler, my 12-year-old half brother from Chip, talk to him on the phone and visit him frequently.

When I look back over the past year, I wonder how I survived without going crazy. It has been a major eye-opener as to how lucky I am to have been given up for adoption. I looked at being adopted as being a burden without knowing how blessed I was.

My adopted parents are the most loving people in the world.

Meeting my birth parents answered the questions I had, repaired relationships that needed to be fixed and most of all, made me appreciate the sacrifices my adopted parents made to give me the best life possible.

able and are only accessible by pedestrian walkways.

The anticipated cost of the security force and materials has reached $25,414, Rogers said.

"We are prepared and anticipating a launch date in the near future," he said.

The flight has been delayed several times since its original takeoff date of Jan. 6 due to weather conditions. The weather needs to be high pressure, cold air and calm winds.

The flight team monitors the jet stream across the world in the flyer's path.

While the flight preparations are costing the city time and money, the publicity is worth it. Gerald Cook, president of the Salina Chamber of Commerce, said he expects the effects of the GlobalFlyer will translate into more jobs for the community.

"It's worth millions and millions of dollars for the community in the way of publicity," he said.

Three hundred news media have requested credentials including some as far away as India and Japan.

The Discovery Channel and National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" have produced reports from Salina.

"It's exposure in the world media, and that's the real benefit in the community to Salina," Cook said. "We get daily media reports where Salina's name is mentioned literally in media outlets around the world."

Salina officials prepared proposals requesting to be the launch site for the record attempt nearly two years ago.

"This isn't just something that drops in your lap," Cook said. "They could have located mission control anywhere in the world."

Cook said Salina was chosen not only because of its long runway but also the opportunity for corporation with K-State aviation students to help manage mission control during the flight.

The preparations have had minimal disruption for Salina students, K-State-Salina Dean Dennis Kuhlman said.

Several mission control workers will be sleeping in the residence halls, but most of the flight team will stay in hotels.

"We have tried to make sure we didn't displace any of our students," Kuhlman said.

Because of all the flight delays, students have had the opportunity to have hands-on learning.

Kuhlman said construction classes were able to visit mission control this week to analyze the wiring and telephone requirements.

Computer networking students learned the complexity of running the computers 24 hours a day.

For now, the Salina campus is quiet.

But, once the cameramen, reporters and spectators land, Kuhlman said he expects a more chaotic atmosphere.

"We're ready," he said. "A couple of weeks ago, I wouldn't have been able to say that, but I sleep at night now."

44th Fort Riley soldier dies serving in Iraq

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Another Fort Riley soldier died in Iraq Tuesday.

Specialist Jeffrey Henthorn, 25, of Choctaw, Okla., died from non-combat related injuries Tuesday in Balad, Iraq.

The number of Fort Riley soldiers who have died while serving in Iraq is now up to 44.

Deb Skidmore, deputy public affairs officer for Fort Riley, said they do not know what kind of non-combat related injuries Henthorn died from.

"There is an investigation going on to find out," she said.

Henthorn worked for Fort Riley's 24th Transportation Company as a heavy vehicle operator.

He was deployed to Iraq in December 2004 and had been stationed at Fort Riley since August 2003. Henthorn enlisted in the Army in July 2003 after five years in the Army National Guard.

Henthorn is survived by three children.

Skidmore said there will be a memorial service for Henthorn; however, no date has been set.

Currently, about 4,300 soldiers from Fort Riley are stationed in Iraq. More than 1,455 U.S. soldiers have died in Iraq as of Friday.

Soldiers honored for duty in Iraq

Although the weather in Manhattan was dismal Saturday, the mood in Bramlage Coliseum was anything but.

Family, friends and the Manhattan community were invited to welcome home the 350 members of the 2nd Battalion of the 130th Field Artillery of the Kansas Army National Guard Saturday. The soldiers returned to Fort Riley Sunday, Feb. 4, after being stationed in Iraq since December 2003.

A crowd of about 1,400 attended the ceremony to honor the soldiers and pay tribute to the lives of Staff Sgt. Clinton Lee Wisdom, 39, of Atchison, Kan., and Spc. Don Clary, 21, of Troy, Kan., who died in duty during a security mission.

The duo placed their vehicle in front of an Iraqi vehicle to protect a convoy they were assigned to.

Nathan Gray, who was also involved in the mission with Wisdom and Clary, survived but was seriously wounded. Donning crutches and a neck brace, Gray made his way to the stage, where he was awarded a Purple Heart for bravery.

Lt. Col. Michael Dittamo, commander of the 2-130th Field Artillery, spoke of the heroic duties the soldiers performed in Baghdad and in the three missions the unit carried out. He emphasized the valiant efforts of Wisdom and Clary and said how greatly the two will be missed.

"I don't know when, but we're going to have a fishing tournament in honor of these two fishermen," Dittamo said. "And I am willing to bet you will all be there."

Maj. Gen. Tod Bunting, the adjutant general for Kansas, also praised the soldiers, thanking them for risking their lives to protect others.

K-State among Big 12 worst in graduation rates

By Lacey Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stay in school – it's the common battle cry of educators, professionals and parents across the nation.

But many colleges and universities nationwide have struggled with the number of students who do not return each year to complete degrees.

According to The Education Trust, a non-profit organization that compiles and compares graduation rates of universities throughout the country, K-State's overall six-year graduation rate was 56.2 percent in 2003.

In comparison, some of the following Big 12 schools had these overall six-year graduation rates in 2003: Oklahoma State University, 58.3 percent; the University of Kansas, 58.1 percent; the University of Colorado, 67.8 percent; and the University of Missouri, 66.5 percent.

In K-State's own retention survey, compiled by the Department of Planning and Analysis, the percent of returning students is consistently increasing. Students starting in 1994 had a second-year return rate of about 75 percent, and this number increased with the returning freshmen class of 2003, with about 80 percent of students returning.

Rain and water temperatures of 32 degrees Fahrenheit didn't keep plungers or spectators away from the Polar Bear Plunge Saturday at Tuttle Creek Lake.

Students, Manhattan residents and members of the military were among the 28 participants who braved the cold water to raise money for Kansas Special Olympics in Manhattan's first Plunge since 1998.

"I didn't expect this much of a turnout," Riley County Police Department detective Sonia Gregoire said. "It was overwhelming."

Participants raised $75 in donations and received a Polar Bear Plunge sweatshirt and the opportunity to jump in Tuttle Creek Lake.

Sharita Lacey, who dressed as a polar bear bride, said she signed up for the Plunge because the Special Olympics is a good cause and the Plunge provided a photograph opportunity.

"Wearing a swimsuit would be boring, at least for me," Lacey, freshman in animal science and industry, said. "It was something crazy where I could put myself out there."

Costume and all, however, she was still anxious about the water temperature.

"(I'm) a little nervous because it's 32 degrees in the water, but I can suck it up," she said.

Participants lined up for a group photograph and then sprinted into the water on the crowd's count. RCPD members lined an area of the water to ensure everyone's safety. Heated tents were available to warm participants after they exited the water.

After the plunge, Nick Johnson, Manhattan resident, shivered as he wrapped himself in a robe.

"There's nothing compared to when you first jump in," he said.

Johnson raised $75 as a representative of the St.

Jayhawks win in Bramlage

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Jeremiah Massey tries to keep control of the ball as KU's Aaron Miles plays defense Wednesday Feb. 9 at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State lost 74-65.

Despite all of the hype and the sell-out crowd, K-State lost to No. 3-ranked University of Kansas Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum, extending the Wildcats' losing streak against the state rival to 29 games. The loss also keeps the Jayhawks undefeated in Manhattan since 1983, the same year most of the seniors on both teams were born.

WHAT A GIRL WANTS

LOS ANGELES – Christina Aguilera may have finally found her genie in a bottle. The singer's representative announced Aguilera's engagement to her boyfriend of two years, Jordan Bratman.

Aguilera

Bratman, 26, popped the question to Aguilera, 23, Friday night while the two vacationed. No official wedding plans have been announced.

WOMAN FINALLY SPEAKS

HUTCHINSON – After 20 years and a remarkable recovery, Sarah Scantlin finally decided to talk to her parents. Scantlin, now 38, was hit by a drunken driver in Hutchinson, Kan., 20 years ago, when she was 18. The accident left her speechless, causing her to communicate by blinking her eyes.

This week, though, Scantlin's parents discovered her ability to verbally communicate after they received a phone call with Sarah on the other end of the line.

SCHOOL SPENDING GETS BOOST

TOPEKA – Senate Republicans proposed a three-year, $415 million increase to the state's public school spending Tuesday.

The plan's first year would be paid for under the state's cash reserves and new tax revenue plan. Implementing new taxes in the state would pay for its final two years.

CEASE-FIRE ANNOUNCED

SHARM EL-SHEIKH, Egypt – Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas and Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon announced a cease-fire Tuesday, bringing yet another opportunity for peace in the Middle East.

The historic event – hosted by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Jordan's King Abdullah II – is the first upper-level meeting between Israeli and Palestinian leaders in more than four years.

WAL-MART VIOLATES CHILD LABOR LAWS IN 3 STATES

WASHINGTON – There were no smiling faces at Wal-Mart this week when the world's largest retailer agreed to pay $135,540 to settle federal charges that it broke child labor laws.

The 24 violations, which occurred at stores in Arkansas, Connecticut and New Hampshire, involved teenage workers who used hazardous equipment such as a chainsaws and fork lifts.

DEAN TAKES OVER

WASHINGTON – Democrats elected Howard Dean chairman of their national party on Saturday. Dean became popular with Americans after his run for the White House in 2004, namely for his loud mouth and blunt comments.

Dean

With the election, many Democrats said they are eager to renew their campaign to regain political power, though some admit to a bit of anxiety with President Bush in the White House for four more years.

Unemployment rates drop in Geary County

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Geary County's unemployment rate dropped almost a full percent over the last year, but it is still not as low as Riley County's.

The unemployment rate for Riley County is 3 percent, while Geary County's is 5.5 percent. As for Manhattan, the unemployment rate is 2.7 percent.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the unemployment rate differences are historically accurate.

"Riley County has had an employment rate that has averaged around 3 percent for many years.

Geary County historically has had a littler higher unemployment rate, although the current percentage rate is down. It's because they don't have the university to benefit from. We both have Fort Riley," said Butler.

Last year, the national unemployment rate has dropped to 5.2 percent, said professor of economics Jim Ragan.

"It's related to the types of jobs in Kansas and to the distribution of jobs. We have fewer jobs when we are in a recession.

Even if you look at full employment, the unemployment rate in any state is going to depend on the number of jobs," Ragan said.

According to the Kansas Department of Labor Web site, the highest unemployment rate is in Linn County, which has an unemployment of 9.6 percent. The lowest rates are in Edwards, Gove, Jewell and Hamilton counties, which each have 1.1 percent unemployment each.

Michael Babcock, professor of economics, said the industry in the area is stable because of the major industries.

"The main industries around here are K-State and the army. Both of those are fairly stable employment industries. You don't get much up and down," said Babcock.

Babcock said the unemployment rate is related to the local economy.

"Unemployment rates go up if economic activity is either stagnant or going down. The reason for that is the demand for workers is related to the demand of production. If production goes down, you get lay offs, and the laid off are counted as unemployment," he said.

Did you know?

Requirements to file for unemployment

- You must have been employed.
- You must be determined to be unemployed through no fault of your own.
- You must file ongoing claims and respond to questions concerning your continued eligibility.
- You must report any earnings from work and any job offers or refusal of work during the claim period.

New fraternity chapter on campus open to alternate lifestyles

By Andrew Leslie
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During his second year at K-State, Brett Currier decided he wanted to join a fraternity, but as an openly gay student, he was hesitant to join any of the houses on campus.

Currier, junior in biological and agricultural engineering, said that none of the traditional fraternities on campus had an official policy about homosexuality, and he wanted to be part of an organization that was more open to his lifestyle choice.

After speaking with a friend who attended a lecture presented by Greek 101, Currier learned that there are fraternities for gay, bisexual or progressive men.

Currier researched online and found that Delta Lambda Phi was one of the largest fraternities for gay, bisexual and progressive men in the United States.

After contacting its national headquarters, Currier received Delta Lambda Phi's official colonization standard, which outlines how to establish a chapter on campus.

Currier began to talk to people he knew would be interested in the fraternity. One person he talked to, Trent Smith, said he was very interested in joining Delta Lambda Phi.

"I felt that this was a niche that had been missing here at K-State, and it suited my interests more so than other organizations," Smith, graduate student in anthropology and criminology, said.

Currier also talked to Scott Jones, director of Greek Affairs, and the Interfraternity Council, who was supportive of establishing Delta Lambda Phi at K-State.

Brett Rundle, IFC president, said he was extremely impressed with the people undertaking the task of establishing this new organization.

"We have found that their national organization is a strong and growing organization," Rundle said. "We believe that Delta Lambda Phi will be a strong contributor both to the greek and K-State communities."

Delta Lambda Phi hopes to follow in the footsteps of the traditional fraternities at K-State. They are planning to live in the same apartment or house off-campus and hope to purchase a house in 10 to 15 years.

"Being such a new fraternity on campus, we know it might take a while to get a house," Currier said.

The K-State colony of Delta Lambda Phi will be promoting brotherhood and community service and working closely with other organizations.

Delta Lambda Phi has a strict "hands off" policy. This policy forbids members of the organization to be in a physical relationship with anyone interested in or currently pledging to be in Delta Lambda Phi.

"There is absolutely no hanky-panky during the pledge process," Currier said.

The colony has not seen any apprehension from the community, and they don't see it being a problem in the future.

"Some people might not be comfortable with our organization, but that is due to the lack of understanding as to why we are here," Smith said. "We are just trying to be a visible part of the community in which we all live."

OPINION

TO THE POINT
University should work to improve graduation rate

The quality of a university cannot be boiled down to charts and numbers, but K-State officials should be mindful of the hard data that represents the university.

K-State's graduation rate of 56.2 percent ranks 10th in the Big 12 Conference. Although it would not be prudent to make assumptions based on this figure, it is safe to say the image it represents is not a positive one.

As a state institution, K-State should keep its admissions standards at a level that serves Kansans. An exclusive university with near-impossible standards would not be in the best interest of the state.

But officials should work to ensure K-State's programs are effective and among the nation's best.

Changes in the culture of college life, such as an increase in five-year programs, have affected the image of graduation rates. However, such trends are not concentrated at K-State.

Our university should work to maintain a competitive image when compared to other schools' graduation and retention rates.

Getting students to K-State is only one part of the task – getting them to stay is another matter that needs to be addressed.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Columnist runs on unconventional platforms for student body president

JEREMY PARKER

Are you tired of the annual student presidential campaigns making the same boring, crappy promises every year?

I know I am, so I've decided to throw my hat in the ring and give the student body a different alternative to politics as usual. You could say I'm kind of the "Ralph Nader" of this race, only without the mild dementia and frighteningly crooked nose.

If you elect me – and my bearded running mate/'80s robot movie aficionado Dustin Schirer – I can guarantee the 2005-2006 school year will be one you'll remember for many years to come. A vote for Parker/Schirer is a vote for the following:

1. TOUGHER ENROLLMENT STANDARDS

Prior to enrolling each semester, every K-State student must undergo a rigorous vehicular inspection. Anyone who doesn't pass will receive immediate expulsion from the university for one year, so listen closely.

If the Confederate flag is displayed anywhere on your car (or more likely your truck), you're expelled for refusing to recognize that the war is over and the North won.

You'll also receive expulsion if you have a "3 Forever" sticker anywhere on your vehicle. I'm sure Earnhardt was one of the best "athletes" in his "sport," but the man's job was to drive around in circles at 900 billion miles per hour. If it surprises you that "he dun crashed," you don't deserve the privilege of higher learning.

Additionally, if your back window includes a sticker of Calvin peeing on anything (be it Ford, Chevy or terrorists), you get the boot simply for being an astronomical D-bag.

However, if you've gotten crafty and have a sticker of Calvin peeing on "Calvin peeing stickers," you will be awarded the Congressional Medal of Irony and given a full-ride for demonstrating unthinkable degrees of awesomeness.

2. UNICORNS ARE REAL

They are. Shut up.

3. AGE RESTRICTIONS AT THE REC NEED CHANGE

You can't throw a stone in the Rec locker room without hitting one disgusting, naked old guy telling the latest totally hilarious Bin Laden joke to another disgusting, naked old guy.

Why is it that when people turn 50, they lose all sense of modesty?

Is it because they realize they're only a few breaths away from death, so they just don't care? Is it because they resent the younger generation for phasing out the phrase "gee whiz," and this is how they're demonstrating their displeasure?

Either way, it's got to stop. By voting for me, I assure you you'll never have to look at another naked old guy (unless you're into that sort of thing, in which case, party on).

4. TOWER TO THE MOON

Let's face it: our championship livestock judging team and those revolutionary, bendy handicapped signs outside of the Union just haven't thrust us into the national spotlight.

It's time K-State got more recognition, and the fastest way to do that is with a recognizable sculpture.

For far too long, our student-body presidents have been putting our student fees toward irresponsible ventures like "SafeRide" and "books for the library." This has got to stop.

Using student fees to build a moon tower would not only boost the university's recognition, but America's reputation as well.

Remember the Space Race? With a tower to the moon, we'd get a chance to kick Russia in the ding-ding once again, and that's something everybody wants. Take that, comrades!

But if you vote for me, I'll make all your wildest dreams come true.

Weapons may provide safety for vulnerable women

JONAS HOGG

Entering the Union these past few days, one can't help but feel some emotion toward the shirts hanging in front of Forum Hall. Each of these shirts speaks to and reflects on the horrible experiences that some of our family members, friends and fellow students have been forced to live through: the horror of rape and violence.

For some unknown reason, some people find that they are inexplicably bound to prove their machismo by inflicting harm on others. Sometimes, the victim is of a different racial or religious background; sometimes they are homosexuals; sometimes they are women.

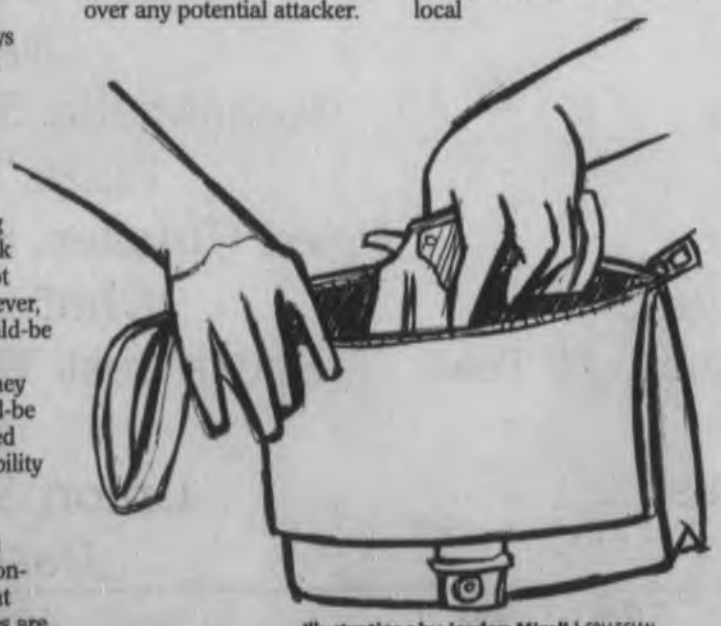
It is a sad fact that thugs have always been around and will likely continue to be around for a long time. The popular method being taught these days to settle these situations is "don't fight back and do what you're told." In other words, go like a lamb to the slaughter.

However, there are groups that are decrying the popular notion of "just give up." One such group is the "Pink Pistols," a pro-gun homosexual organization.

This group organizes local chapters for training in firearms use and safety helps in obtaining concealed carry permits (in the 46 states where they are legal, of which Kansas is not one – thanks for nothing, Gov. Sebelius); and lobbies against firearm legislation. The slogan on their Web site, www.pinkpistols.org, says "Armed Gays Don't Get Bashed," and there are several testimonials to that effect.

It is also important to note that I found no statements indicating that members of the Pink Pistols have actually shot anyone. There are, however, several instances of would-be "macho men" having changes of heart once they realized that their would-be victims are, in fact, armed and confident in their ability to defend themselves.

Concurrently, many women's groups such as Women Against Gun Control, Second Amendment Sisters and Liberty Belles are all very active pro-gun feminist groups.



They believe – contrary to popular feminist thought put forth by the likes of Dianne Feinstein and Hillary Clinton – that a woman's protection should begin and end with her. It is amusing how many "feminists" want women to be independent and self-reliant while at the same time work to strip away the very right that could give every woman a distinct advantage over any potential attacker.

The rationale that women need police protection, escorts and special treatment runs counter to the feminist movement that has long fought to dissuade these notions.

Oddly, these notions remain. In 2001, after a string of rapes in Fort Collins, Colo., several female students applied for and received permission to carry concealed firearms. This prompted concern in the local community as some citizens worried that the women – all of whom had been trained – were going to accidentally shoot up the town by sheer incompetence. Apparently, women getting raped is a more comfortable view than trained women owning guns.

Susan B. Anthony was quoted as saying, "Woman must not depend upon the protection of man, but must be taught to protect herself." Anthony later went on to the Herculean task of overturning thousands of years of prejudice to secure the right to vote for women. Yet, her examples have been largely forgotten in favor of modern feminism, which has accomplished – in a word – zip.

I hope more people will take their safety into their own hands. If in every purse there was the possibility of death for any would-be assailant, those with something to prove would have a lot more to consider before they tried to pick their next victim.

Students celebrate Black History Month

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This month K-State students and faculty are celebrating Black History Month.

Though many organizations take part in Black History Month activities, the Black Student Union plans and implements most of the month's events.

BSU's theme for this year is "Reliving our past is revolutionizing our future."

Marlon Butler, vice president of BSU, said the theme is about not forgetting the past.

"It's understanding the history that got us to this point, and makings sure we use that as motivation to change the future," Butler, junior in kinesiology, said.

In order to help students learn about black history, BSU is bringing in many relevant individuals.

Kendra Spencer, BSU president, said she hopes the speakers and other events will help to educate and unify those at K-State.

"We have many different activities to unify and advocate the Manhattan community about black history," Spencer, junior in sociology, said.

Feb. 1, BSU organized an event called "Represent," where multicultural students came together and had discussions about their cultures.

Journalist and public speaker George Curry will facilitate an Affirmative Action Debate, Feb. 15.

Other black groups, including a group of black aviation pioneers, will visit the K-State campus Feb. 25.

Feb. 27, Kevin Myles, president of the Wichita NAACP, will be the keynote speaker.

March 1, speaker Kemba Smith, a victim of a drug scandal, will speak on female empowerment and officially bring a close to the month of celebration.

Besides BSU, other organizations such as Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and the United Black Voices Gospel Choir are involved in the month's activities as well.

Abdul Yahaya, president of Alpha Phi Alpha, said the fraternity will be supporting and working in conjunction with BSU.

They are also raising money for the Martin Luther King Jr. Monument to be built in Washington, D.C., by collecting money from students.

When constructed, it will be the first monument ever built there for an African-American leader.

Yahaya said that given its great importance, the university could do a better job of supporting black history.

"Right now, it's left upon the minority groups to continue the tradition," Yahaya said. "The university doesn't promote many programs themselves."

Spencer also thinks that more can be done.

"Some groups come together, but at the same time, everyone always looks to the BSU," Spencer said. "I think that K-State has much to improve on."

Those working hard on Black History Month hope that in the future, more students and faculty will get involved to continue the tradition of celebrating the month.

Butler emphasized that just because February is the official month of celebration does not mean that the acknowledgment should end after it's over.

"Every day is black history," Butler said. "It's doing what you can and remembering those who came before you, and understanding that you're part of the history."

State libraries receive grant money

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Caleb Loop, a fifth grader at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School, plays computer games in the Technology Center in the Manhattan Public Library. The computers in the center were funded by grant money.

Kansas public libraries are receiving $405,520 to be used for training programs.

The money comes from a grant of more than $11 million donated to 37 states from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, which focuses on improving learning and health around the world.

Grant funds were reviewed last February and are for use in the three-year period until 2007.

Previously, the money has been used to update technology in public libraries, but the money will now be used to create training days for Kansas libraries.

There will be 14 more days of training this year, said Jeff Hixon, director of Library Information Technology Systems in Kansas.

Hixon said he expects between 300 to 400 librarians to attend at least one training session, with some attending more.

Most training has been done by the Bibliographical Center for Research out of Aurora, Colo., of which Kansas and 10 other states are members, Hixon said.

"The BCR works with regional libraries across the state to decide which courses (to offer) and when," Hixon said.

Grant funds will be used to bring all librarians up to speed so they will be able to help patrons, Kay Russell, assistant director and coordinator of the North Central Kansas Libraries, said.

"Our plans for training include individualized training of our librarians and workshops that will be hands-on, including learning basic programs such as Microsoft Word and Excel," Russell said.

Russell also said they would be teaching librarians how to get the most out of the existing library databases.

Computers, software and Internet access were provided in 2002 by donations to Kansas libraries of about $2.3 million. Grant funds paid for 630 computers.

In 2003, the Manhattan Public Library received more than $21,000 from the foundation.

"We have a lot of public use on our computers, up 5 percent from 2003-04," said Linda Knupp, assistant director of the Manhattan Public Library. "People use them for a variety of things, using the full productivity package."

The productivity package includes software like "Magic School Bus" and "Encarta."

Knupp said people use the library's computers for all kinds of things, from creating advertising brochures for businesses and working on spreadsheets and term papers to looking for jobs and surfing the Internet.

State public libraries often face tight budgets and need funding to allow them to continue to offer free access to the existing technology that is rapidly changing, Knupp said.

Training is a good way to spend the funds this year because of changing technology, she said.

"The current donation is meant to keep people trained because it changes so rapidly and to keep people able to provide a high degree of assistance to people using the technology," Knupp said.

Martin needs to return to earlier form

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

JOSH WITT

Where have you gone, Cartier Martin?

That was the question that stuck in my mind after watching the Wildcats lose another one on Saturday.

Oh, there were several questions after seeing K-State pull its usual "rip-your-heart-out" routine in the Wildcats' 75-72 overtime loss to Texas in Austin.

Why can't K-State ever play well in the first half? Why does it take Jeremiah Massey forever to get going? Would anybody have beaten Fred Peete in a game of Horse on Saturday?

But Martin is the guy who left me most intrigued.

The sophomore forward's shooting performance was as bad as it gets against the Longhorns. Martin was 1-of-12 from the field and 0-of-6 on 3-pointers and scored just five points on the day.

While many reasons can be given as to how the Wildcats let another one slip away, Martin could be the biggest reason of them all.

Remember early in the Big 12 Conference season? Martin was becoming a star.

He dropped 23 points on Nebraska, 14 on Texas Tech and 18 at home against Missouri. Then, after an off-game at Texas A&M, Martin went for 17 points in a win against Iowa State.

And he wasn't just jacking up shots to get those points – he was shooting with remarkable efficiency. Martin was 8-of-12 against Nebraska, 7-of-14 in that first Missouri game, and 6-of-10 against Iowa State.

Damn, that's good.

In the meantime, Martin was also establishing himself as the Wildcats most consistent outside threat. He hit four 3-pointers against the Cornhuskers, Red Raiders and Cyclones.

But an unfortunate thing has happened during the four-game losing streak – Martin's impact on this team has faded away.

Martin just looks different now.

I remember Martin laughing with teammates, looking like he was having fun while also bring intensity earlier in the season. Martin looked like the most confident guy on the floor, and that's saying something when you share the floor with Massey.

He just looks dead right now – in person and on TV.

It is natural to go through a slump or a hit to your confidence over the course of the season. But this team is in a world of hurt, and it needs help.

Peete's career-high 28 points against the Longhorns showed he's up for the challenge, Massey is always big in crunch-time and sophomore guard Lance Harris has displayed a willingness to take key shots.

This team needs one more guy to get over that hump it is so close to getting over.

This team needs Cartier Martin.

Oklahoma 3-pointers contribute to loss

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

NORMAN, Okla. – K-State seems to bring out the best in Oklahoma.

For the second time in as many games between the two schools, the Sooners shot lights-out from behind the three-point arc, as they made 9-of-16 three-point shots to down the No. 16 Wildcats 77-61.

During last year's Big 12 Tournament, then No. 8-ranked K-State fell to the unranked Sooners 78-66 in the semifinals. In that game, Oklahoma made 10 3-pointers.

"The thing that was different in this game is we were the ones that came out hot and then let it slip away," senior forward Kendra Wecker said. "I don't think we brought that focus or that aggressive mentality on defense that we were showing on offense."

Head coach Deb Patterson said it was a total team effort by Oklahoma (13-9, 5-6), along with K-State's poor play on defense, that led to the Sooner win.

"They played very hard and they played as a team," Patterson said. "I felt like, on the offensive end of the floor, they played great, and on the defensive end of the floor, we played terrible– awful.

Senior guard Dionnah Jackson scored 18 points to lead the Sooners past K-State (17-5, 8-3).

Oklahoma guards Chelsi Welch, Erin Higgins and Laura Andrews combined to hit all nine 3-pointers for the Sooners, while K-State made just five.

"Those threes were daggers," senior guard Megan Mahoney said. "We got passive on the defensive end, and they found their open shooters."

Wecker led the Wildcats with a game-high 29 points and nine rebounds.

No other Wildcat scored in double figures, as sophomore guard Claire Coggins was the next closest Wildcat with nine points.

"I thought the contrast in the two teams today was that Oklahoma's team stepped on the floor and everyone contributed positively on both ends of the floor," Patterson said. "Our best minutes from anyone on the floor, with the exception of Kendra Wecker, came in the first four minutes of the basketball game. After that, it was pick or choose a player."

The Wildcats started out hot, as they opened the game by going on a 12-3 run. However, the Sooners battled back with a 15-4 run of their own to take the lead at 18-16, and they never trailed after that.

"We came out really hot," Wecker said. "We were making every first shot that we took, and then they just kept plugging away and just kept building off their momentum."

The Wildcats now sit in a tie with Iowa State for second place.

K-State coach Deb Patterson hangs her head in disbelief during the second half as the Wildcats trailed. K-State went on to lose the game 77-61 and to fall to 17-5 overall and 8-3 in Big 12 play. The Wildcats will look to bounce back when they play Texas on Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Tennis | Wildcats lose close match to No. 53 Razorbacks

The K-State women's tennis team lost its third-straight match, as it fell against Arkansas on Saturday.

Rosenberg

The Wildcats (1-3) lost 4-3 to the 53rd-ranked Razorbacks in Fayetteville, marking the second time K-State has lost 4-3 to a ranked opponent this spring.

The tandem of senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia, ranked 60th in the nation, defeated Maryori Franco and Karina Ledaja, 9-8 in doubles. The undefeated duo of junior Jessica Simosa and senior Judith Diaz continued their streak, beating Vlatka Jovanovic and Melissa Cornett, 8-6.

Rosenberg playing No. 1 singles, defeated Franco, 6-0, 6-4, while Simosa beat Iliana Pacheco, 6-2, 6-3. In the other four singles matches, K-State could not find success.

The Wildcats have a two-week break before facing Utah Feb. 25 at Ahearn Field House. On Feb. 26, K-State will be host to Southwest Missouri State at noon.

Baseball | Wildcats fall after taking early lead

K-State dropped its second game of the season on Sunday, losing 7-3 to Portland in Surprise, Ariz.

The Wildcats took a 1-0 lead in the first inning after senior Terry Blunt scored, but Portland took over from there.

K-State was off Friday and Saturday due to rain-outs and the location of Sunday's game was moved due to the weather.

The Wildcats (0-2) will next take the field on Friday for an 11:30 a.m. game against Arkansas State in Arlington, Texas.

NBA | Heat win battle of top conference teams

Dwyane Wade scored 13 of his 28 points in the fourth quarter, including a jumper with 25.1 seconds left, and Miami beat San Antonio 96-92 on Sunday for its first win over the Spurs in more than three years.

Wade

Wade, who didn't play in a loss at San Antonio earlier this season, had connected on just 37 percent of his shots in the Heat's last four games, and was 7-for-19 entering the final quarter against San Antonio.

But he hit five of his final seven shots, and added six assists and five rebounds to help Miami extend its winning streak to six games.

Shaquille O'Neal added 27 points and seven rebounds for Miami. Eddie Jones chipped in with 12 points even though he played much of the game with a broken left index finger.

CBB | Tarheels get big win on the road against UCONN

Rashad McCants and Raymond Felton had big second halves Sunday to help No. 2 North Carolina bounce back from a tough loss with a 77-70 win over No. 19 Connecticut.

McCants had 11 of his 15 points in the second half for North Carolina, while Felton had 14 of his 16 points and seven of his 10 assists in the final 20 minutes.

The performances by the junior stars enabled the Tar Heels (20-3) to leave the court at the Hartford Civic Center with smiles on their faces instead of the stunned looks they wore following the last-play breakdown in a 71-70 loss at No. 7 Duke on Wednesday night.

Hayden leaves Wildcats

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The often tumultuous relationship between junior forward Marques Hayden and Coach Jim Wooldridge has come to an end for the time being.

Hayden

After reports late last week stating Hayden had left the team, it was made official prior to Saturday's 75-72 overtime loss to Texas that Hayden would not be a Wildcat for the remainder of the 2004-05 season.

"We feel at this time it is in the best interest of Marques and the program that he not return to the team this year," Wooldridge said in a release early Saturday.

Hayden and Wooldridge have butted heads several times in Hayden's years as a Wildcat, including this season. Hayden was suspended for one game earlier in the year for comments questioning his role on the team.

The former starting forward had also dealt with severe migraine headaches that had prevented him from playing since a Jan. 26 win against Iowa State, according to Wooldridge.

Wooldridge said Hayden's future with the program will be determined at a later time.

Hayden averaged 6.8 points and 5.3 rebounds in 15 games this season.

Wildcats lose in overtime

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

AUSTIN, Texas – There would be no upset win over Texas this year for K-State.

Last year in Bramlage Coliseum, the Wildcats stunned then 10th-ranked Texas, 58-48.

The Wildcats could not push past No. 23 Texas Saturday, despite the efforts of K-State sophomore guard Fred Peete, as K-State fell in overtime to the Longhorns 75-72 at the Frank Erwin Center.

Peete scored a career-high 28 points on 9-of-17 shooting, including seven 3-pointers, also a career high. It was the second-straight game Peete hit at least six threes.

"I think I just found my groove," Peete said.

Peete kept K-State (13-8, 3-7) close in a second half in which the Wildcats were down by as much as eight points. He scored 20 points in the second half, including five threes, and grabbed 4 rebounds to help K-State stay close to the Longhorns.

"I don't think there is any doubt that he kept us going offensively, and he made some plays defensively, and his line is just outstanding," coach Jim Wooldridge said of Peete's overall performance.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey scored 14 points and sophomore guard Lance Harris came off the bench to chip in 13 for the Wildcats.

Massey struggled for most of the game, as he did not make a field goal until the 10:47 mark of the second half.

Peete said despite being kept in check for most of the game, Massey found a way to help the team in other ways.

"As the ballgame went on, he found his groove and got the free-throw line more often," Peete said. "We were getting him the ball, we were working off Jeremiah, and that enabled me to find myself open."

K-State never led in regulation, and even went six minutes in the first half without scoring. During that time, Texas went on a 9-0 run to lead 33-19, which was the largest deficit of the game for the Wildcats.

With 26 seconds left to play and with the Longhorns (16-7, 5-5) leading 57-55, Texas freshman guard Daniel Gibson missed two free-throw attempts, and it was Massey who sent the game into overtime with two made free throws at the other end.

In overtime, Massey scored on a short jumper to give K-State its first lead of the game at 59-57. He then knocked down a 3-pointer after a three by Gibson to put the Wildcats back up by two, but that would be the last time K-State would lead, as Gibson took over from there, scoring 11 of the Longhorns' final 15 points.

"He made all the plays," Wooldridge said of Gibson's overtime performance. "You know, he is going to be a great player, and he's one of those that looks like a special player to me."

Gibson finished with a career-high in points (23) and 3-pointers made (5) to lead Texas to the victory.

No. 23 Texas 75	K-State 72 (OT)

Leading rebounder	J. Massey F. Peete-5 (T)

In overtime, Peete struggled to find an open shot, as he only scored two points in the extra period, both coming on free throws.

"We tried to get it to him," Wooldridge said. "I think the defense probably tightened up, and we just tried to find different ways to get it to him, and I wish we had."

Harris said the loss to Texas was a blow to the team.

This one is hard to swallow, but we've got to pick our heads back up when we get out there on Tuesday at Iowa State and get a 'W'," Harris said.

Several legends explain the origins of Valentine's Day

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Flowers, hearts, candles, teddy bears and chocolate.

Yes, today is Valentine's Day, a day many students use to show their love for boyfriends, girlfriends, spouses, friends and family.

But who was St. Valentine, for whom this holiday was named? According to the History Channel Web site, the story behind Valentine's Day and its patron saint is "shrouded in mystery." There are many explanations as to the origin of this holiday.

One legend, according to www.russianbrideguide.com, claims that Valentine was a priest under Emperor Claudius II in third-century Rome. The emperor prohibited marriage, claiming bachelors were better soldiers than married men. Valentine then began performing marriages in secret for young lovers, but when his acts were discovered, the emperor demanded Valentine's execution.

Another legend, according to www.infoplease.com, says Valentine, jailed by Claudius II, fell in love with the jailer's daughter. Before his execution, he sent her a note signed "From your Valentine."

The traditional aspects of modern-day Valentine's Day include flowers, chocolates and dinners for two.

Men often send flowers to their significant others on Valentine's Day.

"I took a lot of orders for a dozen roses," Annette Sweet, Dillons employee, said. "It's the easiest thing guys think of."

This year Manhattan Floral is marketing a new Valentine's Day gift; giant heart-shaped singing helium balloons, along with more common items.

"We will have a limited number of special vases with short stem roses in a variety of colors this year," Jerome Hess, co-owner of Manhattan Floral, said. "They (the balloons) are something you might not find anywhere else."

Russell Stover chocolates, conversation hearts and Hershey's chocolates are also popular gift choices. Rod's Hallmark Shop, in the Westloop Shopping Center, has a large assortment of candies in red and pink packaging.

"We have lots of cards and candy and sweetheart squish pillows and stuffed animals," Karen Brown, assistant manager of Rod's, said.

Restaurants like the Little Apple Brewery will be bustling tonight.

"I expect we'll be pretty busy," Jason Beninga, Little Apple Brewery manager, said. "Everyone wants to take their loved one out for a good dinner."

Little Apple Brewery splits up bigger tables into tables of two to cater to its Valentine's Day clientele. Beninga said he estimates waits will range from 45 minutes to one hour because Little Apple Brewery only takes reservations for parties of seven or more today.

Finally, for those a little more daring, lingerie is another popular Valentine's Day tradition. Victoria's Secret has its annual Valentine's Day assortment of panties, bras and hipsters in bright colors and prints. It also has a large selection of special lingerie.

"It's a big time for this kind of stuff," a Victoria's Secret employee said. "Lots of men come in to find items for their girlfriends and wives."

Comedian comes to K-State to promote new book

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Harvard-educated, self-proclaimed "kamikaze gadfly," Mo Rocca will appear in the Union Ballroom Feb. 18 in wake of his recent book release.

Rocca
COMEDIAN

Rocca was scheduled to appear last semester to promote his book, which was released in September and to comment on the elections. However, he was unable to appear due to personal conflicts.

Rocca has appeared on CNN and FOX News, which is one of the reasons Union Program Council (UPC) chose to ask Rocca to come, Tyler Traxson, entertainment co-chair for UPC, said.

Rocca is currently the host of Bravo's "Things I Hate About You," is a writer for NBC's "Today" and "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno."

Rocca is a frequent guest on National Public Radio's "Wait, Wait, Don't Tell Me" quiz show.

His diverse portfolio includes writing for the PBS children's show "Wishbone" and editing the adult magazine "Perfect Ten."

Rocca makes frequent appearances on VH1's "Best Week Ever" and the series "I Love the 70s," "I Love the 80s" and "I Love the 90s."

"His comedy runs so wide," Traxson, junior in mass communications, said. "It goes from the political aspects to entertainment and Hollywood."

Rocca's face-the-factoid attitude shouldn't faze anyone who has seen Comedy Central's "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart," where he was a senior news correspondent.

During his stint on "The Daily Show," his commentary on the 2000 presidential race, titled "Indecision 2000," garnered a Peabody Award for in-depth coverage of one of the most highly-contested elections in U.S. history.

"This year, several men want to lead the nation, but only one can win the big prize: free burial," Rocca said.

His book, "All the Presidents' Pets: The Story of One Reporter Who Refused to Roll Over," entertains coffee slurpers and fashionable loiterers alike in bookstores across the country.

"The book's peculiarly post-modern blending of fact and fantasy make it hard to tell jokes from mere ironic truths," Publishers Weekly said.

Laughter is often the appropriate, perhaps healthy, response to recent political turmoil, as Rocca demonstrates by his example on serious news shows.

Rocca's book is reminiscent of Mark Hertsgaard's "On Bended Knee: the Press and the Reagan Presidency," published over a decade ago to expose the administration's hand in taming the press' well-endowed pen.

The cover features Rocca in his slimmed-down Buddy Holly glasses with a microphone to America, a statement of his own views on the all-inclusive role of "fake reporters" in the 21st century.

He will bring his seeming ballroom sensation and off-brand multi-media act to the Union Ballroom Feb. 18. Doors will open at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets are on sale at McCain Box Office for $10.75 for students and $12.75 for the general audience.

Rocca's new book will be available at the Union Bookstore for signing after the show for around $15.00.

"He is still able to bring the edge and variety that 'The Daily Show' does," Traxson said.

If you go

Mo Rocca

When: 7:30 p.m. Friday
Where: Union Ballroom

Bridal show features fountains, accessories for engaged couples

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan's largest bridal show featured chocolate fountains, catering and kitchenware to name a few.

The Little Apple Area Bridal Show was at the Holiday Inn Sunday, complete with close to 50 vendors, a fashion show and more than $2,000 in prizes.

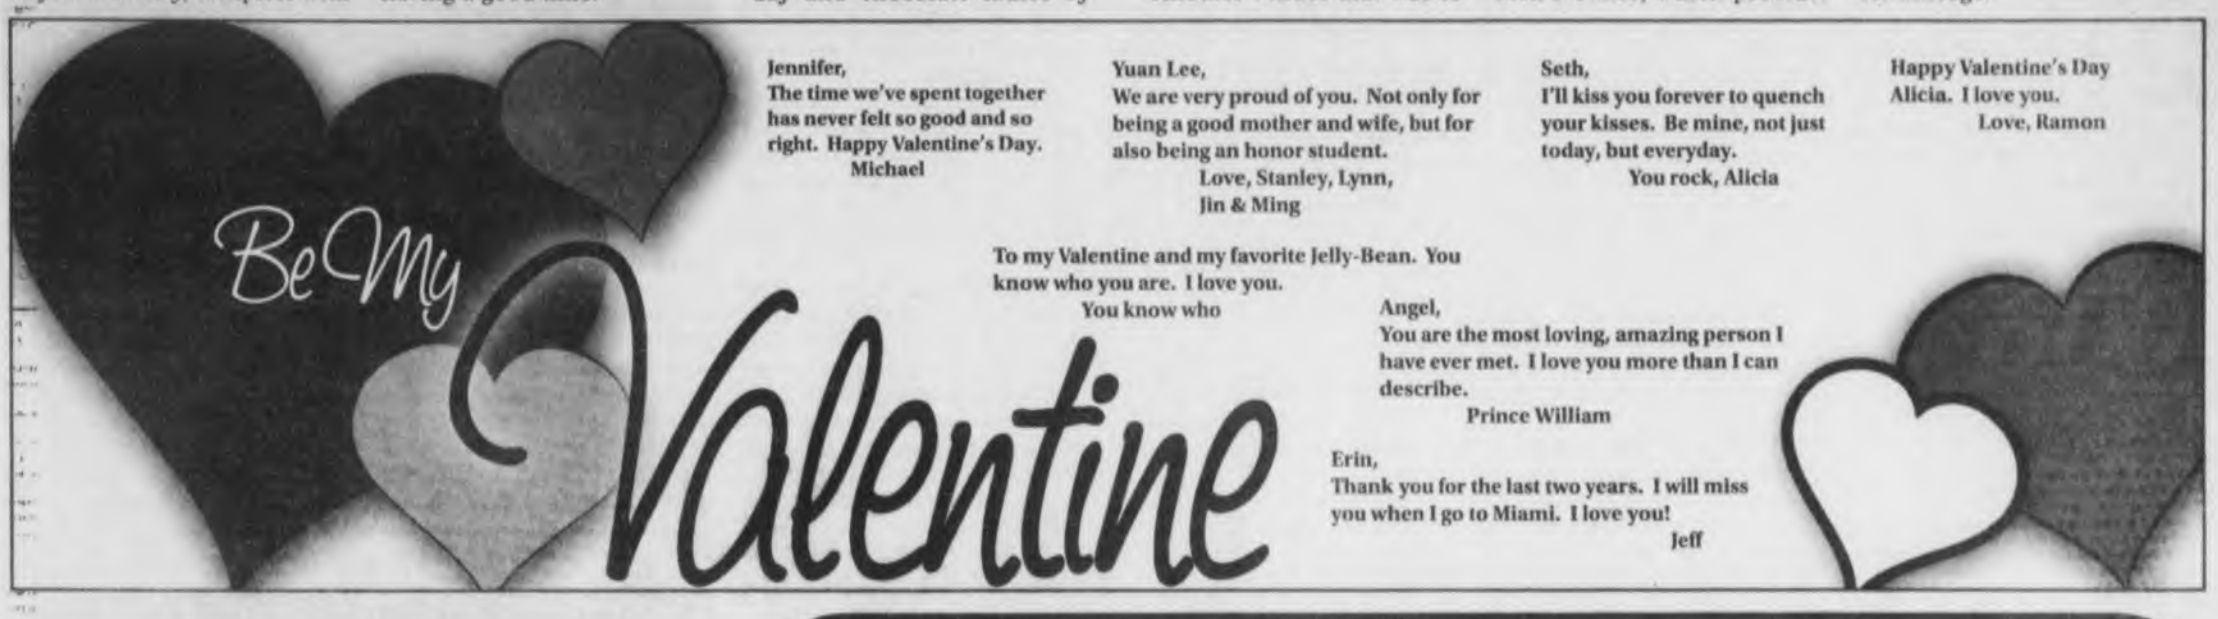
The event was sponsored by Complete Music Disc Jockey service and Sunny 102.5 FM. Mark Kuecker, franchise owner of Complete Music, said he hoped people were having a good time.

"There are a lot of vendors here, and I like to see everyone having a look around," he said.

One of the main booths was Chocolate Elegance, which is a chocolate fountain rental company.

"We are school teachers by day and chocolate ladies by night," owner Peggy Crubel said. "It will have been up and running for two years in March, and it has been a blast."

Crubel said all Ghirardelli chocolate is included, but the renter must supply the dipping foods.



Another vendor that was of interest to many guests was Passion Parties.

"We sell sensual products for couples such as lotions, aromatherapy, lubricants and adult toys," said Amy Craig, an independent sales consultant.

An arrangement of cakes were also on display from Vern's Cakes, which provides cakes and cake supplies and has cake decorating classes.

Kristen Floberg, Junction City resident, said she enjoyed the bridal show.

"It was so much better because it was so close," she said. "Getting married is expensive enough without having to pay for mileage."

Thomas More Catholic Church youth group, which also sent about eight volunteers to work the event.

"A little bit of cold is nothing for what we're doing," Johnson said. "This (cold) won't last long, but giving money, that's good."

The event raised around $6,500 just from the Plunge, said Debbi DeVenuto, Northeast Area Director of Special Olympics Kansas. She expects the total to be close to $10,000, however, once corporate sponsorships, online pledges and proceeds from the auction are recorded.

"We were shooting between five and 10 (thousand)," DeVenuto said.

Some of the money raised stays in Manhattan, which has about 75 active athletes, and some goes to the state level of Special Olympics, she said.

"This directly affects the people of Manhattan," DeVenuto said.

Department of Planning and Analysis, helps to distribute this information so it is understandable and available to the public and the university.

"This information is used in providing data to people on and off campus," Cox said.

The increasing number of students returning after their second and third years of undergraduate work has increased over the past few years because of the new admissions policy the university has in place, Cox said.

Jeri Stroade, statistical and information officer for the Department of Planning and Analysis, said the numbers could be confusing, even to a trained eye.

"This is an important tool," Stroade said. "But an important thing to know is if there are good programs to keep students."

While many may want to jump to conclusions over statistics and numbers, Cox said analyzing the data must be done with a critical and careful eye.

"We have to be real careful that we don't make assumptions," Cox said. "More analysis has to be done."

"You're all coming home heroes after answering the country's call," Bunting said.

Bunting included in his speech an excerpt from a heartfelt thanks from Sen. Pat Roberts, who wrote, "Generations of Americans will go to bed more safely because of you."

Hundreds of family members in Kansas will also sleep better knowing their loved ones are home and safe.

Jennifer Barron, K-State graduate, lives on the Fort Riley base with her husband, Oscar, and their son. Oscar Barron was stationed in Iraq for about a year and returned home last April.

Jennifer said Oscar's time spent in the 70th Engineer Unit in Iraq was very difficult. She said her emotions upon his arrival home were indescribable.

"There was just so much excitement, and we were so ready for him to be home," Jennifer said. "I'm so proud of him and everyone."

Jennifer's sister, Heather Soper, a K-State graduate currently living in Salina, was in attendance Saturday in hopes of catching a glimpse of her cousin, Brian Martin, who returned with the unit.

Jennifer Barron and Heather Soper hug their cousin Brian Martin, of the 2nd Battalion of the 130th Field Artillery of the Kansas Army National Guard, outside Bramlage Coliseum Saturday afternoon.

Martin, who was a medic at Camp Victory, believed his time in Iraq was positive, Soper said.

"He had a really good experience and was proud of what he did," Soper said.

Although the transition might be difficult for some, it was evident in Bramlage that the soldiers were happy to be home.

"When we see this kind of turnout, we know why we live in Kansas," Bunting said. "On behalf of the service, I thank you and welcome you home."
